The Wire Cure for Echoes.

We several months ago published an item relating that a troublesome echo in a church at Bloomington, Illinois, had been cured by stretching wires across the body of the church. We have received several applications for more full information on the subject. But, as the mere statement of the fact was all that we had at the time, we were unable to satisfy our inquiring friends as fully as we could wish. This method of breaking echoes has since been tried with success in several other buildings, and the reports from them are given with such fullness of detail that the description of the methods employed will be sufficiently clear to enable any congregations who are troubled with disagreeable resonations in their houses of worship to apply the wire cure satisfactorily. A letter in Nature gives an account of the application of the wires to the church of St. Fin Barre, Cork, Ireland. The nave of this church is some sixty or seventy feet high, and is quite narrow. The echo in it was such that the minister, preaching from the intersection of the transepts, nave and chancel, found the organist in the west end his best hearer, while the congregation below were greatly troubled by the indistinctness of the sound. The people had only heard that wires had been found good to break the echoes, but knew nothing more about the matter. The rest of the story is thus told in Nature:

"At first we tried the wires strained at a considerable height, the level of the triforium, but they produced comparatively little effect; we then strained a double course of wire, at about a height of twelve or fifteen feet, round the large piers of the central tower, so as to encompass the choir, and other wires completely across the nave and side aisles, and the effect was certainly very good. There was a greater distinctness of sound throughout the building. Our organist, who is a very accomplished musician, did not know that the wires were put up, and remarked to me one day after service that he did not know what it was, but that everything seemed to him in better tune.

"This encouraged us to make further experiments. We then strained three wires completely across from the south wall of the south transept to the north wall of the north transept, so as to pass over the heads of the choir, but the effect was quite too great—it seemed to kill the sound; every sound seemed to stop at once; all resonance was gone. These wires we had at once to take down, and I should add that, as regards the organist, the wires over the head of the choir seemed to produce a much greater effect than those directly between the choir and his seat; it appeared to him as if he had a bad cold and could not hear distinctly.

"These wires appeared to prevent the voices rising and filling the cathedral. It seems very difficult to determine where to place the wires so as to produce a really good effect; but that they have a very great effect, far beyond what one would have supposed a priori, is admitted by all who have taken an interest in the matter here. Several members of the congregation have remarked that they heard better in the cathedral now, without knowing the cause. We have used very thin wire; a stranger would not perceive it unless his attention were called to it. We hope to make some further experiments, especially with regard to the transepts of the cathedral."

A similar improvement in effect was produced in a similar manner at St. Andrew's church, Dublin.

Before these experiments in Ireland were reported, the wire cure was adopted with perfect success for a very troublesome echo in St. Paul's church, Brunswick, Maine. This church consists of nave, transept and chancel, and the wires are stretched across the arches of the open roof at two inches' distance from each other, at the intersection of the transept and nave, coming down to the corbels, and also across a portion of each of several arches in the nave, beginning at the top. The Rev. Mr. Taylor suggests that the wires need not be nearer together than one foot. The wire is so small as not to be seen from the floor of the church, and consequently does not detract from its appearance.

The story of these wire cures is now travelling over the world as a new invention, and is accredited as a European one. It should be recollected that the first public mention of it was made about two years ago, and in relation to the church in Bloomington, Illinois, to which we have already referred. It should be observed also that the account of the experiment in Cork begins by the acknowledgment that the thought of using the wires in the cathedral there was suggested by something which had been seen in the newspapers. This was doubtless the Bloomington item.—Methodist.

SABBATHS—coming to quiet, for a little while, all the week-day toil, noise and strife of life—are like islands, green, fruitful and flower-laden, smiling at once from the midst of wild ocean and storm-tossed waves—oases in the sand deserts, with cooling shades and pure water springs for the tired traveler.

MR. DISRAELI prophesies the advent of a terrible struggle between the spiritual and temporal powers in Europe, and expresses a fear that anarchy will result from the conflict.

A Pilgrimage to Epworth.

Epworth is located about one hundred miles northeast from Birmingham, on the border of Lincolnshire. Most of Lincoln county is redeemed from the sea, and presents the same appearance as the prairies of Illinois, being a dead level for many miles, through which canals run in all directions. Epworth is four miles from the railroads, which run on either side of it, and is only reached by extra effort. It is still a small, quiet town, with little business and nothing of general interest, except the ancient church and a few dissenting chapels. The church stands on a slight elevation at the northern extremity of the town, and is approached by a long ascending avenue, lined on either side by stately trees. Around it and beyond it there are no houses seen; and, like most of these old churches, it stands apart from the common walks of business life, as a place "whither the tribes go up," and leave the world behind. It is a low, dingy church, of stone within as well as without. The walls, the heavy arches which support the roof, and the furniture, except the modern pews, are the same as when Samuel Wesley preached there. Near the door stands the heavy stone font, where for many generations the villagers have been christened, and at which the Wesley children were consecrated to God by their pious parents. These old fonts stand at the entrances of the edifices, to signify that, as the worshipers enter the sanctuary by the door, so they enter the spiritual church by baptism. The churches are always built with the altar at the east, so that one immediately ascertains the points of the compass, if a church is in view. These old customs are still continued in the new churches. In this house the father of the Wesleys preached between thirty and forty years, and here the sons were agonized to aid him in his labors in their earlier ministry. Around the church is about one acre of land, which has received the dust of the villagers for many centuries.

Close beside the south wall of the church is a shrine toward which the feet of all Methodist visitors are sure to turn. It is the grave of Samuel Wesley, upon which his apostolic son stood and preached to a crowd of people when an irreligious rector closed against him the doors of the church in which he had worshiped in youth and preached in early manhood. This grave was blocked up at the sides, about eighteen inches above the ground, and covered with a substantial slab, bearing the inscription, which is still clear. The brick walls becoming decayed, a pious lady of the town had them removed, and substantial stone sidings placed in their stead. The original slab is still above the grave, and all visitors step upon the iron rail, and ascend to the stone where Wesley stood.

A semi-superstition marks the spot where each foot of the preacher rested during his discourse. Two iron deposits in the slab have oxidized, and left indentations not unlike the print of a large dog's foot. These are often declared to be the very places where the feet rested, and are so located, the one in advance of the other, as to make it probable that he would stand upon them. Many a marvelous Catholic miracle has much less foundation than this.—Zion's Herald.

THE HOOSAC TUNNEL.—On Thanksgiving day the thin partition of rock which alone remained between the two sections of the Hoosac Tunnel was broken down by a prodigious blast of nitro-glycerine, and light at last streamed through the mountain. Thus is virtually accomplished one of the most stupendous engineering feats of modern times.

The Hoosac mountain is a part of the Great mountain range, lying across the western end of Massachusetts. The Boston and Albany railroad climbs it between Westfield and Pittsfield by a tortuous course and a series of easy gradients. The tunnel lies further to the north and forms a link in the chain of communication between Boston and the West by way of the Fitchburg, Vermont and Massachusetts, and Troy and Greenfield railroads. The mountain, at the point selected for tunneling, is about two thousand five hundred feet high, having two ridges with a depressed plateau between them. The distance through from heading to heading, and therefore the length of the tunnel, is four and three-quarter miles.

The tunnel was projected many years before ground was fairly broken, which we understand to have been in January, 1852, Rev. Dr. Crawford, of Deerfield, striking the first spade into the mountain on its eastern side. From the onset the history of the undertaking has been one of struggle, imminent failure, pluck, skill and perseverance. Space fails us to tell of the peculiar and wearisome obstacles encountered, the ingenious and costly mechanism used, the wonderful nicety of the calculation by which the eastern and western headings met under the headings within a fraction of an inch, the numerous casualties and narrow escapes, the various interesting experiments in methods resorted to, and all the other entertaining points in such a piece of work. As it stands, or rather as it will stand when trains are running through it, on double tracks, it is a monument to the triumph of mind over matter, a result to the skill and patience of engineers, workmen and contractors, and an honor to the State of Massachusetts.—Congregationalist.

The Roman Catholic Church and the Bible.

In discontinuing the general reading of the Bible in schools and elsewhere, Roman Catholics have ample precedent in the history of their church. A correspondent of the Manchester Examiner and Times cites the following incidents:

Fact 1. Pope Gregory the Seventh wrote a letter to Wratislaw (1080) condemning the general freedom allowed to read the Bible in the vulgar tongue.

Fact 2. Pope Innocent the Third declared (1199) the Scriptures too profound for the common people, and quoted the Sinaitic restriction: "If so be that a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned or thrust through with a dart."

Fact 3. The Council of Toulouse (1229) declared (Article 14) that the laity must not possess the books of the Old and New Testament; only the Psalter and the Breviary, and these not in the vulgar tongue.

Fact 4. The Council of Tarracona (1233) declared (Article 2) that "no one, either priest or layman, is to possess a Roman translation of the Bible; all such translations to be given up to the bishops within eight days, and to be straightway burnt. Whoso does not, be he priest or layman, is to be esteemed a heretic."

Fact 5. The Synod of Oxford (1408) declared (Article 7) that "the Bible is not to appear in English, and the Wicliffe version not to be used."

Fact 6. Ximenes, Archbishop of Toledo (circ. 1500,) declares: "It is utterly wrong to circulate the Scriptures in the vulgar tongue. The mind of the common people is such that if a thing is simple and plain they despise it; what is hidden they venerate. Christ himself spoke in parables that the people might not understand. The Old and New Testament should be retained in the three languages in which the superscription on the cross was written."

Fact 7. When Protestants were burnt in Queen Mary's reign, Bibles were thrown into the flames on the ground that "they were the books that made the heretics."

Fact 8. The Council of Trent (1563) withholds the forgiveness of sins from any man who shall dare even to have a Bible in the vulgar tongue without license from his ecclesiastical superiors.

Fact 9. Cardinal Hosius (1570) said: "To give the Bible to the laity is to cast pearls before swine. Bible translations have done harm; I would not have any. The Bible is the possession of the Roman Church; beyond it, it is worth no more than Æsop's Fables."

Fact 10. The Jerusalem Synod (1672,) attended by sixty-seven bishops and clergy, decided that the Bible is not to be read by all Christians.

Fact 11. The famous bull of Pope Clement the Eleventh (1799,) Unigenitus, pronounces it to be a false, scandalous, pernicious, blasphemous error to hold that all may read Holy Scriptures.—Article 80-83.

Fact 12. That the French Bible, translated by the pastor Quesnel (a Roman priest,) was burnt, by the authority of his church, in 1669.

Fact 13. Pope Benedict the Fourteenth (1740) did his best to hinder the translation of the Bible into Persian.

Fact 14. Pope Leo the Twelfth issued an encyclical against Bible societies in 1824.

Fact 15. The Roman Catholic priesthood did their utmost to put a stop to the circulation of the Scriptures in Ireland in 1820 and following years.

Fact 16. Pope Pius the Seventh issued a bull forbidding the circulation of the Scriptures.

Fact 17. Pope Gregory the Sixteenth issued an encyclical against Bible societies, 1832 and 1844.

Fact 18. Pope Pius the Ninth (the present Pope,) in his encyclical of November, 1864, anathematized "those very crafty and most deceitful (vafferrimae) societies, called Bible societies, which thrust the Bible into the hands of inexperienced youth."

PROF. SEDGWICK'S SHILLING.—It is said that Prof. Sedgwick was geologizing in a quarry near a high road in England, dressed in a rough suit for the purpose, and striking vigorous blows with his hammer upon the rock, when a traveling carriage, coming up, stopped at the place, and a gentleman within beckoned to the professor to come up to the door, as he wanted to know the way to the residence of a nobleman in that locality. Prof. Sedgwick having answered this and various other questions put to him very readily, the gentleman, pleased with what he deemed the intelligence and civility of the quarryman, offered him a shilling, which was received with thanks. The carriage drove on, taking its occupant to the nobleman's house, where he was an invited guest. Soon after Prof. Sedgwick followed him, for he was staying there at that time himself. At dinner they happened to be seated near each other, and soon fell into conversation. After awhile the gentleman, looking earnestly at Prof. Sedgwick, observed: "I think I must have had the pleasure of seeing you before, and that not very long ago!" "O, yes!" was the reply; "you saw me this morning, and gave me a shilling for answering a whole string of questions, and I was much obliged to you for it."

By nobly bearing it.

Books and Periodicals.

THE ARENA AND THE THRONE. L. T. Townsend, D. D. Boston: Lee & Shepard, publishers; New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, 1874.

The Field, the Defeat, the Triumph, the King, are the titles of the four chapters which compose the volume. In discussing the field the author argues elaborately against the idea that the stars are inhabited worlds. The earth alone is both inhabitable and inhabited. This is the sole arena of intelligent and accountable beings in the physical universe. In this arena of trial the defeat is illustrated in the character and destiny of Judas; the triumph is exhibited in the history and ordeal of Job. Man is the king, the top and flower of created beings—higher than the angels. We are disposed to agree with the author in the most of his conclusions. We doubt, however, the profit of his rather wild speculations in the fourth chapter, and except to his views of the pre-existence of Christ's spiritual humanity. Some few flings at the Southern Confederacy adorn the work, but, as the author lives in Boston, this was to be expected.

A MANUAL OF MORAL PHILOSOPHY. Designed for colleges and high schools. By Andrew P. Peabody, D. D., LL. D. New York and Chicago: A. S. Barnes & Co., 1873.

Dr. Peabody is Plummer professor of Christian morals in Harvard University, and the book was prepared particularly for the use of the freshman class in Harvard College. The arrangement is good, and the general treatment clear and able. Many of Prof. Peabody's conclusions and views partake of the section and school to which he belongs, and can hardly be commended as safe guides in many cases. The volume is a 12mo of 220 pages, cream-tinted paper, and substantially bound.

MARCY'S SCIOPTICON MANUAL. Revised edition. 12mo, 180 pages.

This volume deals with the specialty of magic lantern apparatus and manipulation. It gives popular explanations of this entire department of optics, discussing in detail the various parts and processes involved. Special prominence is given to the Sciopticon, of which the author is the inventor; but the book is valuable for any kindred instrument. It is fully illustrated by diagrams, and contains suggestions concerning the preparation and management of many of the most beautiful lantern effects.

LITTLE WANDERERS, AND OTHER SUNDAY STORIES. By Samuel Wilberforce, D. D., late Bishop of Winchester. New York: G. W. Carleton & Co., publishers.

The sudden and violent death of the author, which happened not many months ago, will give peculiar interest to this beautiful edition of the work. The doctrinal character of the book is taken from the Church of England catechisms, and is not without objections, but the general tendency is good, and the stories will be sure to enlist the attention of children.

THREADING MY WAY. By Robert Dale Owen. New York: G. W. Carleton & Co., publishers.

This is certainly an entertaining book. Mr. Owen, as is well known, is a spiritualist, but he is evidently a man of upright character and strong and sincere convictions. These papers were written as a series for the Atlantic Monthly, and contain scarcely any reference to the author's peculiar religious delusions.

FANNY FERN. A memorial volume. Containing her select writings and a memoir. By James Parton. New York: G. W. Carleton & Co., 1873.

The admirers of Fanny Fern have, in this volume, the choicest of her writings. The memoir occupies about seventy pages, and gives an interesting history of this gifted and singular woman.

THE DEW OF YOUTH, and Other Lectures to Young Men and Young Women, on Early Discipline and Culture. By Right Rev. Thomas W. Clark, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of the diocese of Rhode Island. Boston: Lee & Shepard. 12mo, 167 pages.

These lectures were delivered twenty years ago. They are good and well worth republishing.

A STOUT HEART, OR THE STUDENT FROM OVER THE SEA. By Elijah Kellogg. Boston: Lee & Shepard, 1874.

A popular and useful story for boys. The author is a prolific writer in this line of things, but he writes well.

PRONOUNCING HAND-BOOK is a little volume issued lately by Lee & Shepard, Boston, and very convenient for reference. The vocabulary consists of words often mispronounced, and of words as to which a choice of pronunciation is allowed. By Richard Saulo and Loomis J. Campbell.

MISS THISTLEDOWN. By Sophie May. Illustrated. Lee & Shepard, Boston. A good book for children.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for December has: Sketches from Early Church History; On Parochial Missions; Things the Angels Desire to Look Into; The Life Everlasting; The Poetical Books of the Old Testament, and other interesting and able articles. Good Words for December is, as usual, excellent. In its table of contents we note especially: Our Dumb Brethren; On the Birth of a Child; William the Silent. Scribner's Monthly for January is a superb number. The illustrated articles are: The Singers' Hills; The Great Air-Line to the Moon; The Great South; Glimpses of Texas. Scribner's series of illustrated articles, entitled The Great South, are the most impartial and instructive representations of the character and condition of the South which have appeared from any source since the war. Lippincott for January has a tempting array of articles, both entertaining and instructive. Among other articles we note: The New Hyperion, illustrated; The Trinnon Palace, illustrated; Japanese Fox Myths; Chester Harding, the Self-Made Artist. Peterson's Musical Monthly for January contains a rare selection of fresh and valuable music. Published by J. L. Peterson, New York.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY is now published by H. O. Houghton & Co. The January number contains the following articles: Prudence Palfrey; The Golden Wedding of Longwood; Fox Hunting in England; The Two Homes; Lida Ann; Changed; Haddeck and that Sort of Thing; Miss Evans; In Kittery Church-Yard; The Theory and Practice of Local Taxation in the United States; The Last of the Valerie; The History of the Two Pillars; Evolution and Permanence of Type; An Old Year Song; Recent Literature; Art; Music.

What May be Done.

Rev. Dr. Angus asserted, at the late meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, that with fifty thousand missionaries at work for ten years, and with fifteen millions a year for ten years to support them, it is demonstrable that the gospel might be preached, and preached repeatedly, to every man and woman and child on earth.

This seems, he said, a great company—fifty thousand preachers. And yet the number is not one per cent. of the members of evangelical churches in Christendom. There are three or four denominations in America, any one of which could supply all the preachers we need. England sent so many men to the Crimea to take a single fortress, and to keep on for a few years a Mohammedan despotism. Ten times the number of men fell on each side in the great American war. Five hundred years ago the Crusades had cost more lives, and they fought to win, for unmen well-nigh as chivalrous as the invaders, an earthly Jerusalem and a temporal sovereignty. And cannot fifty thousand redeemed men be found to win back the world to Jesus Christ? Have our hymns no meaning?

"Oh! send ten thousand heralds forth,
From east to west, from south to north,
To bless the trumpet jubilee,
And preach the glad in God's Anointed."

It seems a great sum—one hundred and fifty millions sterling in ten years; yet it is less than £15 a year—$75 from each member of the evangelical churches in Europe and America. England alone spends as much as the whole £150,000,000 every two years on intoxicating drinks. The Crimean war cost $500,000,000; the American war ten times as much. An annual tax of sevenpence in the pound on the income of Great Britain would yield the $75,000,000 we need. Nay, more, it would not be difficult to name ten thousand professing Christians who could give it all. Looking only at men and money, is it not self-evident that it can be done?

From the Work.

LAKE CHARLES GERMAN MISSION.—Mr. Editor: Rev. William Lieser, local preacher of Dryades Street German church, New Orleans, was appointed by the presiding elder of the Opelousas district to take charge of the German mission at Lake Charles, created during the last session of the Louisiana Conference. He went to his work early in the year, and has succeeded in building both a church and parsonage, worth about $1,600, there remaining only a debt of $300 on the property. He has gathered a respectable congregation of about twenty-two members, organized a trustee board, deeding the property properly to our church, and built up a Sunday school of thirty scholars, the books and papers for the same being donated by the Dryades Street church. Indeed, a good work has been done at Lake Charles. Large numbers of Germans are living in and around said place. A.

"I WANT TO FIND MY PAPA." Yesterday a lady was walking along the street when she met a little girl, between two and three years old, evidently lost, crying bitterly. Taking her by the hand, the lady asked her where she was going. "I'm going down town to find my papa," was the reply, between sobs, of the child. "What is your papa's name?" asked the lady. "His name is papa," replied the innocent little thing. "But what is his other name?" queried the lady; "what does your mamma call him?" "She calls him papa," persisted the baby. The lady then took the little one by the hand and led her along, saying: "You had better come with me; I guess you came this way." "Yes, but I don't want to go back; I want to find my papa," replied the little girl, crying afresh as if her heart would break. "What do you want of your papa?" asked the lady. "I want to kiss him." Just then a sister of the child came along looking for her and led her away. From subsequent inquiries it appeared that the little one's papa, whom she was so earnestly in search of, had recently died. In her lonesomeness and love for him, she tired of waiting for him to come home, and had gone to find him and greet him with the accustomed kiss.—Poughkeepsie N. Y. Eagle.

PRESS ON.

Be brave, my brother!
Fight the good fight of faith
With weapons proved and true;
Be faithful and unshrinking to the death;
Thy God will bear thee through.
The strife is terrible.
Yet 'tis not, 'tis not long!
The foe is not invincible,
Though fierce and strong.

Be brave, my brother!
The recompense is great,
The kingdom bright and fair;
Beyond the glory of all earthly state
Shall be the glory there.
Grudge not the heavy cost,
Faint (no) at labor here;
'Tis but a life-time to the most;
The day of rest is near.

Be brave, my brother!
He whom thou servest slights
Not even his weakest one;
No deed, though poor, shall be forgot,
However feebly done;
The prayer, the wish, the thought,
The faintly-spoken word,
The plan that seemed to come to naught,
Each has its own reward.

Be brave, my brother!
Enlarge thy heart and soul;
Spread out thy free, glad love;
Encompass earth, embrace the sea,
As does the sky above;
Let no man see thee stand
In slothful idleness,
As if there were no work for thee
In such a wilderness.

Be brave, my brother!
Stint not the liberal hand,
Give in the joy of love;
So shall thy crown be bright, and great
Thy recompense above;
Reward and like the deed,
That poor, weak deed of thine,
But like the God himself who gives—Eternal and divine. Bonar.

Evils to be Avoided.

The following article, by Rev. J. M. Boland, was published some time ago in the Nashville Christian Advocate:

Methodism has ever been noted for its liberal feelings toward other denominations or branches of the Christian church. This is right, yet it has been abused to our hurt. In the goodness of our souls we have too often suffered our catholicity of feeling to prevent us from doing the work that Providence has assigned us as an organized body of Christians. I have observed with painful solicitude, since I have been appointed to district work, that Methodism was suffering from two opposite sources. In our larger towns and cities our people are so exceedingly liberal that they cannot bear for their pastor to preach doctrinal sermons and observe Methodistic usages, lest some fastidious High Churchman might be present and become so offended that he would never come again. And should the presiding elder, in his quarterly visitations, be old fogy enough to preach Methodist doctrine and observe Methodist polity, there are always some who are ready to run around and parry the point by making apologies for him at the expense of his official and ministerial character—thus paralyzing his influence in that community during his term of office, if not for life. As little as we may dream of it, here is the key to unlock one secret that will help to explain why the office of presiding elder is not appreciated as it should be in the towns and cities. I can see how the pastor, who may be comparatively a young man, and who is in this enchanted atmosphere all the time, and who naturally wants to conciliate the good feelings of everybody, may unconsciously round off all the sharp points of Methodist theology, and polity, too. But the presiding elder is differently situated—he is not in any one place long enough to be affected by local influences; he looks at things from a different standpoint. It is his duty to study and meet such great wants of the church; that is one great object of his office in our grand economy; but in trying to perform this duty he too often has to pay the penalty described above. The result is, as soon as a generation grows up under this soft-shell Methodism, they become the dupes of every shrewd proselyting High Churchman that comes along. They are entangled in the meshes of a puerile sophistry that any tyro in Methodist theology or history ought to have been able to tear to shreds. And when they are gone, we wipe our mouths and say: "Well, if they are no better posted than to be caught with such a bait as that, they are not worth saving to the Methodist Church." But why were they not better posted? There is the rub! If one of your children had grown up in some college under the tuition and care of the president and corps of teachers, and was placed by them on the roll of its alumni, and then you were to discover that he was ignorant in the leading branches of an education, to say nothing of the rudiments, you would want to know why he was not better posted. In the rural districts, where the people are more scattered, and where each denomination might have an open field, our Methodistic liberality takes another form, and reaches the same results by another road. Here the rage is to build union churches, organize union Sunday schools, supply them with union Sunday school books, and all the protracted meetings must be union meetings. Now, in all such union churches the conscience of the Methodist Sunday school teacher, the Methodist pastor and the Methodist presiding elder must be sacrificed upon the altar of Methodist liberality. Everything depends upon keeping up the union feeling; and, while other preachers thunder their doctrines in the ears of our members and our children from their youth up, we Methodists have to take care of our Methodist liberality, and therefore must round off the sharp Methodistic corners so as to make our doctrine quadrate with our liberal Methodistic character! Thus we drift. Where and when will we take up? Well, we know where hundreds have drifted—out of the Methodist Church. And this line of policy has been run in some places so long that, in order to keep some Methodist children in the Methodist Church, the pastor has not only consented to baptize them by immersion, but also advised others to be immersed with them, to keep them from feeling that our church did not favor immersion; thus those who would have received baptism by pouring were urged to sacrifice their conscience to gratify the pride of the ignorant. Now, Mr. Editor, I am no sectarian bigot—hope I shall always have enough sense and religion to steer clear of that whirlpool. But it is strange to me that these slack-twisted, tender-footed, soft-shell Methodists, whether they be preachers or laymen, cannot see that the glory, power and past success of the Methodists grew out of their peculiar doctrines and polity. And while we have never, as a church, abused other churches, or sought controversy with them, yet Methodism has always flourished most when her doctrines have been clearly stated and earnestly defended, and her peculiar usages observed to the letter. To give up these is simply to go back one hundred and fifty years! To give up these is simply to give up the field after the victory has been virtually won! To give up these is to abandon that which won for Methodism the distinction of "Christianity in earnest!"

As I travel to and fro, looking after the interests of our beloved Methodism, my soul is stirred as I see everywhere a line of policy being pursued by our people, and some of our pastors, that is bound to lead hundreds and thousands into other churches at the expense of Methodist labor. O when will we stop this suicidal policy? The time was when this continent was before us. The adult population was not gospel-hardened. Anywhere almost a Methodist would go and preach he could soon have enough converts to organize a good church, and give his Presbyterian and Baptist brethren enough to start them a church; but it is not so now. There is but little to hope from converting the gospel-hardened adult sinners of the present day. Other churches have preyed upon us until some of them seem to think that they are not sent save to proselyte the people called Methodists, and, like some we wot of, they will compass sea and land to make one proselyte. The time has come in this country when we must take care of the sheep we have, and especially the lambs. To do this we must see that our people and their children are thoroughly indoctrinated and informed on points of Methodist history and polity. To do this, in some places, we must withdraw from union churches and union Sunday schools, and set up for ourselves. Depend upon it, my brethren, just so long as we run in these union grooves, just so long we shall have but few decided churches; just so long our children will go to swell the membership of other churches; just so long we shall be deficient in our finances, and all the interests of the church will suffer in our hands. In large portions of our territory nearly half of our time and energy and means are simply frittered away and lost for the want of a little foresight in adjusting ourselves to the situation. O, my brethren, time is too precious to be thus thrown away! We have too much to do to thus scatter our forces and means. Let every preacher and official and private member of the church adjust himself to the work, and "study to show himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." God has given Methodism and Methodists a specific work to do, and every man's work shall be tried by fire. Shall our work stand the test, and we "receive a reward?" or shall our works all be consumed, and we "suffer loss?"

The Knowledge of Sins Forgiven.

1. The doctrine that holds that a man's sins may be forgiven, and he not know it, flatly contradicts the Scriptures in general, and the following texts in particular. St. John says: "We know that we have passed from death unto life."—First John iii, 14. Now the death from which St. John knew he had passed unto life must have been spiritual death, because it could not have been temporal death for this plain reason: St. John as yet had not died a temporal death; neither could it have been eternal death in the future state, because there is no passing from hell to heaven. See Luke xvi, 19-31 inclusive. Hence we conclude that St. John knew that he had passed from spiritual death unto spiritual life. St. Paul says, Second Corinthians v, 1: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." St. Paul not only knew that he had passed from spiritual death unto spiritual life, but he knew more than this: he knew also that he had "a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Job says, xxiv, 25: "For I know that my Redeemer liveth." Again, St. John says, iii, 24: "And hereby we know that he (Jesus Christ) abideth in us, by the spirit which he hath given us." He says again, v, 19: "We know that we are of God." These citations are sufficient to show that the Scriptures teach the knowledge of sins forgiven, and hence the doctrine that denies this flatly contradicts the Bible. It not only contradicts the Bible, but

2. It contradicts reason and common sense. Now there are two classes of these church members that deny the possibility of a man's knowing his sins forgiven. The first class holds that they are Christians converted to God, and enjoy religion, but they have no knowledge of the time and place of their conversion to God. Well, brother, let me ask you one question. You say you enjoy religion, but do not know when you embraced it—you have no knowledge of the time or place of your conversion to God. Well, how do you know you are converted to God if you have no knowledge of the time when this great and powerful work was done? If done at all, it must have been done when you were asleep, as you have no knowledge of the time, for I am very certain that if it had been done when you were awake you would have known it. Well, then, if you were converted when asleep, in a dream, your religion is nothing more than a dream, and you know dreams will not do to rely on when our eternal interest is at stake. But you say: "My religion is not a dream, but a reality." How do you know this? "I know it because I feel that my sins are all pardoned; and I have a good conscience toward God." When were all your sins pardoned? You say: "I cannot tell, but I believe it was a gradual work, like a sack of sand on a man's back, pouring out at some cavity in the end of the sack until all runs out." This is not the doctrine of the Bible nor Christian experience. A man's sins are all forgiven at once, not one at a time. But for argument's sake let us suppose it true, and then the question will be: Do you know when your first sin was pardoned, or do you know when your last sin was pardoned, or do you know when any sin of your whole life was pardoned? You answer: "No." Well, if so, it follows, as a necessary consequence, that you have no knowledge of pardoned sin, and you are in the gall of bitterness and bonds of iniquity at this hour. Now this class of members in our church acknowledge that a man may know that he has religion for they profess to have it, but at the same time deny his knowing when he got it. The second class holds that it is impossible for any man on earth to know that he has got religion. This is the difference between the two classes of members in our church that deny the knowledge of sins forgiven. If we add these two classes together and sum them up, their name is legion. We will now briefly notice our second class of church members that deny the knowledge of sins forgiven. They do not deny the Christian religion altogether; they believe in the form of religion, but deny the power of religion. Hence they say that it is impossible for any man on earth to know he has religion, and enjoys it. Now, in direct opposition to this, we hold that if any man or woman on earth is converted to God, they know it as certainly as they know that they are alive and breathe the external air. The conversion of the soul of the penitent sinner is a powerful work. It is the work of God; and when this work is done God will be certain to let the sinner know it. He will be as sensible of it as a blind man would be if restored to sight. If any man has ever been converted to God he knows it; and if any man does not know it, this is clear proof that he never was converted to God. Again, what good can religion do a man who does not know he has it? It would do him no more good than a million of gold dollars would do me that I never knew belonged to me. It is just as reasonable to suppose that a man can get to heaven and not know it, as it is to suppose that a man can be converted to God and not know it. A man in pain knows it, a man in ease knows it, a man that is blind knows it, a man that can see knows it; so likewise a man that is a sinner knows it, and a man converted to God knows it. But you say: "How does he know it?" We answer: First. He feels it himself as sensibly as ever he felt ease when a severe pain in one of his teeth ceased to torment him. Second. The Holy Spirit beareth witness with his spirit that he is a child of God by filling his soul with love, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, that "is inexpressible and full of glory." He is now a happy man, "saved by grace through faith."

3. This doctrine contradicts the experience of all the bright Christians now on earth; and all the saints in glory. They write with one voice, and testify to the fact that they know that they passed from spiritual death unto spiritual life in this world. I say bright Christians, who have the infallible sign and seal of the Holy Ghost in their souls, that shines forth in their faces with a supernatural brightness, mixed with a pleasant, sweet and happy smile. This is a sign that no hypocrite can mimic; and when you see the sign on the face of a man or woman, you may know that they are converted to God, and if you ask them, at that time, if they know that they are converted, they will answer: "Yes, I know it." I have seen perhaps thousands of these bright faces during my life, and I have asked many of them if they were converted to God, and the invariable answer was: "I know I am converted." And I have also seen this same supernatural, bright light on the face of the dying Christian. This is religion, I do know. It will do to live with and to die with. Glory to God in the highest. Hallelujah! Praise ye the Lord, and all that is within me, praise his holy name.

JAMES SHANKS.

ANECDOTE OF HANDEL.—Handel was one of the most humorous of mortals, and, at the same time, one of the most irritable. His best jokes were perpetrated frequently during his most violent bursts of passion. Having occasion to bring out one of his oratorios in a provincial town of England, he began to look about for such material to complete his orchestra and chorus as the place might afford. One and another was recommended, as usual, as being a splendid singer, a great player, and so on. After awhile, such as were collected were gathered together in a room, and, after preliminaries, Handel made his appearance, puffing, both arms full of manuscript. "Gentlemen," quoth he, "you all read manuscripts?" "Yes, yes," responded from all parts of the room. "We play in the church," added an old man behind a violoncello. "Very well, play dis," said Handel, distributing the parts. This done, and a few explanations delivered, Handel retired to a distant part of the room to enjoy the effect. The stumbling, tumbling and blundering that ensued are said to have been indescribable. Handel's sensitive ear and impetuous spirit could not long brook the insult, and, clapping his hands to his ears, he ran to the old gentleman of the violoncello, and, shaking his fist furiously at the terrified man and the instrument, said: "You play in de church—very well—you may play in de church—for we read, de Lord is long-suffering, of great kindness, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin; you sal play in de church, but you sal not play for me," and, snatching together his manuscripts, he rushed out of the room, leaving his astonished performers to draw their own conclusions.

Methodist Sketches.

MR. EDITOR: In my last sketch I [illegible] to refer question. I did not say as much as I wished, because it would make my communication oppressive to the space in your paper. The reader will please indulge me in a few more remarks. Methodism professes to be aggressive in its movements, and without doubt the itineracy of the present day felt that they needed the lay element in their councils to help forward the glorious work in which they are engaged. Did not the church at that day need the same help? There can be but one answer to this question: It did. May not the church, then, in the future learn an important lesson, from the unfortunate results of that protracted and bitter controversy, that whenever a new question is sprung, discuss it in a Christian spirit? Had this been done at that time a very different result might have followed the discussion. As it was, neither party gained, but the church at large lost much.

In connection with Dr. Talley, I beg leave to introduce to the reader the name of Rev. Ebenezer Hearn. He was sent as a missionary from the Tennessee Conference to Alabama and Mississippi, to assist in organizing a Conference. Bro. Hearn, though inferior to Dr. Talley in point of experience, prayed a most effective worker in the mission-field. He was quite young, but possessed a hardy, robust constitution, and was full of the mission spirit; performed his work well, and continued, up to the time of his death (which occurred a few years since,) in the itinerant ministry. No man of the Alabama Conference did more and better work than Bro. Hearn. He was not only a faithful worker, but he did up his work systematically and in due time. His preaching talents were not regarded of the first order, but what he lacked in talent he more than compensated for in his faithfulness and deep devotion to the interests of the church. By this standard alone will all men be judged. There are many ministers of the gospel who possess almost the talent of angels, yet make fools of themselves and disgrace the cause of their Master; but we are slow to recognize this as the true standard of ministerial worth. Bro. Hearn was a successful financier, both in church matters and in his personal matters. He so managed his personal affairs as to raise and educate a large family of children in a highly creditable manner. All honor to such a man.

In connection with this subject of estimating a minister by the many and great talents he possesses, and not by the amount of work he does, I beg leave, as an old man who has learned something by observation, to enter my protest against a growing evil in the church; and that is of unduly exalting, in the public journals (particularly religious journals of the day) the talent of any preacher. At first he may merely blush at such fulsome praise; but in the end it will show itself for evil, and not good, both to the minister and the church. The devil is always ready to suggest this fulsome praise to a minister after one of his happy efforts in the pulpit; but few, however, have the blunt honesty to rebuke the devil as did a certain minister who, on being told by a brother that he had preached a great sermon, replied: "Yes, the devil told me that before you did."

For fear I may weary you with my sketches, Mr. Editor, I propose to write but one more. One object in writing what I have was to influence some competent writer to do for Alabama and Mississippi what the Rev. J. B. McFerrin has done for Tennessee—write out the history of Methodism. Such a work would add greatly to the substantial literature of the church.

INSTEAD of wonders ceasing when we enter heaven they will but increase, for the more we know the more wonderful does everything become. Wonder belongs to knowledge, not to experience. The learned man wonders at a flower or insect, while the ignorant man or the child sees nothing to attract his attention. A primrose, I doubt not, is more an object of admiration and wonder to an angel than to us.—Norman Macleod.

AN IRISH GENTLEMAN of a mechanical turn took off his gas meter to repair it himself, and put it on again upside down. At the end of the quarter it was proved with arithmetical correctness that the gas company owed him $8.57, for the recovery of which he promptly sued the company.

Obituaries.

WALTER BAILEY, only son of Elijah W. and Rebecca P. Bostwick, of Eufaula, Alabama, was born March 17, 1872; and died October 13, 1873.

"Whate'er the gift thy love commands,
Help me commit to thine own hands.
Thine only Son thou gavest me;
Oh, Lord, help me give mine to thee.
Thy will, not mine." B.

DIED, in New Orleans, November 12, 1873, ANNIE LIZZIE, only daughter of Captain W. D. and Mrs. Johanna Weaver, aged six years, eight months and seven days. Lizzie was a punctual Sunday school scholar of the Dryades street German church, and was loved by all who knew her. Now she is a bright angel in the home of the blessed. A.

MR. ANDREW J. KNOTT was born in Calloway county, Kentucky, in April, 1845; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in August, 1868; and died December 6, 1873, at half-past six A. M., after a short illness.

He was conscious to the last—spoke of his "peace," which seemed to flow as a river. He prayed, and was very happy at the prospect of a home in heaven. He was a class-leader at Beulah; and as such we miss him. He has left a precious widow and little ones to follow on after, who have the love and sympathy of the church and friends in their holy grief.

JAS. E. BRADLEY, P. C.

PLEASANT HILL, December 22, 1873.

MRS. MARY BEAVERS, widow of Randall Beavers, and daughter of James and Mary Russell, departed this life, at her father's residence in Copiah county, Mississippi, after a short illness, October 18, 1873, aged about forty-two years.

She was entirely resigned to death, was willing to die, and talked constantly upon the subject of religion, saying that she was ready to leave this world to meet her Savior in heaven. She professed religion in the Baptist Church about eighteen years ago. She desired her brother William to meet her in heaven, and she hoped that he would live and die a Christian. She said it was as easy to live a Christian as it was to live a sinner.

JAMES RUSSELL.

DIED, in Jasper, Texas, November 3, 1873, ALICE ELDORA, only daughter of W. W. and Alice Hilliard, aged four years, three months and nine days.

From loving ones, whose greatest care had been to watch over her—from arms that strove to hold her back—she passed to the glorious home in heaven—to the God who had given her only for a little while to earth.

O death, could you not have left this one little bud, from your many flowers, to gladden the home circle, where she was as the bright sunshine is to earth? Her presence had brightened and cheered the hearts now left so desolate; but we do not know what trials she has escaped, what storms the dear little one has been sheltered from. It seems that the best and most loved are always taken first; but the ways of Deity are wise, although strange to us.

A FRIEND.

DIED, November 7, in the parish of Tangipahoa, Louisiana, SUSAN JANE DUNNINGTON, wife of Benjamin Dunnington, and daughter of Robert Lanier, Esq., aged thirty-one years.

She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1872, was married to Mr. Dunnington, January 1, 1873, and departed this life on her birthday, leaving a sweet little babe, born the day she died. Her end was peace. She lived an humble, devoted Christian life after she became a member of the church, attending on all the ordinances of the Lord's house. She had expressed a feeling of certainty that she would not have long to live, and prepared herself for her end. At her funeral three young men professed religion—an acquaintance of hers, a brother, and her husband, who made a public profession of religion a few moments before the remains of his dear wife were placed in the coffin. Such a scene of grace was never witnessed before. The next Sabbath the sacrament was fully attended, and the altar was not without penitents. J. BOYES.

REV. WILLIAM DEPRIEST was born in the State of Georgia, January 15, 1792. He removed with his parents, at the age of four years, to the State of Mississippi. At the age of twenty-four he embraced religion and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. For many years he served the church as class leader, and as a local preacher for twenty years. About ten years ago he removed to the State of Georgia. In the month of October, 1872, he came to Texas, and settled in Goliad county. On the twentieth of September he removed to Victoria county. For several months his health has been declining, but he said he was not in pain. On the thirtieth of November he was confined to his bed. His right side and limbs became paralyzed. He soon lost his speech, and continued to decline until the sixth instant. At one o'clock A. M. he passed from this to a better clime. It has been the writer's privilege to see and converse with many pious people, but he never knew any one who appeared more fully under the divine influence than the subject of this obituary. Bro. DePriest was a soldier in the war of 1812. He was married three times, and survived two of his companions. The third remains to mourn his loss.

NANCY N. CALDWELL was born in Abbeyville district, South Carolina, January 23, 1802, and died, near Midway, Richland parish, Louisiana, December 4, 1873.

Sister Caldwell's maiden name was Davis. REV. LEWIS BEEMAN, local elder [illegible] the Methodist Episcopal Chur[illegible] South, died October 26, 1873, in G[illegible] peace, at his residence near G[illegible] hope, Mississippi. He was bo[illegible] July 3, 1806, in Gates county, Nor[illegible] Carolina; removed to Halifax [illegible] in 1837; to Morgan county, Alaba[illegible] in 1846, and to Leake county, Miss[illegible] sippi, in 1848. He was married [illegible] Miss Louisa Luter, of Northampt[illegible] county, North Carolina, Decemb[illegible] 31, 1830; embraced the religion [illegible] Christ in 1827; licensed to preach [illegible] 1837; ordained deacon, by Bish[illegible] Waugh, in 1842, and elder, by Bish[illegible] Capers, in 1855. A good man, indeed [illegible] has fallen—one of the pillars [illegible] Methodism, and a power in the com[illegible] munity where he lived and died. With a clear head and a warm heart [illegible] he earnestly plead his Master's cause, and in Christ's stead prayed the peo[illegible] ple, especially the young, to be reconciled to God. Prompt and effi[illegible] cient, he contributed his talents and means to the various enterprises of the church of his choice; and after he had done all he could for God and humanity, his language was: "Poor unworthy me." Though his aged companion is bereft of a kind and provident husband, the children an indulgent father, and the church and community a worthy and respected minister of the gospel, we are constrained, in the language of inspiration, to write: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Under God he carved out and established a character which commanded esteem and admiration from all who knew him. And here let me say to his children: "Imitate his example, that you may die as did your father respected by men and owned of God."

I visited Bro. Beeman in his last illness, and when I inquired after his spiritual condition and future prospects he said: "All my trust is in God. I don't think that he will forsake me in the last hour. No, blessed be his holy name, my trust is in him." After which, in a few day fell asleep in Jesus. The funeral ices were performed by Rev. Dr. Sparkman, by agreement [illegible] entered into between the brethren, that the one who the other should preach [illegible] They were brothers-in-l[illegible] for a long time been true in the gospel. Thus p[illegible] beloved Beeman to [illegible] shore, the home of the [illegible] mune is heaven. May God [illegible] bereaved wife and children, [illegible] them in everlasting habitation ut in the school of sorrow;

The Master was teaching there;
t my eyes were dim with weeping, nd my heart oppressed with care.

tead instead of looking upward,
And seeing His face divine,
So full of tender compassion
For weary hearts like mine,

I only thought of life burden,
The cross that before me lay,
The clouds that hung thick above me,
Darkening the light of day.

So I could not learn my lesson,
And say: "Thy will be done,"
And the Master came not near me
As the leaden hours went on.

At last in despair I lifted
My streaming eyes above,
And I saw the Master watching
With a look of pitying love.

To the cross before me he pointed,
And I thought I heard him say:
"My child! thou must take thy burden,
And learn thy task to-day."

The Cathedral of Mexico.

THE REV. THOMAS CARTER, D. D.

We are in the cathedral of Mexico. The vast edifice consists of two grand divisions, in the lesser one of which we are now seated. The altar is so arranged that the sunlight, streaming in through colored glass behind, gives to the inner shrine an appearance of a bright flame, from which, line of gold, the rays diverge in l directions. Hark! the bells are ringing from the sacred spot, and at numbers of persons are kneeling on the floor; one old man, with hands outstretched, in front of us, in the fervor of his devotion bows his head to the floor and touches it with his forehead. A great dome rises above to an incredible height, covered with paintings, from which the dim light comes down and spreads itself upon the worshipers. Here is a priest. He approaches us as we write, clothed in his sacerdotal robes, and silently offers the contribution plate. Innumerable money-boxes are placed in different spots, each with the inscription for the worship of some particular saint. All around us are paintings of great beauty and value, their massive frames covered with the gold of the early Spaniards. The statues, all life-size, are countless. Of the magnitude of the room in which we are writing, we form a faint idea by the number of large chandeliers. Of these we count four-teen in a lusty glance.

We pass to the larger temple, where also a multitude, in the absence of all seats, are on their knees in worship. Oh! that we could turn them from their images which are in every shape, and from the saints which they fondly imagine are hearing them, to the worship of the only Savior! The mournful fact is too apparent here that Cortez never destroyed the idolatry of the Aztecs, but only changed its direction by baptizing their pagan gods with Christian names. It was easy thus to convert a nation in a day.

The vast proportions of this larger section of the cathedral are a constant wonder. Its length is five hundred feet—greater than that of St. Peter's at Rome. The breadth of the whole building is four hundred and twenty feet. Domes and arches, rising to a height impossible to compute, are supported by sixteen massive pillars of stone, each one of which is thirty-three feet in circumference. The organ, in two parts, on both sides of the coro, reaches almost from the floor to the ceiling. The extreme end of the edifice consists of an immense arched recess, called the altar de los reyes, the most elaborately carved image-work completely covering it, all glittering with the most precious gold, in which are set exquisite oil palintings of life-size, interspersed at regular intervals within the arch.

The ciprés or tabernacle is a work of art the like of which it is difficult to imagine, and almost as difficult to describe. In the nature of a tower it rises inside of the church to a height of perhaps sixty feet. The Virgin Mary sits on the top, appearing from where we write of the size of an ordinary woman, but probably much larger in fact. The tower widens as it descends from her feet, and is crowded with angels. Under her, beneath the arch which supports her, within pillars of most exquisite green precious stone, stands a figure which we suppose is intended to represent the Savior. The tower enlarges again, and the twelve apostles are seen beneath and outside of the central figure. Further down there is a vaulted inclosure glittering with gold, and ceiled over with the same precious metal, in which there is a large sanctumy covered with gold, supported by marble and gilded columns. This sanctuary is surrounded by pillars of the same green precious one we have referred to, which are ornamented above and below with gold devices. Angels and other figures surround it again as it descends, until it comes to the spot which the sacred presence is supposed to occupy, whence it spreads, in terraces paved with gold, toward the floor. The figures are all of life-size, and the beauty of the whole thing is far beyond the description we have tried to give. Indeed it is impossible to give any adequate idea of this wonderful temple at all. We hesitated long before making the attempt. There is such a gorgeousness of ornament, such a profusion of gold, such numberless paintings, nearly all apparently fine works of art, such a multitude of statues that we are bewildered in the effort.

On each side of the ciprés, and all around the crugia, or passage which leads to the coro, are balusters crowned with images, beautifully wrought, two feet and a half in height and two feet apart. Twenty-seven years ago, according to the statement of Mr. Thompson, then minister of the United States in Mexico, these balusters were all a compound of gold, silver and copper, more valuable than silver. An offer had been made to take them and replace them with statues of exactly the same size and workmanship of pure silver, and to the value of half a million of dollars besides. At this time much of the church plate has been confiscated, but this railing and these figures answer to the description of Mr. Thompson, and are probably the same. In speaking of the cathedral he says: "On entering it one is not to recall the wild fictions of the Arabian Nights; it seems as if the wealth of empires was collected there."

Passing through the building, on either side along its whole length are large apartments or recesses, separated by gigantic railings from the congregation, which are filled from floor to ceiling with costly paintings set in gold, and statues of life-size representing the various saints of the church. Here is a large picture which drew our attention. It is the Pope wearing his triple crown and seated in the clouds. On either side of him, but lower, as if on the surface of the earth, are two clerical assistants in their robes, each one holding a stout rope which reaches down to a large party of naked persons, all the size of life, who are up to the waist in the red flames of purgatory. One of these unfortunate persons holds the rope on either side, waiting to be pulled out by the priest. Sad portraiture of the object for which all this beauty of architecture, all this excess of wealth, all this display of the fine arts are intended!

Passing out toward the plaza, or public square, we enter from the street one of the towers, of which there are two besides the dome. We ascend the stairs. Every part of the work is massive, as perfect as it was two hundred years ago, and it may defy a thousand years to come. Upward still, a long, long succession of steps, until the city is before us, with its plains and mountains beyond. In this single tower we count sixteen large bells, and there is probably the same number in the other.

Throughout all this lovely country, as you ride in the cars, as you travel by the diligence, splendid churches, in the style of the cathedral, meet the eye. Desolate and waste may be the prospect for leagues, when suddenly, beautiful in architecture and massive in form, with its dome and tower, rises before you a spacious temple. It is like a pillar standing amid the ruins of a city. There is nothing around it corresponding to its stately beauty. Miserable huts, the abodes of poverty, ignorance and filth, reach up to the temple walls. Whatever may have been the piety, the knowledge, the thrift within the sacred inclosure, they have not spread to the community around; and the fact is forced upon the mind that whoever may have preached and labored in these churches, their labor has not been to elevate, refine, educate; but to depress, enervate, impoverish. A round of repetitions within the church, as a substitute for the converting, sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit, have produced their legitimate effect.—Methodist.

About Toads.

This note is intended as a contribution toward the psychology of the American toad, simply presenting some evidences of intelligence and of capacity for learning to which I have been witness. In the summers of 1843-5 an old toad used to sit under the door of a bee-hive every fine evening, and dexterously pick up those bees who, overladen or tired, missed the doorstep and fell to the ground. He lost, by some accident, one eye, and it was observed by several members of the family, as well as myself, that he had with it lost his ability to pick up a bee at the first trial; his tongue struck the ground on one side of the bee; but, after several weeks' practice with one eye, he regained his old certainty of aim. I have never seen our toad use his hands to crowd his food into his mouth, as the European toads do, although he uses them freely to wipe out of his mouth any inedible or disagreeable substance. When our toad gets into his mouth part of an insect too large for his tongue to thrust down his throat (and I have known of their attempting a wounded humming-bird,) he resorts to the nearest stone or clod, and presses the protruding part of his mouthful against it, and thus crowds it down his throat. This can be observed at any time by placing a locust's hind legs together, and throwing it before a small toad. On one occasion I gave a "yellow-striped" locust to a little toad in its second summer, when he was in the middle of a very wide gravel-walk. In a moment he had the locust's head down his throat, its hinder parts protruding. He looked around for a stone or clod; but, finding none at hand in either direction, he bowed his head and crept along, pushing the locust against the ground. But the angle with the ground was too small, and my walk too well rolled. To increase the angle he straightened his hind legs up, but in vain. At length he threw up his hind-quarters and actually stood on his head, or rather on the locust sticking out of his mouth, and, after repeating this once or twice, succeeded in "getting himself outside of his dinner." But these instances of ingenious adaptation to the circumstance were exceeded by a four-year-old toad at Antioch College. I was tossing him earth-worms while digging, and presently threw him so large a specimen that he was obliged to attack one end only. That end was instantly transferred to his stomach, the other end writhing free in air, and coiled about the toad's head. He waited until its writhings gave him a chance, swallowed half an inch; then, taking a nip with his jaws, waited for a chance to draw in another half inch. But there were so many half inches to dispose of, that at last his jaws grew tired, lost their firmness of grip, and the worm crawled out five-eighths of an inch between each half-inch swallowing. The toad, perceiving this, brought his hind foot to aid his jaws, grasping his abdomen with his foot; and by a little effort getting hold of the worm in his stomach, from the outside, he thus by his foot held fast to what he gained by each swallow, and presently succeeded in getting the worm entirely down. A garter-snake was observed this summer in North Conway, pushing a toad down his throat by running it against clods and stones, just as the toad crowds down a locust. The amount which a toad can eat is surprising. On Tuesday morning I threw a squash-bug to a young toad. He snapped it up, but immediately rejected it, wiped his mouth with great energy, and then hopped away with extraordinary rapidity. I was so much amused that I gathered one more of the saw-bugs, and carried them to a favorite old toad at the northeast corner of the house. He ate them all without making any wry faces. I gathered all that I could find in my vines, and he ate them all, to the number of twenty-three. I then brought him some larvæ of pygæra ministra, three-quarters grown, and succeeded in enticing him to put ninety-four of them on top of his squash-bugs. Finding that his virtue was not proof against the caterpillars when I put them on the end of a straw and tickled his nose with them, he at length turned and crept under the piazza, where he remained till Friday afternoon digesting his feast.—Rev. Thomas Hill, D. D.

Curiosities of Butter and Churning.

The art of making butter is by no means of modern date; this the derivation of the word from the Greek buturon, and this again from bous, a cow, and turos, cheese (literally cow's cheese,) sufficiently indicates. But although the word is of Greek derivation, it was late before this people had any notion of it. Their great poets, Homer, Theocritus and Euripides, who, like Shakespeare, drew the stores for their immortal creations from all sources of knowledge, do not speak of it, although they mention milk and cheese. Aristotle, the famous philosopher of olden time, first speaks of a fat substance contained in milk, which, under certain circumstances, becomes like oil. Herodotus, the Greek historian, is the most ancient writer who, in his account of the Scythians, describes a process for making butter. The word buturon first occurs in Hippocrates, who was nearly contemporary with Herodotus, in the fifth century B. C. "The Scythians," says Hippocrates, "pour the milk of mares into wooden vessels and shake it up violently, making it foam, when the fat part, which is light, rises to the top and becomes buturon." Dioscorides, 33 B. C., says that good butter is prepared from the fattest milk of sheep or goats by shaking it in a vessel till the fat separates. He says also that it can be melted and poured over pulse and vegetables, instead of oil, and might be used in pastry instead of oil. It is evident from this that drawn butter is not a modern invention, and that our pastry-cooks have certainly learned something from their grandmothers.

But the principal use of butter among the Greeks and Romans was as an ointment and a medicine. The Romans were accustomed to anoint the bodies of their children with it to render them pliable, and the Burguadians extended its applications by using it as a hair-oil. Plutarch, the prince of ancient story-tellers, informs us that a Spartan lady once paid a visit to Berenice, the wife of Deiotarus, and that one smelt so strongly of ointment and the other of butter that neither could endure the other. We are not told what kind of ointment it was, but we can safely assert that the butter must have been very rancid.

The ancient Christians of Egypt burnt butter in their lamps instead of oil; and in more recent times it was used for the same purpose in Roman Catholic churches, during the Christmas festival, to avoid the great consumption of olive-oil. The cathedral of Rouen has a tower called the butter tower, from the fact that the Archbishop of Rouen, in A. D. 1506, finding the supply of oil to fail during Lent, permitted the use of butter in lamps, on condition that each inhabitant should pay six deniers, with which money the tower was built. There are other "butter-towers" at Notre Dame, Bourges, etc.

It is evident, from the early history of butter, that the Greeks and Romans did not use it to any extent in cooking or in the preparation of food, but Anaxandrides, a poet who lived shortly after Hippocrates, mentions a banquet where the Thracians ate butter, to the astonishment of the Greeks. But the article formerly called butter was oily and impure, wanting the firmness and consistency of that of modern times. It was consequently prone to decomposition, and its use limited. The ancients had usually accustomed themselves to good oil and butter, in later times even, has been very little used in Italy, Spain and the south of France, but was sold chiefly by the apothecaries for medicinal purposes. Most modern biblical critics agree that the word translated butter in our version of the Scriptures means milk or cream, or, more properly, sour thick milk. In the thirtieth chapter of Proverbs we find a verse beginning: "The churning of milk bringeth forth butter," etc. This would certainly seem to describe the preparation of butter, but the original Hebrew words, chaleb metz, signify, squeezing or pressing, as, for example, the udder of a cow; so that milking, and not making butter, is supposed to be meant. It is very probable that the formation of butter was discovered by accident in the transportation of milk in skins, which are still used in Barbary. In this country the Arabs churn their cream by suspending it contained in skins of goats in their tents, and pressing it to and fro. Dr. Chandler, in a journey from Athens to Corinth, noted the mode of churning in the Levant. It consisted in securing the cream in skins, and then treading them with the feet. In Bengal, probably owing to indisposition to exertion in consequence of the excessive heat, they manage to make butter come by simply turning a stick around in the milk, but the product cannot be large. The inhabitants of the interior of Africa seem to be favored with respect to a dish or the manners of a servant.—*Newton.

The Queen's Communion.

Her majesty the Queen, when in Scotland, goes to the communion in the Presbyterian Church, and receives the sacrament from the hands of a Presbyterian minister, just as the Dean of Canterbury did at the hands of Dr. Adams. And we have just now the notice of her recent participation in the sacrament, which is not given as anything unusual, but as a matter of course:

HER MAJESTY AT THE COMMUNION TABLE.—A correspondent of the Dundee Advertiser relates how the Queen of England recently joined in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, in the Scotch Presbyterian church at Crathie. He says:

"At the commencement of the communion service her majesty and several ladies left the royal pew, walked down stairs, and entered Dr. Taylor's seat, which was covered as a communion table, and partook of the elements of the Lord's Supper. Dr. Robertson, being ruling elder of the church, attended on her majesty and party, the Queen handing him her token along with the other ladies. Dr. Taylor, the minister of Crathie, took a piece of the bread, broke it, handed a piece first to the Rev. Mr. Cowan (his assistant for the day,) and then to the Queen, out of his hand, and then handed her the cup. Her majesty kept her seat until the two verses of the one hundred and third Psalm were sung, after Dr. Taylor had addressed the communicants, when her majesty left for the palace."

The custom in the Scotch Church is to enquire each communicant to be provided beforehand with a token or ticket of membership, if not of that particular church, of some other in fellowship with it. The Queen, one of the noblest specimens of wife, mother, widow and woman, had, as a Christian, provided herself with the required evidence of her church membership, and, leaving her seat in the gallery, walked down to the minister's pew, and not kneeling as she was wont to do at Osborne and Windsor, but sitting at the table, after the assistant minister had been served the received the holy communion, in a Presbyterian church, from a Presbyterian minister! And she, the head of the Church of England! Now, suppose Bishop Tozer had been in Scotland, would his righteous indignation have been roused to write a letter to the Queen, accusing her of a breach of ecclesiastical propriety, and charging her with "forgetting what is due to" herself as the head of the Church of England? Would not all England have risen up in one outburst of condemnation of Bishop Tozer for his public insult to the Queen if he had dared to call in question the propriety of her conduct?—New York Observer.

HOW I WAS SAVED.—To every wife whose husband is the slave to liquor I say: Hope and pray! Do not give up to despair, and if your husband has any sense of religion or affection for you, he will, by the grace of God, reform.

For ten years alcohol was my master, and for seven years I battled fiercely to overcome him. Sometimes I would abstain for several months—once for six—then, trusting in my own strength, would fall. My angel wife bore her troubles without a murmur, and, though delicate and nervous, never gave way to despair; was always most kind and affectionate, and, clinging to my neck, would say: "Poor, dear John, how I pity you, but let us hope and pray, and you will yet conquer." We did hope and pray, and God in his mercy answered our prayers, and a happier home on earth than ours cannot be found.

We are now old and gray, and are looking forward to that happy home above. No memory of the past is ever allowed to mar our perfect peace, for we know that the blood of the Lamb cleanseth from all sin. My wife says: "I love you all the more, John, for I know how you struggled, and I feel proud that I was the instrument in God's hands of saving you. I never, even in the darkest moments, regretted marrying you, for I thought if I had not you would have been lost."

Oh! if all wives were like mine, how many more might be saved, if they would adopt her course instead of a harsh one.—Montreal Witness.

AMONG the officers in charge in Houston during the late war was General Griffin. A freedman, Pomp, was one day conversing with the general, when he spied his former young master, whom he had not seen since the commencement of hostilities. Pomp ran to him and exclaimed: "Bress you, Mars Charles! I's mighty glad to see yer! How's de ole missis an' Mars John?" After Pomp had finished his demonstrations of joy the general said: "Pomp, you need not call him master now; you are just as good as he is." "What!" said Pomp; "me jus' as good as Mars Charles? No, sah, General Griffin! I may be jus' as good as you is, but I ain't so good as Mars Charles—no, sah!"

HIS THREATS AND HIS PROMISES. Two rabbis approaching Jerusalem, observed a fox running upon the hill of Zion. Aged Rabbi Joshua wept, but Rabbi Ellezer laughed. "Wherefore dost thou laugh?" said he who wept. "Nay, wherefore dost thou weep?" demanded Ellezer. "I weep," replied the Rabbi Joshua, "because I see what was written in Lamentations fulfilled; because of the Mount Zion which is desolate, the foxes fall upon it." "And therefore do I laugh," said Rabbi Ellezer, "for when I see with my own eyes that God has fulfilled his threatening to the very letter, I have thereby a pledge that not one of his promises shall fail, for he is ever more ready to show mercy than judgment."

MANY Christians who have borne the loss of a dear child or all their property with the most heroic Christian fortitude have been entirely vanquished by the breaking of a Religious Intelligence.

THE English New Testament revisers are now at work on the twenty-second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.

DURING the month of November eight Baptist churches of Chicago received by baptism 63 and by letter 58 members.

THE Canada Baptists are gratified over the showing they are able to make in missionary work. They report their receipts from Ontario and Quebec at $5,289, and claim to have already taken a position in the foreign work in advance of twenty-five of our States. They sustain two of the missionaries of the Telugoo mission.

THE possibility of Great Britain becoming again a Roman Catholic country is discussed from time to time in the papers, but a correspondent of the Observer claims to have certain proof that England is rapidly gravitating toward Rome. The writer thinks the Queen is orthodox, but that the English nation is reverting to Roman Catholicism.

REV. J. W. OLMSTEAD, editor of the Watchman and Reflector, the Baptist paper of Boston, is now in Europe. He has just come out, in practice, in favor of joint communion. On November 27, in Tottenham Court Road chapel, London, he, in company with some one hundred others, Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists, celebrated the Lord's Supper. Two Episcopal rectors refused to unite in the service.

THROUGHOUT the Turkish empire a Protestant population of 23,000 souls is now scattered. The enterprise of American missionaries has established 222 common schools, in which more than 5,000 scholars are taught; 7 schools for girls, having 215 pupils, and 4 theological schools, with 58 students; 52 pastors have been ordained and 56 preachers have been licensed; 400,000 copies of the Bible in various languages have been put in circulation, besides 500,000 other useful books, religious and educational. Gradual changes have taken place in the manners, dress and habits of thought of the natives. As the ladies of the people increase, flowing Turkish robes are discarded for the less cumbersome European dress; while women of rank, breaking through the prejudice of years, with persistent boldness cover Parisian costumes under their enveloping street robes, and only enhance the beauties of face and coiffure by vails of ever-increasing dimsiness. But the change is not confined to the unimportant external of dress.

THE Protestant missionaries in Japan and the societies now (October, 1873) represented are as follows, arranged according to priority of occupation: 1. The Reformed Church of America, represented by five male and two female missionaries. 2. The American Presbyterian Church, by five male and two female missionaries. 3. The Baptists of the United States, by three missionaries. 4. The American Episcopal Church, by six missionaries. 5. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, by five male and two female missionaries. 6. The Church Missionary Society of England, by two missionaries. 7. The Woman's Missionary Society of America, by five ladies. 8. The Methodist Episcopal Church of America, by five missionaries. 9. The Wesleyan Methodists of Canada, by two missionaries. 10. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, by two missionaries. The United Presbyterians of Scotland have also prepared to occupy the field. The Russian Church has a mission in Japan, with several missionaries. The Jesuits have missions in every port, and number over a dozen male and four or five female missionaries. Almost all the Protestant male missionaries are married.

THE annual meeting of the American Missionary Association was held at Newark, New Jersey, November 6 and 7. The receipts of the association for the year were $345,277.03; its expenditures were $340,380.71, of which $273,015.67 were for the South, $5,613.76 for the Chinese, and $15,748.96 for the foreign missions in Africa, the West Indies, the Sandwich Islands, Siam and Italy. The State of Virginia has given nearly $100,000 in agricultural land scrip to the Hampton Agricultural and Normal Institute, and the State of Georgia $8,000 to the Atlanta University. The association has 303 teachers in the South, 14 among the Chinese, 28 with the Indians; total, 351, and 14,918 pupils; scholars in church and mission Sunday schools, 8,098. Number of foreign missions, 4; stations, 14; ordained missionaries, 8; male assistants, 9; female, 11; native assistants, 6; churches, 101; church members, so far as reported, 580. Four of the colleges have students in all four classes. The normal school work is of immense importance, and has been greatly advanced. The executive committee recommended in their report the transfer of the Sinnese and West Indian missions to English societies, the abandonment of the Sandwich Island missions, which have become self-supporting, the strengthening of the African missions, and the concentration of effort among the freedmen, the Indians and the Chinese in America, but chiefly upon the freedmen.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.—The London Missionary Society, says Zion's Herald, is doing a great work in the South Sea Islands. Rev. Dr. Nesbitt, of Samoa, a missionary in Polynesia for about thirty years, addressed a committee of the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria recently, on the great work accomplished by the above society in the South Sea Islands. He said: "Sixty years ago every island in Polynesia was under the spell of heathenism. There were now about 400,000 Polynesians who professed Christianity, who had been reclaimed from heathenism, and from many of whose islands cannibalism had been extirpated. Had Christian missions been a success in Polynesia? It must be borne in mind that these missions were still in their infancy. Their converts were children. It could not be expected that they would develop the same exalted standard of moral excellence as older communities. In these latter communities Christianity was the growth of many ages. The Samoan group comprised ten islands, large and small, having a population of 35,000. European missionaries took up their abode in these islands thirty-six years ago. Then the Samoans were a heathen, barbarous people, without any written language. Heathenism had been rooted out from among the Samoans as a people. The 31,000 Samoans were a professedly Christian people. Ordinances of religion were observed, and there were schools in every village. The people were a church-going people, both on Sunday and week-days. The Bible had been translated into their language, and they had an increasing Christian literature. From Samoa the gospel was being sent to regions beyond, and the voluntary Samoan contributions to the cause of Christianity averaged upward of £1,000 a year. About 80 Samoan students were now in the training institution there, which institution sent forth some twenty students yearly. The students had spread far and wide for the purpose of teaching Christianity among the islands of the Pacific, and their teaching had been very effective."

PROGRESS IN PERSIA.—Already, the Friend of India says, before the Shah had left or even reached England, the breath of the new order of things had begun to stir in Persia. Mr. Bruce, who has given himself to that country, and fed thousands of its people last year during the famine from his mission-house at Julfa, in the suburbs of Ispahan, writes full of hope. First of all the wheat harvest is so good this year that prices have fallen to one-half pence a pound for good bread, while last year five pence was given for the same quantity, of a compound of straw, earth and bran. "The Shah's visit to Europe, the railroad, the very increased interest now shown by very many Persians in Ispahan in the study of the Christian Scriptures and many other things, especially the great desire for religious liberty manifested by the numerous Mohammedan sects here, and the very enlightened policy though, perhaps, not always accompanied by sufficient wisdom and caution) adopted by the present Grand Wazeer—all show that great changes must occur before long in this country." Mr. Bruce represents the followers of the Baab sect, many of whom were formerly executed by the chief Mujtahid, as growing in boldness. He is working at a Persian translation of the New Testament, and in his composition of a Bible history he is helped by a very learned Soofy and a tolerably learned Moollah, both of whom abhor Mohammedanism. He has purchased the mission-house at Julfa, and waits for the Church Missionary Society to do its duty to Persia in this new era.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE Friend of India has gathered some valuable statistics of the Christian population of Persia. There are in Persia 25,000 Armenian and 25,000 Nestorian Christians. "Of the Armenian population 6,000 reside chiefly at Tabreez and Julfa, near Ispahan; the rest are cultivators of the soil in the provinces of Ispahan, Irak and Azerbijan. The Armenians are not now persecuted on account of their religious belief, and, with the Nestorians, they are exempt from all military service. The lands of the Nestorians are in the neighborhood of Oroomiah and Selmas. The plain of Oroomiah contains about three hundred villages, forty of which are occupied by Nestorians, sixty by Christians and Mohammedans, and the remaining number by Mohammedans exclusively. Formerly the Christians of Oroomiah had to complain of frequent acts of violence at the hands of the Mohammedan population, especially of the seizure of Nestorian girls and their forcible conversion to Islam. But the severe punishment inflicted in several instances on the guilty parties, and the interference of the American missionaries, have had a good effect. Christians in Persia are at liberty to change their religion, but if a Christian embraces and afterward renounces Islam he is considered to have forfeited his life. Any Mohammedan becoming a Christian would be liable to the same penalty." It will be remembered that when the Shah was in Europe he was petitioned to relieve both Christians and Jews in his kingdom from the exactions imposed by the Mohammedan officials.—The Alliance.

TRIBUTE TO MISSIONARIES IN INDIA.—An official paper presented to the British Parliament contains the following tribute to the missionaries in India: "The large body of European and American missionaries settled in India bring their various moral influences to bear upon the country with the greater force, because they act together, with a compactness which is but little understood. Though belonging to various denominations of Christians, yet from the nature of their work, their isolated position and their long experience, they have been led to think rather of the numerous questions on which they agree than of those on which they differ, and they co-operate heartily together. Localities are divided among them by friendly arrangements, and with few exceptions it is a fixed rule among them that they will not interfere with each other's converts and each other's spheres of duty. School-books, translations of the Scriptures and religious works, prepared by various missions, are used in common; and helps and improvements secured by one mission are freely placed at the command of all. The large body of missionaries resident in each of the presidency towns form missionary conferences, hold periodic meetings, and act together on public matters. They have frequently addressed the Indian government on important social questions, involving the welfare of the native community, and have suggested valuable improvements in existing laws. During the past twenty years, on five occasions, general conferences have been held for mutual consultation respecting their missionary work."

Comfort in Prison.—The Word Not Bound.

It was Paul's comfort, while suffering trouble as an evil-doer, even unto bonds, that the gospel was still at large, and pursuing its unfettered mission of mercy to the world. He was shut up, and his hand was heavy with the chain of a long and cruel captivity; "but the word of God is not bound." All did not depend on him. There were others at liberty, and proclaiming the story "of Jesus and his love." The seed which he had sown was springing up, and the movement which had received so great a momentum from his personal ministry was advancing, although his presence was withdrawn from the field of conflict. This was taking a humble view of himself, and making an apparently low estimate of his labors, but it was a solace to him in his weary confinement. The consolation would seem to be at the expense of his self-esteem, but he was probably conscious of only the one absorbing desire, that the word should have free course and be glorified. Not bound then, how impossible to bind it now! Now that it lives in every language known to man, and that its sacred truths are in the memory and experience of millions and millions of people! Now that the name of Jesus is loved and adored by some of every nation, tribe and tongue on the habitable earth!

It is one of the severest trials of the Christian to be laid on the shelf and to feel that he is no longer able to engage in active work. To the minister of Christ it is a sad hour when his name, after a long and vigorous career, is taken from the effective list. We have rarely witnessed anything more affecting than the reluctant consent of the aged itinerant to be placed on the roll of the superannuates. There is perhaps a justifiable pride, as well as a laudable ambition, to continue in the forefront of the battle to the very last. To be permitted "to cease at once to work and live" is the cherished hope and prayer of the most devoted servants of Christ. From other causes than old age retirement may be imperatively demanded. Health gives way, and the man of power and vigor is withdrawn from his loved employ while in the noon of his years. Not in the dungeons of Nero, it may be, but in many other ways are God's servants removed from the scenes of their triumphant labor, to wait in patience, and to hear of the battle and the victories in which they can take no active part. "But the word of God is not bound." Their hands may be tied, they can no longer go in the van, and mingle in the onset, but the standard of the cross is being carried farther and higher by others, and the onward march is not retarded by those who may fall in the conflict. Paul doubtless felt, as many a superannuate has felt since, that his case was one of deep trial and affliction, and we can imagine what temptation there was to fret and repine. This forced inaction when there was so much to be done, so many churches needing his presence, and the most of the world still in darkness, and perishing in its sins! To be thus hampered and paralyzed by a tyrant's bonds, and to be little better than dead, though still alive in the world, and apparently so much wanted—here was a peculiar trial of faith, and the severest test of submission.

It should be a thought, as rich in consolation to us as it was to him, that the gospel still speeds on its way, and, though we may be secluded from the stirring and thronged arena, the contest for the world's conversion is being waged with unabated vigor and courage. In spite of the apostle's bonds the word was not bound. In spite of our weak and worn-out frame, and the prison walls, of whatever sort, which hem us in, the truth is free, and no infirmities of sickness or age can abridge its liberty. With the odds against the gospel in the depravity of men, the malignant opposition of infidelity, and the universal prevalence of vice and error, and with this, in addition, that God's embassador is in bonds, still the word is not bound. It has gone forth on wings of light, and defies the powers of earth and hell to arrest its flight or to chain it down. Thankful for the privilege of having done something toward the progress of the gospel, it should inspire a deeper gratitude that Christ can afford to lay us aside, while his cause prospers more than ever.

Another aspect, however, may be given to the subject. Paul's bonds fell out "to the furtherance of the gospel," they were "manifest in all the palace and in all other places." The brethren were stirred up to greater zeal—"waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear." Some of the most precious of the epistles were written in prison, and the prayers of a man, who could for the time do little else, are to be taken into the account. To be retired from active labor in the pulpit and the pastorate, or in the province of ordinary Christian work, is not to be withdrawn from the agencies and forces which are moving the world. The grandest work and the most effective may be that which is done after the body is well-nigh worn out, and the name stands no longer among the strong and active laborers in the gospel field. Prayer and example, in themselves alone, are among the silent and unobtrusive, but at the same time the mightiest influences in the universe. The church owes much to her aged and suffering members not only for what they have done, but for what they are doing. The message is not bound because the messenger has been remanded to prayer and seclusion. Those who are regarded as laid aside are called to another work, and their testimony and cry are like those of the souls under the altar. In some respects the gospel triumphs by what might seem to be its defeat; and the word runs swiftly because the beautiful feet, once winged and lithe on the mountains, are galled and crushed by the stocks and fetters of affliction. This is the point of resignation, and more, of joyous content, that the word of God is not bound. The believer's soul is wrapped up in the success of the gospel. Through suffering and poverty, and even death, he lives and triumphs if the gospel has free course.

A Terrible Thing in England.

Sion College is an Anglican and religious institution, wherein the bishops and clergy of London periodically assemble, listen to a paper or lecture, and then discuss the same. There were on this last occasion about one hundred and fifty of the most eminent prelates and clergymen present, and also a sprinkling of scientific men, among them Tyndall, who is very often, like a certain personage in the Book of Job, present when the holy ones come together. Dr. Carpenter took for his theme the "Reign of Law," and his treatment of it gave rise to a sensation—I may almost say a scene—of nearly a fearful character! It has been hushed up here; no paper would dare to face the ecclesiastical scandal which would be caused by its publication. Dr. Carpenter cast utterly aside the Duke of Argyll's accommodation of the reign of law to theological exigencies, and maintained that nature represented a kingdom of orderly evolution, which had never been invaded by anything arbitrary, preternatural or supernatural; and his address ended by the emphatic declaration that all the liturgies, litanies, collects and prayers that were ever uttered never had influenced—never could influence—the course of this universe, nor mankind, nor a single individual, in the least degree.

There was a terrible silence when the doctor sat down. Presently there arose a prominent London clergyman, who said that if he believed the declaration just made he would ascend his pulpit next Sunday only to announce that the church would be forever closed from that hour. Then he sat down and another painful silence occurred. All eyes were turned upon the tall, thin doctor with an intellectual face, to see what effect the remark would have on him. It had none; he belongs to the school of thinkers whose motto is: "Truth, whatever the consequences." Then one after another the clergymen arose, and there was a hurricane of stormy protests. The amount of them was: "This cannot be true, for it would close our prayer-books." Carpenter seemed to be unmoved even by this argument. But when the rest of the company had exhausted themselves Prof. Tyndall arose, and, with a slow and solemn voice, said:

"I am speaking to men of education and men of learning—to men who have studied in universities, and have read history and observed the course of nature—and I feel constrained to ask you as gentlemen of culture whether it is really possible that you can have any belief in the efficacy of prayer to affect this universe in the slightest degree?

This is in Sion College. This to a hundred and fifty clergymen who read prayers every day! Their breath was fairly taken away. Only one seemed to retain enough to falter out a motion for adjournment, which was adopted in mournful silence.—Cincinnati Commercial London Letter.

REMARKS.

1. We must make some grains of allowance for the animus of the author of the above, as he evidently has very little sympathy with these clerical gentlemen in their embarrassment—hardly enough to do them justice.

2. Carpenter and Tyndall evidently knew their men. A more helpless and defenseless company than this, under the circumstances, could hardly be found in Christendom—men accustomed to do their praying in forms of prayer centuries old, going through these forms from year to year, and from youth to age, without variation or addition, without ever expecting or even believing in a sensible, demonstrable answer to their prayers, or ever expecting to be called upon to test or verify the efficacy and utility of their petitions, they were completely at the mercy and in the power of their opponents.

They could not cite a single case of special and specific answer to prayer; they had believed in general, imperceptible effects, incapable of proof, and so, when really brought face to face with the question of proof, they felt their helplessness and were in utter confusion.

They had not even self-possession enough to call upon Carpenter or Tyndall to explain what they meant by the "course of the universe," but retired and left the field entirely to the foe, remarking in the saddest tones, as they did so: "If this be true, it would close their prayer-books." Disastrous! Why, if the prayer-books should be closed these poor men would have to go to praying. Then they might learn what New Testament piety was.

But what better could any set of prayer-books do? Who will answer? Can any man cite one single case—one indubitable case—of special answer to printed or read prayer? If so, let it be given.

I insist that these men ought to have been able, among them, to present cases of prayer-answers so well authenticated as to silence effectively these infidels. Such cases are not wanting. England's history abounds with them; but they do not come to printed prayers, and so these gentlemen knew little of them. All the true men and women of prayer; they would shrink from no such contest.

3. This case has its lesson for the general church. How much better off than was this pitiable company did the defenders of Christianity in general show themselves to the world when Tyndall put forth his 'prayer test" last year? Did they, with the single exception of the London Recorder, show a willingness to meet his proposition on any grounds or under any modifications? No; but ingloriously retreated under an inapplicable plea of the incomparable nature of things spiritual and things "scientific," leaving all the advantages of a triumph to the enemy. The manner of treating that case had all the moral effects of a defeat upon unbalanced minds. Why was there not in all our Zion magnanimity and thoughtfulness enough in this emergency to consult some Debora under her palm-tree, and learn in what spirit to meet the men who taunt the God of Israel.

It is to me one of the wonders of the age that men who believe in the power, efficiency and wide sweep of prayer, utterly ignore this grand fact in their defenses of Christianity—a fact designed to be the strongest bulwark of the gospel. It shows suspicion. If we really believe in Christianity, as set forth in the New Testament, and demonstrated and illustrated by the true-hearted in all ages, let us stand by it, even at the expense of a reflection upon ourselves. Toning down the gospel to favor current experience is a hazardous business. Pulpit Plagiarism.

The following from the Methodist, under this head, is well put and may be useful. We have known promising young preachers ruined by the practice, and others whose growth and power were arrested by it. The Methodist says:

We fully believe the practice criminal, but, not insisting upon so broad an assertion, it is surely an immense blunder. No person who stands before an audience in another man's shoes can be certain of escaping detection a single hour. Hence he wants composure, confidence, calmness. He cannot do his best, or approach it, under such conditions.

Nor can he fulfill the divine call. If the Holy Spirit ever moved him to preach the gospel, it was because there was something of his own the Spirit could use. The call was for his soul, body and spirit, his manhood his voice, his temperament. There was an angle at which he saw truth, that he could reflect; there were personal modes of thought and expression the Holy Spirit wanted to employ. But, solemnly avowing his call to preach the gospel, the plagiarist proceeds to neutralize his special gifts, to nullify the call of the Spirit by refusing to employ his own powers, and by substituting those of other men. He is thus disobedient to the heavenly vision. He will not suffer the Spirit to use him.

He misses the power of his ministry. The sermons he gives the people may be better, absolutely, than any he can prepare, but they are not so good for him. His life is not in them, and cannot be. He may mouth their sounding sentences, but he cannot make them his. It is the begotten, not the adopted child which is in the father's likeness. Any man can do better with his own than with those of any other man.

He ruins his style. He is one man one week, another man the next. He is South the first Sunday of the month, Barrow the second, the third he roars with Spurgeon, the fourth adopts the conversational method of Newman Hall; he opens the next month with Robertson, then assumes the glitter and elaborate style of Bascom, attempts the description of Simpson, and closes with Beecher or Talmage. What personal style can he develop? What costume is he fitting to himself? None. He is a being of slabs, each from a separate quarry, and as diverse as porphyry and gray freestone. Sometimes he puts all these into one sermon. Once we accidentally secured the reading of a skeleton, each bone of which was from a separate grave-yard. It ran about thus:

"Text: Introduction.

See Hall's Sermon on Infidelity, vol. —, page —.

I. The doctrine stated:

See Watson's Institutes, vol. ii, page —; also quote Dwight on the same subject.

II. The application of the doctrine.

1. To the Household. See Bushnell on Christian Nurture. Quote paragraph —, page —.

2. Its importance to the individual.

See Simpson's sermon on —. Quote Beecher on —.

See anecdote from Death-Bed Scenes, etc."

We do not pretend that this is exact, but it does not overstate the patchwork character of the sermon as it was preached in our hearing, for the most part giving no credit to the men mentioned in the brief. Such a man cannot develop a personal style, and for want of it his preaching ceases to be effective.

He arrests growth. Nothing sooner stays mental development than the habit of dependence upon others for the form of presenting truth. This is seen in the quick growth and early stop of "sketch" preachers. Those miserable compilations, "British Sketches," "Pulpit Assistant," "The Homilist," etc., have dwarfed many a young man of great promise. He excited wonder for a little while, but in four or five years had his growth. It may be he read, and even studied, but his new accumulations could not be fitted into the miserable forms by which he had misshapen and cramped his manhood. We heard a preacher of unusual promise once deliver a sermon on: "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." Years passed; he was a close student; he read history, poetry and the classics. We heard him again; it chanced to be on the same text, and the same sketchy sermon. None of his gathered treasures would fit into the forms another had prescribed, and he did not trust himself to change. He was a cultivated slave. This is one incident out of many, and pulpit plagiarism may well be defined: a dishonest expedient by which a man puts an early extinguisher upon his growth.

Consider the danger of detection. It is ever present. Enemies are about; captious critics are ready to make their mocking exposure, and conscientious friends are there who will not consent to be party to deception. There are men in the pulpit to-day whose high position is held at the mercy of kind friends who are too considerate to make an exposure. There are men whose way to prominent pulpits has been hopelessly barred by a detected pulpit theft. It does not pay to take the risk. It costs manly self-respect, costs genuine power, costs personal growth, and holds a man all the time on the threshold of a disgraceful exposure.

But not every coincidence is literary theft. Some of these are so remarkable as to excite wonder. The choice of text and subject may suggest resemblance, but the sinful folly of conscious, unacknowledged appropriation ought not to be charged against any minister without unmistakable evidence.

Another question arises: Given the knowledge that a man is guilty of this wrong, what is duty? We suppose private admonition should be first in order. If that is unsuccessful there should be faithful application of discipline.

Good Advice.

The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church have recently issued an elaborate pastoral address. It closes with the following excellent advice:

Permit us to urge upon you the great importance of family religion. There is reason to fear that there is a falling away in this direction; and yet never was there a time when all the offices of home religion were more needed than now. The skepticism, the worldliness, the fashions of our day, are all powerful in their influence over the young. Temptations to vice and sin, fascinating attractions to amusements and pleasures whose tendencies are all toward evil, the disposition to break away from wholesome restraint and discipline, were never so general and so powerful as in our day. Nothing can meet these evil influences so powerfully and effectually as home religion. There can be no substitute for this. Our excellent Sabbath schools and our facilities for general education must not be allowed to take the place of diligent, prayerful, loving and faithful discipline at home. Let the family altar be erected in every house; let all join in reading the Holy Scriptures and in singing; let the prayer be closed with the Lord's Prayer, all joining in its repetition. Let the religion of the family be cheerful, inviting, gentle and loving. Make your homes attractive, that your children may love them, and not be easily tempted to wander away from them. Exclude from them all vices, all low and vicious literature; provide for your children good, wholesome, interesting reading; teach them to love the church, the means of grace, and to reverence and respect all sacred and religious things; exercise, as in the fear of God, your parental authority in watching over their education, their amusements and their associations; be not seduced into the miserable folly of sending your daughters to Roman Catholic schools. Bring up your children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and God will abundantly reward and bless your care and labor by crowning your age with peace, and making your children both happy and useful in their generation.

Lastly, brethren, we exhort you "to keep yourselves unspotted from the world." We have fallen upon dangerous times. The world is rich and prosperous, and full of seductions and fascinations; the temptations to mere formal and superficial piety, to worldliness and fashion, to mammon-worship, to false maxims and unrighteous principles of life and business, "to foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition," are all about us. Already many, coveting after these things, "have erred from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows." "O, men of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto ye are called; be not high-minded; trust not in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate, laying up in store for yourselves a good foundation against the time to come." "Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you."

DR. LOVICK PIERCE.—It pains us deeply, says the Southern Christian Advocate, to have to announce the serious illness of this venerable and distinguished servant of God. The zeal and fidelity to ministerial engagements, which have characterized his long life, led him to meet the North Georgia Conference at Newnan, but his feebleness was so extreme that he was only able to appear in the Conference-room for a few minutes during one day's session. From Newnan he came to Macon, hoping to attend the sessions of his own Conference, but has been confined to his room during the entire time. We are gratified to be able to report that at this date (Monday evening, December 22) his symptoms are more favorable than at any time since his arrival in Macon, and hopes are entertained that he may rally from the present attack. His brethren, as will be seen from the proceedings of the Conference, testified their undiminished reverence and affection for their aged leader, by returning him at the head of their delegation to the General Conference.

THE VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.—In company with Drs. Young, Green and Stephens, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of December 27, we visited the Vanderbilt University place last week, and were pleased to find that the broad and massive foundations of the main edifice are laid, with the best limestone rock, and the story above is going up fast with the same material. A million or two of bricks are already burnt, and they will be in their proper places in the edifice as soon as the winter is over and gone. A great many ornamental trees have been planted out, fences constructed, etc. Secretary Young keeps the Vanderbilt bureau in fine order. Subscriptions are promptly collected, and payments as promptly made. We are glad that there is one church enterprise that does not seem to feel the panic. The Vanderbilt folks were fortunate in finding quarries of the best stone for building purposes near the premises. Bishop McTyeire, Secretary Young and Architect Smith keep vigilant eyes on every part of the work.

THE Weekly Echo, of Lake Charles, Louisiana, speaks as follows of the Sunday school entertainment of our Southern German Methodists at Lake Charles:

On Christmas night at the German Methodist church, under the management of Rev. William Lieser, there was an entertainment for the special enjoyment of the Sunday school children. An immense audience was present, and Santa Claus appeared in character, and made the children happy with liberal donation. Excellent singing and appropriate declamations added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening. Mr. Lieser and his estimable wife deserve much credit for thus "turning the hearts of the fathers to the children." Their Sunday school has our best wishes.

THE venerable and beloved Henry Behn, the oldest Methodist itinerant minister in the world, will this week celebrate his ninety-ninth Christmas. Two weeks since he officiated at the marriage of his granddaughter, over a half century younger than himself. During the present year he has read the entire Bible through, and nearly every Sabbath in the year has read through the Book of Revelation.—New York Christian Advocate.

TO BRING forward the bad actions of others to excuse our own is like washing ourselves in mud.

West Texas Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The West Texas Conference closed its session last night at eleven o'clock. Bishop Kavanaugh, having held four Conferences in Texas previous to this, was somewhat jaded. Especially very was he on leaving the jolting machine called a hack, by which he was conveyed from Austin to this place. He and Dr. Sargent had innumerable ups and downs on the way. The doctor says: "The trip knocked me up;" and the Bishop confesses to a greater shaking up than he has experienced during the last half century. Verily his reverence was "tossed about," I will not say "by every wind of doctrine," but by the innumerable lurches of the hack aforesaid.

But the Bishop worked like a young man—one who is "strong." He preached twice—about three good sermons in each discourse—and delivered three addresses replete with philosophy and poetry, spiced with nice old Kentucky pleasantry.

Dr. Sargent, whose health is quite feeble, returned to Austin yesterday, and will go thence to Houston. The Bishop left this morning for San Antonio, where he will preach on next Sunday. He will return to Austin, and, after spending some time in Houston and Galveston, will visit some points in Louisiana. The Bishop, following the example of the winged tourists from Boreal climes to the sunny South, will turn his face homeward as spring approaches. His nephew, Rev. Richard Kavanaugh, received an appointment in the Texas Conference at its late session.

The members of the West Texas Conference are a noble set of men. While they have in their bounds a number of important towns and country places, they have also a considerable amount of real frontier work to do. Bro. Potter was appointed assistant agent of the American Bible Society, and will have to travel on wheels through regions of country infested with blood-thirsty Indians. He told me that he would provide himself with a Winchester rifle that would shoot sixteen times without reloading, and also two six-shooters. Bro. Potter is a "mild-mannered man," animated with the spirit of the Prince of Peace; but, if assailed, proposes to "war a good warfare" literally. He is as wide awake, as agile, as strong as an Indian, and will never surrender until he has fired from his pack of Bibles twenty-eight shots unless he can't help it. I count very largely on the good to be done by this heroic brother in supplying the settlers in this molested region with the preached gospel and the Holy Scriptures.

Bro. Klingsbury is on the Uvalde circuit. I heard some of the older brethren arranging to get for him an approved rifle from the armory in San Antonio. He succeeds Bro. Potter on this work, who was shot at twice not long ago. Thoughts of Bros. Potter and Klingsbury will be good medicine for preachers who are sick of "hard circuits."

The amount allowed for the support of the ministry in the Conference, the past year, was about $15,000—about $495 to each preacher—nearly all the members of the Conference being men of families. The amount collected was about $11,000. Not very luxurious living, that, especially when it is remembered that there are very few parsonages in the Conference.

The missionary meeting was made an occasion of great interest by the addresses of Bishop Kavanaugh and Rev. I. G. John. The collection—about $450—was a remarkably good one under the circumstances.

Revs. B. Harris and J. G. Walker were elected delegates to the General Conference, and Revs. W. J. Joyce and J. W. DeVilbiss reserves.

Some increase in the membership was reported, and the church here is on the advance.

The past year has been a very trying one on account of sickness, short crops and the unprofitableness of the cattle trade; but these brethren, willing to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, have gone again to their respective fields of labor, rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. You will get the appointments from another source.

TO THE PRESIDING ELDERS IN THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND ALABAMA CONFERENCES.—Mr. Editor—Will you please allow me, through your paper, to request each presiding elder in these Conferences to send me his address and that of each preacher in his district?

MR. SETH ADAMS, who died recently in Boston, left an estate valued at $1,701,000. His will provides for the establishment of a home or hospital for hypochondriacs, to be built within fifteen miles of Boston.

th Georgia Conference.

Says the Southern Christian Advocate:

The report [illegible] committee on education was [illegible] adopted. In connection wit[illegible]port on education Dr. James [illegible] read a communication from the board of trustees of Emory College, announcing the purpose of the board to raise an endowment of $500,000 for Emory College, and also a circular letter appealing to the church for aid in this great enterprise. Dr. Evans lucidly explained the plan of the board to raise the endowment, and expressed his full confidence that not distant years would see the hopes of the board of trustees ripen into glad realization. Bishop Pierce addressed the Conference in behalf of Emory. In reference to his agency he said he had, during the year, collected in cash and subscriptions about $30,000, expected to make it $50,000 by the meeting of the General Conference, which was the amount needed to erect the desired buildings. In reference to the endowment he said that it was practical; would be 'raised; board meant to do it; not all at once, but time will see it done. He said: "We are waxing stronger and stronger—growing, expanding, and can afford to wait." The Conference passed resolutions expressing gratification at the purpose of the board of trustees of Emory College to raise an endowment of $500,000. Dr. Boring spoke eloquently in favor of denominational schools. Other speeches were made, in which reference was made to the various institutions under our fostering care. Conference requested the chair to appoint the usual visiting committees.

The statistical secretary made his report, which was adopted. The white members are 47,396—an increase of 1,249; infants baptized, 1,179—increase of 49; adults baptized, 2,800—increase of 159; Sunday school officers, teachers and scholars, 27,644—increase of 384; churches, 591—increase of 4; value of churches, $668,-37—increase of $28,874; sittings, 170,-87—increase of 6,304; for building and repairing churches, $57,893—decrease of $23,719; for pastors, $73,430—increase, $80; for presiding elders, $10,207—decrease, $143; for Bishops, $1,936—increase, $102; Conference collection, $5,472—increase, $195; missions, $7,219—increase, $637.

On Sermonizing.

Dr. Lyman Abbott gives these excellent suggestions:

Ministers study too much the form of their discourses. By striving to present their thoughts in a formal and logical manner they deprive them of vivacity and naturalness. How many people in an ordinary congregation follow the logic of a sermon? It is generally safe to presume that the way in which the theme first suggested itself to the minister's mind is the way in which it will most readily find entrance into other minds. Second thoughts are not always the best thoughts. How often a clergyman is filled with enthusiasm for a theme as the Bible or his parochial experience has first suggested it to him; but his enthusiasm dies out as he writes the sermon. What he thought was a grand theme sinks into insignificance; what he thought was full of life and juice becomes, even to him, dry and dead in preaching. "I thought," he says to himself, "that this idea was going to make a fine sermon, but somehow it did not." He has spoiled it in preparation. He has cooked it too long. There are some sermons that are like French soups—they must simmer a long while over a slow fire to be good. There are others that are like a cup of tea—long cooking spoils them. They must be taken at the first effusion.

There is one rule that is worthy of universal adoption by all sermonizers. But it is so because, if sermons were uniformly conformed to it, there would be no uniformity in them. Indeed it is not a rule at all; it is a principle. It is better stated as a fact than as a law: Good sermons are never made; they grow.

ANDREW FULLER AND THE CLOSE-POCKETED MERCHANT.—The Rev. Andrew Fuller, who was the first secretary of the English Baptist Missionary Society, happened to visit Rochdale when the Rev. Thomas Littlewood was pastor of the Baptist church there. The fame of this distinguished preacher for the mission preceded him. A Rochdale gentleman was very anxious to hear him, but the idea of the collection somewhat chilled the fervor of his curiosity. It did not, however, extinguish it. He eventually accompanied a friend to the place of worship. On his way he said: "I want to hear Mr. Fuller, but I shall be proof against all his appeals for my money. I have come intentionally without a farthing in my pocket." Both listen with interest to the attached friend of Pearce and Carey, of Marshman and Ward, as he chooses for his text: "Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord; curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Judges v, 53. Slowly the words are read by the sonorous voice of the great preacher, and solemnly they fall on every ear. Their portentous meaning is being elucidated. All eyes are riveted on the pulpit, and as particular after particular of the discourse is being clenched with the terrible anathema of the text on every indifferent to the cause of God, empty-pocketed gentleman looks uneasy. He at length can bear no longer. In anxious tones he whispers to his friend: "Have you a pound? Lend it to me." The money was lent, and shortly afterward found its way into the plate.

SUBMARINE LANDSCAPE.—When the sea is perfectly clear and transparent it allows the eye to distinguish objects at a very great depth. Near Mindora, in the Indian ocean, [illegible] spotted corals are plainly visible [illegible] twenty-five fathoms of water. [illegible] crystalline clearness of the Caribbean sea excited the admiration of Columbus, who, in the pursuit of his great discoveries, ever retained an open eye for the beauties of nature. "In passing over these splendidly adorned grounds," says Schopf, "where marine life shows itself in an endless variety of forms, the boat, suspended over the purest crystal, seems to float in the air, so that a person unaccustomed to the scene easily becomes giddy. On the clear, sandy bottom appear thousands of sea-stars, sea-urchins, mollusks and fishes of a brilliancy of color unknown in our temperate seas. Fiery red, intense blue, lively green and golden yellow perpetually vary; the spectator floats over groves of sea-plants, gorgonians, corals, alcyoniums, flabelliums and spouges that afford no less delight to the eye, and are no less gently agitated by the heaving waters, than the most beautiful garden on earth when a gentle breeze passes through the waving boughs.—The Sea and Its Wonders.

MARRIED.

IN THE active pursuit of pleasure or gain the inestimable blessing of health is too often forgotten until disease is firmly seated, and the fact only realized by great bodily and mental suffering. The Liver is the vulnerable point in most persons, and the disarrangement of the organ involves a most the whole system; hence the reason why, under Liver disease, there is enumerated such a number of afflictions, and we claim the Simmons Liver Regulator to be a remedy for them all. jn8 1t

A BOX of Liver Pills, free of charge, inclosed in the wrapper with every bottle of Kress Fever Tonic, and sold by Frederickson & Harte and E. J. Hart & Co., on the warrant of the proprietors that this Tonic will cure Fever and Ague, Chill and Fever, Dumb Ague, and all forms of this malady. Go get a bottle and try it. There is no arsenic, no strychnine nor any other poisonous property in the medicine. It has been tried for the last ten years in Indiana and Illinois, and is a success. dec12m

CLARKSVILLE FEMALE ACADEMY,

CLARKSVILLE, TENN.

The next term of this Institution will begin JANUARY 19. A full corps of experienced Teachers, every department thoroughly furnished, ample grounds, comfortable buildings, excellent boarding arrangements, moderate charges and thorough training give as many advantages.

Clarksville is remarkable for its health. We had no cholera last summer, nor are we subject to epidemics.

The President, Rev. J. M. WRIGHT, has spent his life in the school-room.

Bishop Pierce says: "I have known Rev. J. M. Wright for years, and have always had a high opinion of him as a Christian man, a scholar, a preacher and a teacher. I take pleasure in commending him to public confidence and patronage."

Bishop McTyeire, in a letter to one of the Trustees, says, "I know him; and when you do you will agree with me in a high verdict in his favor as a Christian man, a scholar and an educator. He takes to teaching as a duck to water; he pursues it conscientiously, and what is so done is thoroughly done. I have great hope of your people, and am confident of the Rev. Wright's success."

Bishop Paine says: "I have known Bro. J. M. Wright for several years as a minister of our church and President of Athens Female Institute, and most cordially congratulate the friends and patrons of Clarksville Female Academy in having secured him as its President, believing that its education, options to largest instruction, his administrative capacity, combined with gentleness of manner and purity of character, eminently fit him for that delicate and responsible office."

The Memphis Appeal says: "Clarksville Female Academy is an institution unsurpassed by any in the South. The city of Clarksville is one of the most delightful places in the Union, occupying, as it does, a romantic and healthy site, and possessing for a community noted for its social elegance, culture and morality. We cheerfully commend the Clarksville Female Academy to the patronage of parents who wish their daughters to enjoy the best of educational advantages."

THE FAVORITE HOME REMEDY.

—IT IS—

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver diseases most prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE

is eminently a Family Medicine; and by being kept ready for immediate resort will save many an hour of suffering, and many a dollar in time and doctors' bills.

After over forty years' trial it is still receiving the most unqualified testimonials to its virtues from persons of the highest character and responsibility. Eminent physicians commend it as the

MOST EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC

for Constipation, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, bad taste in the mouth, Bilious attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, despondency, gloom and forebodings of evil, all of which are the offspring of a diseased Liver.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion it Has No Equal.

It is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world. Manufactured only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO., Macon, Ga., and Philadelphia. Price, $1. Sold by all druggists. se25 1y

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY and STRENGTHEN

At One and the Same Time.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is which purifies the blood and removes all corrupt matter and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a strengthening purgative and a purifying tonic.

DR. TUTT'S PILLS are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping or debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

ROBBIE'S "HAPPY NEW YEAR."

BY S. M. WALSH.

"I'm just free years old and a half, sir,
And I peak just as p'ain as can be;
And I'm doing to tell you what happened
When 'Happy New Year' came to me.

"I had lots of p'esents for Kissmas;
I had a nice big 'Noah's Ark;'
Wild cows, sheeps and pussy-cats in it,
And doggies what never would bark.

"There were effalunts, lions and camels,
And birds what would 'tand on their toes;
I wish there'd been some c'ockadiles—
But they'd a 'karsd Noah, I 'pose.

"Well, they told me, the night before New Year's,
That Santa Claus wouldn't come down;
And they tucked me away in my cribbie,
All wrapped in my long white night-down.

"In the morning I woke up kite early;
For I heard kite a noise—seemed to me;
So I peeked frough my cribbie, and litteneď,
As kiet, you know, as could be.

"And there was my g'andma a sittin',
With somefin' done up in her lap,
And papa was laughin' kite softly,
And mamma was taking a nap.

"Then papa, he took me to g'andma,
And what do you fink I did see?
A baby just comed down from hebben,
To keep 'Happy New Year' wid me.

"So now you may have all my Kissmas—
My nice 'Noah's Ark,' and the rest;
I shan't play wid p'aystugs no longer,
For I like baby-sister the best!"

The Young Fir-Tree.

A PARABLE.

It was winter. The snow whirled through the streets and alleys, and fell heavily upon every surface, narrow and broad, till the wind chased it away, in order to heap it up still thicker in other places. The window-panes were covered with frost, although the rich people did not spare the wood in stove and fireplace; and whenever a little child wanted to see how it looked outside, then the warm breath had to thaw away the frost-flowers and the little finger enlarge the place before its curiosity was satisfied. Yes, it froze so that it cracked, and the people all walked and ran as quickly as if they had been in the very greatest hurry. The men who were shoveling snow in the streets grew dreadfully cold, although they had on great warm mittens, and they beat their strong arms about their bodies to keep themselves from freezing.

And how cold looked the poor little noses of the children who wanted to get at least a sight of the Christmas market—of the lovely, splendid, party-colored things which they dared not even hope to have for their own! They could not possibly let the cold drive them away, in order, like the children of well-to-do parents, to wait at home, in warm rooms, for the Christmas gifts; for they might, indeed, never come. Yes, the poor little noses and hands were blue enough, and the little feet stumbled here and there; but the eyes got a peep at the bright tin toys, at the beautiful puppets, and the little horses which drew real little sleds with soft cushions. How sweet tasted to them, in thought, all the nice titbits and spiced cakes which were hanging and lying about! Ah! you poor little freezing dears! But the Christchild was born for you also.

Here and there lamps and candles were already lighted in the shops, for the winter day soon makes room for the evening. Outside, in the woods, it was already quite dark, and the sky looked as if it had been swept and had become higher and more transparent; and one by one the stars came out bright and clear, and shone upon the snow-covered fields and upon the frozen lake, which looked like lead. The tired trees drooped their slender boughs and the forest slept. Only a few young fir-trees were still heard whispering together, for they dared not speak aloud, lest they might disturb the repose of many a venerable old tree-trunk in their neighborhood. But, if we bend our ear a little nearer, we may easily hear their conversation.

"Oh! that the morning would dawn!" said a young, slender fir, who held her little head quite erect, as if yearning toward heaven. "The blessed morning! Ah! that we only knew that we were worthy to adorn the holiest night of all!"

"Yes, if it only might happen to us all," echoed the other young trees. "Oh! that the morning would dawn!"

Only one of them, fretful and displeased, shook his head, and said scornfully and angrily:

"I, for my part, do not congratulate myself for such a future. Shall I just for this end my young life, that a few naughty children may romp for a little while about my lights, and, when all is ended, to be thrown behind the stove, to die at last in its flames? Beautiful life, that! And from my heart I do not grudge it to you! But spare me from it. My wishes are of another and better kind. It is bad enough to be born ugly fir-trees, with the hateful sharp needles with which I am vexed every day. So I will, at least, be the greatest and most beautiful among all my comrades; and, as now my wishes and thoughts are far higher than yours, so some time shall my top tower above you and proudly look down upon you, who want nothing better than the pitiable lot of dying as Christmas-trees."

A shudder ran through the young twigs of the tree at such words, and the slender fir, who had first spoken, felt, indeed, that an answer was needed to this sinful, daring speech. And it might be because she was the most courageous-hearted among the group. At any rate, she began, with trembling lips:

"We do not think as thou dost. We do not wish to have anything in common with your thoughts and wishes. Blessed shall be each one of us who shall burn to-morrow in honor of the Redeemer, and shall be allowed to beam his love into the hearts of the innocent children. We wish nothing but to live and die for it. Is it not true, my brothers and sisters?"

"Yes, yes," all voices sounded, far and near; and the murmuring fir-tree shook his branches, as if he were shrugging his shoulders at her who had just spoken, and found it beneath his dignity to enter into any further conversation.

But in the east the sky was already tinged with the first streaks of rose and purple; a gentle wind came through the wood and stirred the branches of the trees, shook down the snow, and awakened the sleepers. Now the forest was all overflowed as with gold; the frosty branches shone and sparkled like jewels in the rising sun; and in the midst of the fresh, green fir-wood stood the Christmas angel, and consecrated the young trees who should glorify the most sacred birthday festival which the children of men can celebrate. I saw the young heads bowed, full of humility and joy; but I saw also how afterward they looked in amazement and awe toward one of their group who stood among them, only a few hours before, green and flourishing, and was now dry and withered.

It had happened to each according to the goodness of his heart. That which was life to one was to the other death. When, toward noon, the woodcutters came to fetch the Christmas-trees for the evening, they chopped the withered scoller into pieces, and kindled a fire, and warmed by it their mid-day meal. But the others saw around their green, glittering tops many faces of rejoicing children, many loving parents' eyes beaming with feeling, and heard the Christmas hymns sung to the little Christ Child.

I found also again in joy those little red noses and blue hands of the Christmas market, because gentle, kind-hearted people had here and there lighted for them a little tree, so that they also might learn to rejoice and have a share in the happiness of the whole world.—Ladies' Repository.

IS THERE ANY MOTHER HERE?—A little girl once followed the workmen from her father's grounds when they went home to their dinner, because she was very fond of a kind old man who was one of them. When he looked from his door he saw her sitting on a log waiting for him, and invited her to go into the cottage. She looked in, saw the strange faces around the table, and hesitated. When he urged her she raised her sweet little face and inquired:

"Is there any mother here?"

"Yes, my dear, there's a mother here," he answered.

"O, then I'll go in; for I'm not afraid if there's a mother there!"

Her child's experience had told her she could place confidence in a mother's sympathy. A home may be small and mean, but if it is the shrine of mother's love it is a happier place than a palace would be without this blessed presence.

SUNDAY IN THE TEMPLE OF JUPITER.—The editor of the Child's World writes in that paper:

"We spent a Sabbath at Baalbek. There is no Protestant church there. After breakfast we went to a little Greek chapel, but there was nothing in the language or the service that we could understand. Then one of my companions and I went into the Temple of Jupiter, and, sitting down where the altar used to stand, we went through the morning service of the Episcopal Church, and read a sermon there. We both enjoyed that sermon very much. It seemed very pleasant and yet very solemn to hear the words of prayer addressed to the true God in that old temple where Jupiter, the false god, had been so often worshiped. After the service was over we sat and talked about it, and wondered if any two Christian people had ever before united to worship the God of the Bible in that old home of idolatry."

Farm, Garden and Household.

TREATMENT OF BROKEN LEGS.—They have a new way of treating the broken legs of horses which ought to be generally known. A valuable horse in Hartford, Connecticut, had his leg broken a short time since. The leg was carefully set by an experienced surgeon, and was covered thickly with plaster of Paris. When the plaster "set" or hardened it kept the limb as immovable as if it had been made of iron. Thus treated a broken leg, it is asserted, will knit together in a brief time, and become as good as ever.

PLASTER ON CLOVER.—Mr. George Geddes, the well-known New York farmer, in the course of some remarks on the cultivation of clover, concludes with the following excellent advice: "I add one thing as perhaps of more importance than anything I have said. Red clover, large or small, should have frequent dressings of finely-ground plaster, applied on the young plants soon after they commence their growth, and immediately after moving a crop of hay, to start a vigorous growth, either for a seed crop or for pasture."

EARLY CABBAGE.—The Pacific Rural Press says: "Take a large head of cabbage, strip off the outer leaf and slip off the bud found at the root of the leaf. Take this bud and simply set it in rich dirt, like any other plant. The result of this will be a true growth of early cabbage-plants, with heads larger and sounder than can be raised in the ordinary way."

A GREAT DEAL of time is contracted in opportunity, which is the flower of time.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1873.

Faculty.—REV. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law; REV. A. B. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science; G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages; T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science; REV. R. D. NORTHWORTHY, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $60; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including bedding, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $15 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its liberal and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic fondness for books. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—Its Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the second instant:

Lake	3,970
Arkansas	1,821
Tennessee	1,694
Mobile	513
Texas
Total	37,322

On Saturday the market opened with a very good supply, but operations were checked by the poor assortment offering and light offerings of desirable kinds, after which, although parties came together more freely, the movement showed only a moderate degree of animation, notwithstanding which the sales embraced 8,150 bales. The lower grades exhibited increased irregularity, with a manifest tendency in favor of buyers, while the better qualities, from their scarcity and being in request, ruled at prices indicating an advance of about ⅛c. Ordinary sold at 11¼, 11⅜@11⅝c., strict ordinary at 12⅛c., strict ordinary to good ordinary at 12⅜c., good ordinary as low as 13c., and as high as 13⅜c., strict good ordinary at 14⅛c., low middling at 14⅜, 14⅝, 15c., ruling toward the close at 14⅞@15c., strict low middling to middling at 15⅞@16c., and middling at 16⅛@16⅜c. On Monday we noticed a fair inquiry in the opening, but operations being restricted by light supplies of desirable lists, and buyers claiming concessions on the poorer qualities which factors would not submit, the sales during the morning were of limited extent, after which parties came together more freely, and the movement became quite active, resulting in sales of 9,200 bales. On Tuesday the demand was less active, and operations being, moreover, checked by scant supplies of the better qualities and the stringent pretensions of factors for those descriptions, the business was confined to 4,250 bales. Prices exhibited some irregularity, the lower grades, in fact all descriptions below low middling, ruling in favor of buyers, while the better qualities were firm, with a tendency to outside rates.

The above makes in aggregate for the past three days of 22,600 bales, against 27,550 for the corresponding time last week and 32,750 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 399,692 bales, against 508,156 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 84,470 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 51,974 to Great Britain, and of 13,710 to France, and a decrease of 61,115 to other Foreign ports. We quote:

Low ordinary	9¾ @ 10
Ordinary	11 @ 11¾
Strict ordinary	12 @ 12⅝
Good ordinary	13 @ 13¾
Strict good ordinary	14 @ 14¾
Low middling	14⅞ @ 15⅛
Strict low middling	15⅜ @ 15⅝
Middling	16⅛ @ 16¼
Strict middling	16⅜ @ 16¾
Good middling	17¼ @ 17½

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, January 8.—The message of the President to the Senate, withdrawing the nomination of George H. Williams to be chief justice, states that it is done at his own request, as Mr. Williams remains in office as attorney general. The nomination of Colonel Bristow for that position, in another brief message, is consequently withdrawn.

The Treasury Department announces that the route for the transportation and exportation of goods in bond from any port of the United States by water to Corpus Christi, and thence overland by way of Rio Grande City to Mexico, is reopened.

WASHINGTON, January 9.—Caleb Cushing, of Virginia, is nominated for the office of chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. General Cushing's name first appears on the roll of the Supreme Court in December, 1854, as attorney general under Pierce's administration.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—General Bristow has been tendered the Spanish mission.

The committee on ways and means will report adversely on the bill remitting the tax on friction matches.

Representative Lamar, of Mississippi, while at the breakfast table at the Ebbert House, yesterday morning, complained of feeling unwell and soon after rose to leave the room; when near the door he had a paralytic stroke, and would have fallen had not some one gone to his assistance. He was taken to the parlor and afterward removed to his residence. As this is not the first attack of the kind his friends feared it might prove fatal, but he is reported better and will probably recover.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—The sale of the Independent newspaper was concluded yesterday. H. C. Bowen receives $250,000 for it, of which $75,000 is in cash. The purchasers are the proprietors of the Christian Advocate.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 10.—In the Constitutional Convention to-day the committee reported an article to give the right of suffrage to women. The article is to be submitted to a separate vote of the people. The convention refused to adjourn over until Tuesday to attend the inauguration of Governor Allen at Columbus.

GALVESTON, Jan. 10.—A San Antonio special of the sixth, to the News, says it is positively known that General Augur, commanding the district, has no instructions in regard to the late action of the Supreme Court from higher authority. General Augur gave his impression that the military would not interfere.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Jan. 10.—The steamship Sherman, from New York for New Orleans, sprung a leak on Tuesday, at two P. M., and sunk on Friday in ten fathoms of water, twelve miles south of Little river bar. The captain, crew and all the passengers were saved, also a considerable portion of the baggage and cargo. The steamer was owned by Frederick Baker, of New York.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The Hudson river is open to Albany, not a particle of ice being visible. Not a pound of ice has been cut this winter for storing in ice-houses.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The best opinion to-night is that Caleb Cushing will not be confirmed.

The speech of General Gordon in the Senate to-day, on the salary question, was listened to with great attention, especially that portion of it which partook of the nature of a personal explanation, and which referred to the surrender of Lee at Appomattox.

Senator Gordon made it because he said he had been charged with being influenced by personal prejudices against the administration. He said he was one of those who had held a command in the Confederate army when it surrendered to General Grant at Appomattox, until which time he had never known what grief was. The negotiations lasted four days and four nights, and during all that time not one word of exultation escaped the lips of the Federal commanders; in fact, they avoided all conversation relative to the battles in which the Union army had been successful, and spoke only of those engagements in which they had been defeated. He, for one, appreciated such magnanimity; it sank deep into his heart, and he mentioned the fact to prove that he was not personally hostile to President Grant.

GALVESTON, Jan. 12.—The following is a copy of a letter from President Grant to Governor Davis of Texas:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 12, 1874.

To Governor Davis, Austin, Texas:

Your dispatch and letter, reciting the action of the Supreme Court of Texas in declaring the late election unconstitutional, and asking for the use of troops to prevent apprehended violence, are received.

The call is not made in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, and the acts of Congress under it, and cannot therefore be granted.

The act of the Legislature of Texas, providing for the recent election, having received your approval, and both political parties having made nominations and conducted a political campaign under its provisions, would it not be prudent, as well as right, to yield to the verdict of the people as expressed by their ballots.

U. S. GRANT.

MANCHESTER, N. J., Jan. 13.—The engineers on the New Jersey Southern road quit work last evening. All of the new engines are here. There is no disturbance. The strikers seem determined to hold out. There are no trains running on the road.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, Jan. 13.—Both branches of the fourteenth Legislature convened to-day, without opposition from Governor Davis or the Federal authorities. The members of the Legislature, as agreed upon last night, quietly walked up to the capitol and occupied their respective assembly-rooms.

RICHMOND, VA., Jan. 13.—The last ballot for senator resulted: Withers 123, Wickham 6, Lewis 8, Evans 16, Caleb Cushing 1.

FOREIGN.

ST. THOMAS, Jan. 4.—A French man-of-war arrived here this morning, bringing Ex-President Baez, of San Domingo, as a passenger.

When the revolutionists appeared before San Domingo, Baez, seeing that resistance was useless, entered into convention with General Gonzales, the supreme chief of the revolutionists, stipulating that he should be allowed to leave peaceably, and that his friends should be permitted to remain in the country unmolested.

This was agreed to, and the revolutionists entered the capital amid the exclamations of the people. The country is tranquil. Business continues as usual. Gonzales denies having given any orders affecting the Samana Bay Company. On the assembling of Congress the matter of the lease will be calmly discussed.

MADRID, Jan. 6.—The diplomatic representatives of Spain at Paris, Brussels and Lisbon have resigned.

It is reported the government will remove the captain generals of the Philippines, Cuba and Porto Rico. It is possible Jose de La Concha will be appointed captain general of Cuba.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 8.—The Assembly has resumed its sitting. The motion to postpone the bill concerning the nomination of mayors, after violent debate, was carried against the government by 12 majority.

PARIS, Jan. 9.—The Journal Officiel announces that the members of the cabinet have resigned in consequence of the absence from the Assembly of a large number of their supporters, which resulted in the defeat of the government. President MacMahon begs the members not to retire, but to await the vote of confidence which will be passed by the Assembly to-day.

The Assembly to-day, at the request of Admiral Saunet, of the Left Center, unanimously voted to adjourn until Monday. No action was taken on the ministerial question. There was great excitement in the lobby during the brief sitting.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—Dispatches from Madrid report that Serrano will not revoke the Cortes for a twelve month. He will bend all his energies to the suppression of the insurrection and tranquillization of the country, and not until those tasks are accomplished will he summon the Legislature.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—Captain Urquhart, of the American ship Trimountain, has received a handsome testimonial from the city of Bristol, for gallant and humane conduct in the Ville de Havre disaster.

PARIS, Jan. 12.—In the Assembly this afternoon, after a long and violent debate, in the course of which M. Picard bitterly attacked the ministry for its monarchical tendencies, the vote of confidence in the government was sustained. The ministers have, in consequence, withdrawn their resignations.

MADRID, Jan. 12.—Castelar is still in Madrid, watching the course of political events.

MADRID, Jan. 13.—Carthagena has surrendered and is now occupied by the government troops under General Domingues.

Upon the capitulation of the city the Intransigente Junta and liberated convicts went on board the Spanish frigate Numancia, which was attacked by the government squadron, and at the time the last dispatch was forwarded the naval engagement was in progress.

Short Speeches.

One morning a woman was shown into Dr. Abernethy's room; before he could speak she bared her arm, saying: "Burn." "A poultice," said the doctor. Next day she called again, showed her arm, and said: "Better." "Continue the poultice." Some days elapsed before Abernethy saw her again; then she said: "Well, your fee?" "Nothing," quoth the great medico; "you are the most sensible woman I ever saw."

An inquisitive French bishop once caught a Tartar in the Duke de Roquelaire. The latter, passing in haste through Lyons, was hailed by the bishop with "Hi! hi!" The duke stopped. "Where have you come from?" inquired the prelate. "Paris," said the duke. "What is there fresh in Paris?" "Green peas." "But what were the people saying when you left?" "Vespers." "Goodness, man," broke out the angry questioner, "who are you? What are you called?" "Ignorant people call me Hi! hi! Gentlemen term me the Duke de Roquelaire. Drive on, postillion."

Lord Aberdeen, the premier of the Coalition ministry, was remarkable for the little use he made of his tongue. When by way of reconciling him to accompany her on a sea-trip, the Queen smilingly observed: "I believe, my lord, you are not often sea-sick?" "Always, madam," was the brief but significant reply. "But," said her majesty, "not very sea-sick?" "Very, madam," said the uncompromising minister. Wellington, we need hardly say, was not given to use too many words. One example of his economy this way will suffice. The duke wrote to Dr. Hutton for information as to the scientific acquirements of a young officer who had been under his instruction. The doctor thought he could not do less than answer the question verbally, and made an appointment accordingly. Directly Wellington saw him he said: "I am obliged to you, doctor, for the trouble you have taken. Is —— fit for the post?" Clearing his throat, Dr. Hutton began: "No man more so, my lord; I can ——." "That's quite sufficient," said Wellington, "I know how valuable your time is; mine, just now, is equally so. I will not detain you any longer. Good morning!"—Chambers' Journal.

Buying a Horse and a Wife.

Mr. G. Gerard, of Philadelphia, formerly American consul at Cape Town, Cape of Good Hope, communicates to the press the following amusing reminiscences of his African consular experience:

"There is a very singular custom among the farmers—how to get a wife. If you desire to get married you should first make inquiry whether the lady you love has a horse; if so, you must ask her whether she has a horse for sale. If she says, 'No,' then you had better quit the house at once. She does not like you. But if, on the contrary, she says, 'Yes,' it is a good sign, but she will ask you a very high price. If the amount named is paid on the spot the engagement is concluded as fully as if the marriage was consummated by the parties.

"On my arrival at the cape I did not know of this custom. I wanted to purchase a horse, and I was informed by an old Dutch resident that Widow —— had one to sell. I followed the address given, and soon arrived at the door of the widow (who, by the way, was not bad-looking.) I asked her whether she had a horse to sell. She looked at me very sharp; then asked me whether I had some letters of introduction. I said that I was an American consul, and would pay cash for her horse. 'In that case,' said she, 'letters are not necessary.' I paid down the sum demanded; then, after taking a cup of coffee, she sent her horse by her groom, and both accompanied me home. On the road the groom asked me a thousand questions. 'Master,' said he, 'will my mistress go to live with you in town or will you come and live with us? You will love my mistress, for she was very kind to my old master (laughter.) Where will the wedding be?', looking at me and laughing. 'Truly,' I thought, 'the poor fellow has drunk too much or he is an imbecile.' I felt sorry for him.

"When I arrived home I found many people at my door congratulating me not for the horse, but the acquaintance of the widow. 'Truly,' said one, 'you have been very successful.' 'She is very rich,' said another. I really did not know what it all meant, and I began to be very uneasy, when, to my great surprise, a lady alighted on my steps, and at once I recognized the widow! She very coolly asked me when I desired to have the ceremony of the wedding performed. Then, indeed, I fully perceived the scrape in which I was, and told her frankly that it was a horse I wanted and not a wife. 'What,' said she, 'do you mean to act thus to a lady like me? If so, I shall send back for my horse, and will repay you the money.' In a few hours her groom was at my door with the money. I gladly gave back the horse, thankful to have thus escaped. A few weeks after, however, the widow was married; a more ambitious man had bought her horse."

Turkish Sang Froid.

W. R. Gregg, says the New York Observer, an English writer, in a volume recently published by Osgood & Co., Boston, entitled "Literary and Social Judgments," introduces a letter from a Turkish Cadi, which is a perfect self-drawn portrait of a Mussulman. Mr. Gregg says:

The extremes of character in civilized man are to be found in the Asiatic and American—the silent, dignified, placid and stagnant Mussulman, and the striving, pushing, restless, progressive Yankee. Between these extremes lie the easy and joyous Celt, generally contented with the passing hour, but often contented with too little; the stationary and phlegmatic German of the South, cautious, unaspiring, frugal and complacent; the Norwegian, whose life in most things resembles that of his Teutonic brethren; the Swiss, who approximate nearer to ourselves; and finally the British, only a few degrees less ambitious, insatiable, unresting and discontented than their western offspring. In the appendix to the second part of Layard's "Nineveh" there is a letter from a Turkish Cadi, so thoroughly Oriental in its spirit, so exactly portraying those peculiar features of character in which the East differs from the West, and so amusingly astounding to men accustomed to look upon exertion, the acquisition of knowledge and the progress of wealth as the great ends of existence, that we cannot do better than quote it. The traveler had astonished the weak mind of his Mussulman friend by applying to him for some statistical information regarding the city and province in which he had dwelt so long as a man in authority. The Turk replies with this dignified and affectionate rebuke:

"My illustrious friend and joy of my liver!

"The thing you ask of me is both difficult and useless. Although I have passed all my days in this place, I have neither counted the houses nor have I inquired into the number of the inhabitants; and as to what one person loads on his mules, and another stows away in the bottom of his ship, that is no business of mine. But, above all, as to the previous history of this city, God only knows the amount of dirt and confusion that the infidels may have eaten before the coming of the sword of Islam. It were unprofitable for us to inquire into it.

"O my soul! O my lamb! seek not after the things which concern thee not. Thou comest unto us, and we welcomed thee; go in peace.

"Of a truth, thou hast spoken many words; and there is no harm done, for the speaker is one and the listener is another. After the fashion of thy people, thou hast wandered from one place to another, until thou art happy and content in none. We (praise be to God) we were born here, and never desire to quit it. Is it possible, then, that the idea of a general intercourse between mankind should make any impression on our understanding? God forbid!

"Listen, O my son! There is no wisdom equal unto the belief in God. He created the world; and shall we liken ourselves to him in seeking to penetrate the mysteries of his creation? Shall we say, Behold this star spinneth round that star, and this other star with a tail cometh and goeth in so many years? Let it go! He from whose hand it came will direct it and guide it.

"But thou wilt say unto me, Stand aside, O man, for I am more learned than thou art, and have seen more things. If thou thinkest that thou art in this respect better than I am, thou are welcome. I praise God that I seek not that which I require not. Thou art learned in the things I care not for; and as for that which thou hast seen, I defile it. Will much knowledge create thee a double stomach, or wilt thou seek Paradise with thine eyes?

"O my friend! if thou wilt be happy, say, There is no God but God! Do no evil, and thus wilt thou fear neither man nor death; for surely thine hour will come!

A Card of Thanks.

We, the undersigned members of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, tender our sincere thanks to the steamer Carrie A. Thorn for the generous favor granted us by her of a free passage to Baton Rouge, the seat of Conference; and also hereby commend her, her accommodating captain and gentlemanly officers, to the liberal patronage of the people of north Louisiana.

Musk-Rat Masonry.

As soon as the first frosts are felt the musk-rats select a mud bar, or spot where the bushes grow in the winter, often near lilies—as the root of this plant is a favorite article of food with them—and proceed to lay a foundation for their house. In the first place they gnaw off at the water's edge a quantity of course grasses, rushes and small bushes. Gathering this between the chin and fore-paws, as if carrying the material in their arms, they push it to the place where they intend using it. The place where they have harvested their grass and rushes looks as if some one had mowed it with a scythe. After the musk-rats have brought together material enough to make a solid foundation, and have raised the structure to the water's edge, they dive below and tunnel underneath it, coming up through the middle of the mass. The work is then carried on from the inside; mud, decayed vegetation, moss and other such material are carried through this tunnel and pushed out from the inside until it is raised to the right height and roofed over; or, as Whittier poetically describes it:

"The musk-rat plied the mason's trade,
And her by tier his mud walls laid."

Inside this hillock a small chamber about a foot in diameter is left, and here, within solid, compact walls, sometimes two feet thick, the musk-rats have their comfortable winter quarters.

Their tunnel gives them access to the water when the brook is frozen over. In the winter a rap on this nest will bring one or more of its inmates out, and you will see them scatter away on the bottom of the brook, picking their way among the stones and roots, leaving wherever they go, if the brook is frozen over, a line of bubbles under the ice. When an open space is reached, the creature gently rises to the water's surface, and, just putting the nose and one eye above water, takes an observation and a breath of fresh air at the same time, but instantly dives again.

These nests vary in size, and look quite rough when first built and until the snow and rain smooth them off. If the nest is broken open, they immediately begin repairs, working from the inside. When the meadows and brooks are frozen over the nests appear as if built on the ice, and sometimes, in the late winter or spring freshets, the upper part of the nest is lifted up and moved, which would naturally confirm this impression; but, upon examination, it will be found that the foundation always rests on the solid ground below.—Old and New.

Louisiana Conference Proceedings.

FIRST DAY—JAN. 7.

The Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South held its twenty-eighth session at Baton Rouge, January 7, 1874.

Conference met at the Methodist church, and was opened by Bishop Marvin with the usual religious exercises.

Charles F. Evans was elected secretary, and S. H. Schroeder assistant. The standing committees were constituted by adding four members to act with the permanent chairmen of the same.

Bishop J. C. Keener was introduced to the Conference.

Communications from Dr. T. O. Summers, J. B. McFerrin and A. H. Redford were received and referred.

The report of the trustees of the New Orleans Methodist Depository, the report of the board of managers of Mansfield Female College, the report of the publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the report of the trustees of Pierce and Paine High School were read and referred.

Rev. Felix G. Hocutt, transfer from the Northwest Texas Conference, was introduced.

On motion Conference resolved to sit with open doors, and that each preacher report his collections when his name is called.

The twenty-first question was taken up, and Conference proceeded with the examination of character.

SECOND DAY—JAN. 8.

Conference met at ten o'clock. Religious exercises by Rev. Baxter Clegg, after which Bishop Marvin took the chair.

The report of the trustees of Homer College was read and referred to the committee on education.

A telegram from the trustees of Homer College, dated January 5, 1874, was read and referred to the committee on education.

The report of the financial secretary of Homer College was read and referred to the committee on education.

On motion of Linus Parker Conference recommended the reappointment of Patrick Lane to the Baton Rouge Institution for the Education of the Blind.

The twenty-first question was resumed.

Question 18—Who are superannuated? The names of John S. Davis, Henry C. Thweatt, Alnarin G. Miller, William E. Doty, Edwin W. Yancey, Philo M. Goodwyn, Joel Saunders and Fisher T. Rawson were called and continued in superannuated relation.

Question 1—Who are admitted on trial? William Lieser, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of German charges of New Orleans district; Eugene G. Miller, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Baton Rouge station, New Orleans district; Alfred Elihu Clay, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Felicity Street station, New Orleans district; John Talbott Sawyer, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Felicity Street station, New Orleans district; William R. Whatley, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Centerville circuit, Alexandria district.

Question 7—Who are the deacons of one year? Answer, Philip Allen.

Question 4—Who are admitted into full connection? Answer, Christina Keener, Samuel H. Schroeder and Enos B. Foust.

On motion of Thomas J. Upton the name of W. P. Kimball was substituted for that of Joel T. Daves, sent to Mexico, and R. W. Flournoy for that of Nehemiah A. Travers, transferred to Texas Conference, in the board of trustees of Homer College.

THIRD DAY—JAN. 9.

Conference opened with religious exercises by Rev. James L. Wright.

Bishop J. C. Keener, president of the board of trustees of Centenary College, read report No. 1, which was referred to the committee on education.

J. E. Cobb presented memorials from the Delhi District Conference, which were read, and on his motion referred to a special committee of three on memorials.

Rev. W. P. Owen, transfer, in elder's orders, from the Tennessee Conference, was introduced to the Conference by Bishop Marvin.

W. H. Leith and Robert B. Downer, of the Mississippi Conference, were introduced to the Conference.

Question 4—Who are admitted into full connection? Answer, Enos B. Foust, Christian Keener and Samuel H. Schroeder were before Conference, and, after being examined by the Bishop, were received into full connection.

Question 20 resumed—Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration? The names of Christian Keener, Enos B. Foust and Samuel H. Schroeder were called, and their characters examined and passed. The name of James M. Franklin was called, character examined and passed, and he was continued in the class of the fourth year.

Ques. 12—What traveling preachers are elected elders? Christian Keener and William F. Alexander.

Ques. 8—What traveling preachers are elected deacons? Samuel H. Schroeder, Enos B. Foust, Thomas E. Webb and Robert S. Isbell.

Question 2—Who remain on trial? The following names were called, characters passed, and their classes fixed, viz.: Robert S. Isbell and Thomas F. Webb advanced to class of third year; Thomas Mullett, J. G. Krauter, J. Shelton White, Jacob D. Harper, Thomas S. Randle, J. J. Billingsley, William Hart, Albert M. Wailes and John W. Hearn advanced to class of second year; William V. Taylor advanced to class of first year.

Question 10—What local preachers are elected deacons? None.

Question 14—What local preachers are elected elders? Samuel E. Hale, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Felicity Street station, New Orleans district; Thomas B. Reneau, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Oak Grove circuit, Delhi district; Alanson W. Moore, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Winnsboro circuit, Delhi district; John A. Monroe, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Calcasieu circuit, Opelousas district.

On motion of G. M. Liverman Conference resolved that the hour of twelve M. on to-morrow be set apart for the election of delegates to the General Conference.

Question 19—What preachers have died during the past year? Joseph D. Adams. The committee on memoirs presented their report through Linus Parker. Affectionate utterances in his praise were indulged in by B. F. White, A. E. Goodwyn, John Wilkinson, Baxter Clegg, Thomas Mullett, William V. Tudor, James A. Ivy and Bishop J. C. Keener, which were followed by prayer conducted by Thomas J. Upton.

President C. G. Andrews, of Centenary College, was presented to the Conference and offered report No. 2 of the board of trustees, which was referred to the committee on education.

FOURTH DAY—JAN. 10.

The report on church publications was presented by the chairman, John Wilkinson, and after discussion was adopted. It was resolved that the preachers, on reaching their appointments, would endeavor to respond to Dr. Redford's proposition by ordering and selling $100 worth of our books.

R. S. Trippett, chairman, presented the report on Bible cause, which was adopted. The Conference pledged itself to co-operate with the Southwestern Bible Society.

Memorials from several Quarterly Conferences were received and referred.

The Rev. Absalom Wright, received from the Baptist Church, was recognized as a local elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The hour previously fixed having arrived, Conference proceeded to the election of delegates to the General Conference, with the following result: Clerical delegates: Linus Parker, John Pipes and A. E. Goodwyn. Reserves: J. E. Cobb, John Wilkinson and Robert J. Harp. Lay delegates: W. H. Foster, W. H. N. Magruder and J. Harvey Brigham. Reserves: J. O. Fuqua, T. B. Reneau and W. H. Drake.

Alexandria was chosen as the place for holding the next session of the Conference.

The Story of a Boatman.

had begun to hope till lately that there had been so much faithful preaching on justification by faith that the Protestantism of England was pretty sound; but I find that there is just as much need for us to go over this first elementary doctrine as for Luther.

Not long ago I was out in a boat at sea, wanting to be a little quiet. I said: "Come now, Mr. Boatman, do you expect to go to heaven?" He looked astonished at the question, and said: "Yes, yes, sir, I do." "Will you tell me why you expect to go there?" He said very honestly: "Well, you see, sir, I am a pretty decent sort of a man. I have brought up a large family; I never was dependent upon the parish; I am not a man as is given to swearing. I don't drink; leastways I have taken too much sometimes; still I am not a drunken man. I pay everybody twenty shillings in the pound, and I am a good neighbor." I said: "Is that all?" He said: "No; I go to church, leastways not in the summer-time, for then we have visitors down, who want to go on the water. I am always kind to my neighbors—if any of them wants me to run for a doctor, why, I would get up in the middle of the night to serve them." I said: "Is that all?" He said: "Well, and enough too, I should think." I said: "No, no you are altogether on the wrong track. This is not the way of salvation at all;" and when I began to explain to him something about the doctrines of grace and trust in God, the man looked hard at me; and yet I believe he heard an evangelical minister too; but he had not the idea that we were saved by the doing of another, and not by our own doings—that we are justified by the righteousness of another, and not by our own righteousness.

"Yes," say you, "but he was only a poor boatman." Ay, but the same thing is in all classes of society; this canker of self-righteousness is everywhere; and the ministers of Christ will find it necessary to come back to the old times, and go, he drew once more, and say: "Salvation is not of ourselves; it is the work of God."—Spurgeon.

The Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15, 1874.

For The Advocate.

ON HEARING OF THE SUDDEN DEATH OF MRS. MARY E. McGEHEE, WOODVILLE, MISSISSIPPI.

"The dead"
The only dead are they who change no more,
The only lost—those dwellers on the shore
Of spirits fulfilled.

She's gone!—she's gone to a world of light,
Where scenes beat the burst on the sight
Where waves of true knowledge in glory roll—
The charm of her heart, the joy of her soul!
Where prospects of beauty blend with sublime
Where flowers are fadeless, with colors divine.

No more (to her) the pale autumn leaf,
Its history tells, of seasons so brief,
No early frost, tender blossoms to freeze
To cause the young buds to fall from the trees;
But spring, with its genial, soft, sunny breath,
Gods adieu forever to thee, O death!
For Jesus has died to brighten the tomb,
Dispel all its clouds of darkness and gloom.
By faith in his name is triumph complete—
A passport to reach his own mercy seat.

With the lightning's flash from the savior's throne,
Bright emanations of his glory shone,
Surpassing in splendor earth's fairest scenes,
More brilliant, by far, than the solar beams,
Lost in the vision of Jesus to sight,
She was well prepared for an upward flight.

What music was that which burst on her ear?
She seemed to listen a moment to hear,
As if some angel had come to convey
Her ransomed soul from its prison away.
Touched by its strains of melody sweet,
She felt a desire its notes to repeat.
To join the bright band which had gone before,
Now waiting beside heaven's opening door.

Those forms, those faces familiar on earth—
The sainted friends, from her earliest birth,
Who guided her footsteps in paths of truth,
In search of knowledge, in the days of youth,
And that love of culture, with thoughts refined,
Which so distinguished her beautiful mind.

O! what a group was seen gathering there,
To bid her welcome to a clime so fair—
To a city, whose streets are paved with gold,
And beautiful gates of pearl to behold.
For the pure in heart to find entrance there,
The love of Jesus forever to share.
No need of the sun to shine there by day,
Nor the moon the stars their light to display:
For the balmy breath of its blest atmosphere
By Jesus inhaled is made ever clear.

S. H. T.

To the Members of the Alabama Conference,

ESPECIALLY THOSE OF THE MOBILE, DEMOPOLIS, GREENSBORO AND SELMA DISTRICTS.

Dear Brethren: The necessity of a thorough and Christian education is a fact which, in this age of enlightenment, needs no argument.

Denominational education is also a necessity especially demanded by the exigencies of the times; and we are glad to see that our people acknowledge its paramount importance, and throughout the Conference are working successfully to this end, and placing the advantages of a liberal education within the reach of the masses.

In the Union Springs district the Greenville Collegiate Institute, under the direction of Bro. Urquhart, has been put into successful operation.

The Marianna District High School, with Bro. Phillips at the head, will soon open to supply a growing want in that populous region.

The Alabama Conference College, at Tuskegee, is well sustained by the Montgomery district and surrounding country. And now, having been appointed by the Alabama Conference agent for Centenary Institute, Summerfield, Alabama, I proceed at once to my work, and call upon the above-named districts to rally to the support of Centenary, our only hope west of the Alabama river.

This institution, brethren, has peculiar claims upon you; and while in other portions of the Conference the friends of the church are engaged in the laudable enterprise of establishing district schools, that shall become educational centers, the sources of culture and refinement to their respective sections, it is manifestly your duty to stand by your own section, and help to sustain this institution, which for thirty-two years has been in successful operation, supplied your every want in this particular, and even now asks for no money or endowment, only your patronage, to maintain the prestige and power it has possessed for the last quarter of a century.

We are well aware that, owing to the pressure of the times and the various calamities that have befallen the people of central Alabama, the education of your children has become more difficult than formerly. But we propose, as far as we are able, to obviate this difficulty, and to this end the president has reduced the tuition to $50 per session, $25 per term, with no extras, while the best board will be furnished for $14 or $16.

This places the facilities of a thorough and Christian education within the reach of all; for no institution is more able to bestow this boon upon its pupils than old Centenary. The present laborious president,* Bro. McVoy, has renovated the entire building and premises, and at a very heavy expense, making College Hill a "thing of beauty."

He has engaged an efficient corps of teachers, is prepared to increase it as the number of pupils may demand, and can promise all that is necessary to the health, comfort and thorough education of the young ladies committed to his charge.

The male department is in a separate building, and the able principal, Prof. Massey, is well known throughout the State. He is doing a great work for the church, and deserves your hearty co-operation and support. As to the religious interests of the students, this will be diligently cared for by the principals, and the Rev. R. S. Woollard, our most excellent pastor. In connection with these Dr. A. H. Mitchell, Charles Snider and William A. Edwards, all honored members of the Alabama Conference, who make their homes here, will work together for the good of all children attending Centenary. At the opening of the present session we labored under many disadvantages. The prevalence of yellow fever along our thoroughfares, the quarantine of the city of Selma, together with the financial crash that fell like an incubus upon our people, prevented the schools from attaining that degree of prosperity which we desire and propose. But the storm is over, and "Centenary, with her seventy or eighty pupils," has breasted the waves, and still lives to bless the church and the world.

The evil indications are passing away. New patrons in hopeful numbers are entering the field, and we hope the old will now renew their assistance.

These are causes of gratitude and grounds of encouragement; and now for the members of the Conference or the laity to despond in feeling, or relax in effort or zeal, would be criminal indeed. We have but little local patronage, and while our boarding department is now equal in numbers to that of any Southern female college, we are desirous of seeing the number doubled at the opening of the next term, February 1. Will the preachers of the Alabama Conferences present and urge the claims of this old Conference institution upon their respective charges? And, dear brethren, send us your own sons and daughters, whose tuition is paid in every department. For further information address the principals or

A. J. BIGGS, Agent.

Using Other Churches.

MR. EDITOR: The frequent application of ministers and people for the use of houses of worship of other denominations has led me to the following reflections: That while we are taught, both by the word and spirit of God, to be kind, courteous, charitable, to love as brethren, still we are also admonished to follow after the things that make for peace. Now we believe that God has permitted, in his wise providence, for good and wise purposes, that his church differ in their ecclesiastical and minor doctrines, that it may lead to different organizations, holding the same fundamental truths, that each may provoke or stir up the other to more activity, that the great work of salvation may go forward to speedy consummation; but in order that we all co-operate, and still live in peace and love, each sect or branch of this family have their own residence or house of worship, that they may, unembarrassed, exercise their own government, use their own ritual, sing their own hymns, administer the sacraments in their own way, and, above all, to preach the gospel as they comprehend or understand it. But it is right and proper that all agree to differ in these minor matters, and still aid each other by visitation and interchange of religious views and experience, and social worship of a common Savior, still to remember Christian etiquette and that we are at our brother's house, and that we are not to set up our government in another's house; for we have learned, by sad experience—by erecting union churches, so called—that two families cannot live harmoniously together and exercise two distinct governments. So it is in civil, political and military matters. Now if we wish to organize where we have no house, we search out the court or school-house, dwelling, gin or sugar-house; but if none of these can be had, then we will erect a shed or arbor, or use the shade of a tree, rather than, through delicacy, withhold in another's house some tenet condemned by that family. All Christians agree that we should love, aid, comfort and encourage each other; yet the sentiment prevails, even among Methodists, with all their charity, that it is improper to attempt a regular appointment in the house of another, however closely allied to each other; and that while we desire to co-operate and interchange with our brethren of other churches, our self-respect requires us to refuse the use of our houses of worship to those who will not reciprocate, but who denounce us as no church or ministry.

Yours in Christian charity,

J. NICHOLSON.

Agriculture in Louisiana.

THE OTHER SIDE.

MR. EDITOR: The letters of Agricola upon the agricultural prospects of Louisiana are extremely interesting to every Louisianian who truly desires the prosperity of his native land. We are no agriculturist, it having been several years since we were acquainted with the minutiæ of plantation work. But we have taken every occasion to converse with mature and practical men whom we have met in regard to our future. We have arrived at different results from our friend Agricola. His plans require capital, and skilled labor which is of easy control, to begin with. Now the white people are getting poorer and deeper in debt every year, and the free negro of less account. There is a singular paradox in regard to free negro labor. It is at the same moment the best and yet the worst labor we have or can get. Agricola speaks of adapting the crops to the labor. We cannot conceive of any better crops for free negroes than cotton or cane. A negro has no idea of any system of agriculture except one that will keep him busy from one year to another. Nor can you give him any new ideas, for he is perfectly non-progressive. We admit the feasibility of Agricola's new system if the negro labor could be controlled. The best labor among them consists of the old solid negroes who were taught agriculture under the old regime. The young crop of negroes promises to develop as trifling a race of people as ever lived under the sun. In the eloquent words of Macaulay: "We are raising up under the very banners of civilization as fierce a race of Vandals and Huns as ever marched to the conquest of Rome." The negroes in reality are devouring the country with greater avidity and with much more certainty than a cloud of Egyptian locusts would, though the process is slower, and much more torturing in consequence. Money goes into cotton, cotton into money again, money into bacon, and bacon into negro. The most energetic, prudent and experienced managers find themselves utterly unable to keep a supply of farming utensils. Lay anything away, and they look for it again only to find it gone. Wagons, axes, hoes, gearing, in fact everything, has to be replaced every year, while the stock is gradually perishing, either from neglect or ill treatment. Then the land is wearing out, not from the cultivation, but from the butchery it suffers every year. Our friend Agricola suggests "stock to furnish fertilizers." Cotton-seed is one of the best; but the negro is too trifling to put it on the land. But a man may have stock, and yet what does it amount to. He may have hogs enough to make his meat, and by killing-time they are stolen out of the pen. As to cattle, the beef are killed in the woods, and even milk cows. Cows can hardly be milked, and only then at the expense of starved and beat-up calves. Agricola speaks of fine sheep; but a negro settlement, with the packs of hungry curs they usually keep on hand, would soon thin out the finest flock in the State. To talk about potatoes and fruit is useless. If they do not steal the potatoes in the patch, they will get them out of the pump. We know a lady who had hers under the house, but they poisoned her dog, and in a few weeks the potatoes were all gone. We are acquainted with three old gentlemen, experienced fruiterers, who have orchards, containing hundreds of trees of all varieties, who have the various berries, and one of them a fine vineyard. One has his orchard inclosed with a heavy Cherokee-rose hedge. Their unanimous testimony is that they could scarcely get fruit to eat, much less to sell or to lay up for winter.

Again, stock-raising calls for numerous small pastures, which demand rails. It is useless to say rails to a free negro. He will either refuse, or else demand such exorbitant rates that it is almost bankruptcy to have a fence of any extent. The poorer white people cannot make a living at home for them, and are compelled to make cotton to get money to live on. The only solution to this problem is to get rid of the freedman and his carpet-bag owners. With them, to cultivate cotton, cane or anything else, is certain failure, for their idle habits and thievish propensities would mar any new projects we may start.

The ladies have a proportionate amount of trouble and vexation to get anything done, or to keep everything in the house from being stolen. One lady, and one of the best housekeepers in Louisiana, told us that in spite of all her own and her daughter's vigilance she had lost in small articles over $200 this year, to say nothing of cups of flour, sugar, coffee and stray slices of meat no one could possibly account for. To hire them about the house is to increase debt. To get the services of a cook or housewoman you must feed at least a dozen mouths. The ladies cannot raise any poultry scarcely. If they do not get them off of the roost at night, little negroes around the lots and stables will knock them down and slip them away in the day-time, or steal the eggs. So the negroes are feasting while the ladies are striving to economize. To get washing done is almost impossible, and then at the risk of having clothes stolen.

Just think of two hundred thousand negro thieves, of all ages and grades, preying daily upon Louisiana! And this in addition to the official plunderers. Can it not be better imagined than described? The true question is not, "What shall we plant?" but, How shall we control the negro, or how shall we get rid of him?

PRAIRIE.

GREENSWOOD LA., December 11, 1873.

So Many Calls.

It was a brisk, clear evening in the latter part of December when Mr. Absum returned from his counting-house to the comforts of a bright coal fire and warm arm-chair in his parlor at home. He changed his heavy boots for slippers, drew around him the folds of his evening gown, and then, lounging back in his chair, looked up to the ceiling and about with an air of satisfaction. Still there was a cloud upon his brow. What could be the matter with Mr. Absum? To tell the truth, he had that afternoon received in his counting-room the agent of one of the principal charities of the day, and had been warmly urged to double his last year's subscription, and the urging had been pressed by statements and arguments to which he did not know well how to reply. "People think," soliloquized he to himself, "that I am made of money, I believe; this is the fourth object this year for which I have been requested to double my subscription, and this year has been one of heavy family expenses—building and fitting up this house—carpets, curtains—no end to new things to be bought. I really do not see how I am to give a cent more in charity. Then there are the bills for the girls and the boys; they all say they must have twice as much as before we came into this new house; wonder if I did right in building it?" and Mr. Absum glanced up and down the ceiling and around on the costly furniture, and looked into the fire in silence. He was tired, harassed and drowsy; his head began to swim, and his eyes closed—he was asleep.

In his sleep he thought he heard a tap at the door; he opened it, and there stood a plain, poor-looking man, who, in a voice singularly low and sweet, asked for a few moments' conversation with him. Mr. Absum asked him into the parlor, and drew him a chair near the fire. The stranger looked attentively around, and then, turning to Mr. Absum, presented him with a paper.

"It is your last year's subscription to missions," said he; "you know all of the wants of that cause that can be told you. I called to see if you had anything more to add to it."

This was said in the same low and quiet voice as before; but, for some reason unaccountable to himself, Mr. Absum was more embarrassed by the plain, poor, unpretending man, than he had been in the presence of any one before. He was for some minutes silent before he could reply at all, and then, in a hurried and embarrassed manner, he began the excuses which had appeared so satisfactory to him the afternoon before—the hardness of the times, the difficulty of collecting money, family expenses, etc.

The stranger quietly surveyed the spacious apartment, with its many elegancies and luxuries, and without any comment took from the merchant the paper he had given, but immediately presented him with another.

"This is your subscription to the Tract Society. Have you anything to add to it? You know how much it has been doing, and how much more it now desires to do. If Christians would only furnish means. Do you not feel called upon to add something to it?"

Mr. Absum was very uneasy under this appeal; but there was something in the mild manner of the stranger that restrained him, and he answered that, although he regretted it exceedingly, his circumstances were such that he could not this year conveniently add to any of his charities.

The stranger received back the paper without any reply, but immediately presented in its place the subscription to the Bible Society, and in a few clear and forcible words reminded him of its well-known claims, and again requested him to add something to his donation. Mr. Absum became impatient.

"Have I not said," he replied, "that I can do nothing more for any charity than I did last year? There seems to be no end to the calls upon us in these days. At first there were only three or four objects presented, and the sums required were moderate. Now the objects increase every day; all call upon us for money; and all, after we have given once, want us to double and treble our subscriptions. There is no end to the thing; we may as well stop in one place as in another."

The stranger took back the paper, rose, and, fixing his eye upon his companion, said, in a voice that thrilled to his soul:

"One year ago to-night you thought your daughter lay dying; you could not sleep for agony. Upon whom did you call all that night?"

The merchant started and looked up. There seemed a change to have passed over the whole form of his visitor, whose eye was fixed upon him with a calm, intense, penetrating expression that awed and subdued him. He drew back, covered his face, and made no reply.

"Five years ago," said the stranger, "when you lay at the brink of the grave, and thought that if you died then you would leave a family of helpless children entirely unprovided for, do you remember how you prayed? Who saved you then?"

The stranger paused for an answer; but there was a dead silence. The merchant only bent forward as one entirely overcome, and rested his head on the seat before him.

The stranger drew yet nearer, and said, in a still lower and more impressive tone: "Do you remember fifteen years since—that time when you felt yourself so lost, so helpless, so hopeless; when you spent days and nights in prayer; when you thought you would give the world for one hour's assurance that your sins were forgiven you? Who listened to you then?"

"It was to my God and Savior!" said the merchant, with a sudden burst of remorseful feeling. Oh, yes, it was he."

"And has he ever complained of being called upon too often?" inquired the stranger, in a tone of reproachful sweetness. "Say," he added, "are you willing to begin this night, and ask no more of him, if he, from this night, will ask no more from you?"

"Oh, never, never!" said the merchant, throwing himself at his feet; but as he spoke these words the figure seemed to vanish, and he awoke with his whole soul stirred within him.

"Oh, my Savior! what have I been saying?" he exclaimed. "Take all, take everything! What is all that I have to what thou hast done for me?"—American Tract Society of Boston.

Miles Coverdale's English Bible.

BY REV. WILLIAM S. PLUMER, D. D.

Coverdale was several years younger than Tyndale. He was a native of Yorkshire, born in 1487, a hundred and three years after the death of Wiclif. At the age of twenty-six or twenty-seven years he was ordained. He early and heartily embraced the doctrines of the Reformed. A year after the revised edition of Tyndale appeared, or in 1535, Coverdale published the entire Bible in English. The translation was mainly his own. Four years later he edited the great Bible, which commonly bears the name of Cranmer. In all this work he had the favor of the crown. In 1551, sixteen years after the martyrdom of Tyndale, Coverdale was appointed Bishop of Exeter. But on the accession of "Bloody Mary" he was first imprisoned, then banished. Upon the death of Mary he returned to England, but was not restored to his bishopric. He lived to be eighty-one years old.

The title-page of his Bible, according to the manner of the times, is highly ornamented. The words are:

"BIBLIA THE BIBLE, that is the holy Scripture of the Olde and New Testament, faithfully and truly translated in to Englishe. M.D.XXXV., S. Paul I. Thess. I. Praie for us, that the worde of God maie haue fre passage, and be glorified."

There seems to be no good foundation for the assertion that it was translated out of German and Latin. It certainly differs very much from Luther's Bible and from the Vulgate.

To Coverdale's Bible is prefixed an address to the King and a prologue to the reader. The address to the King opens with a parallel between Caiaphas and the Bishop of Rome, whom he styles Balaam. A sentence will show the style: "These two blynde byssbopes now agree in ye vnderstandyng of theyr prophecies; for Caiaphas taketh Christ for an heretike, oure Balaam taketh the worde of Christ for heresie." He argues from the Scriptures that all subjects ought to obey their monarch, and that the Pope has no right to interfere with the duty of men to their lawful sovereign.

The prologue to the reader contains much that is sensible and pious. It is a call to gratitude and humility in the study of Scripture, accompanied with short remarks on several different books or parts of God's word. At the commencement of each book of Scripture may be found a short outline of the contents of each chapter.

The following is Coverdale's rendering of the fifty-first Psalm:

"Haue mercy upon me (O God) after thy goodnes, and accordinge vnto thy greate mercies, do awaye myne offences.

"Wash me well fro my wickednesse, and clense me fro my synne. For I knowlege my fautes, and my synne is euer before me.

"Agaynst the, only, against the haue I synned, and done euell in thy sight; that thou, mighest be justified in thy saynges, and shuldest ouer come when thou art judged.

"Beholde, I was borne in wickednesse, and in synn hath my mother conceaued me.

"But lo, thou hast a pleasure in the treuth, and hast shewed me secrete wyszdome. O reconcile me with Isope, and I shall be clene; wash thou me, and I shalbe whyter then snowe. Oh let me heare of ioye and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken maye reioyse. Turne thy face fro my synnes, and put out all my myszdedes. Make me a clene hert O God and renue a right sprete within me. Cast me not awaie from thy presence, and take not thy holy sprete fro me. O gene me the comforte of thy helpe agayne, and stadish me with thy fre sprete. Then shal I teach thy wayes unto the wicked, that synners maye be comerted vnto the. Delyuer me from bloodegyltynesse o God, thou that are the god of my health, that my tonge maye prayse thy righteousnesse. Open my lippes O LORDE that my mouth may shewe thy prayse.

"For yf thou haddest pleasure in sacrifice, I wolde gene it the; but thou delytest not in burnt offerynges. The sacrifice of God is a troubled sprete, a broken and a contrite hert o God shalt thou not despise. O be fauorable and gracious unto Sion that the walles of Ierusalem may be buylded. For then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifice of righteousnesse, with the burnt offerynges and oblacions; then shal they laye bullockes vpon thine aulter."

The following is the latter part of the twelfth chapter of Paul's Epistle to the Romans:

"Let loue be without dissimulacion. Hate that which is euell; Cleue vnto that which is good. Be kynde one to another with brotherly loue. In geuynge honoure go one before another. Be not slouthfull in the busynesse that ye haue in handle. Be feruent in the sprete. Applye youre selues unto the tyme. Reioyse in hope, be pacient in trouble. Continue in prayer.

"Distribute unto the necessities of the sayntes. Be glad to harborow. Blesse them that persecute you. Blesse, and curse not. Be mery with them that are mery and wepe with them that wepe.

"Be of one mynde amonge youre selues. Be not proude in youre owne consaytes, but make youre seules equall to them of ye lowe sorte. Be not wyse in your owne opinions. Recompense unto no man euell for euell. Prouyde honestle afore hande towarde euery man. Yf it be possible as much as in you is) haue peace with all men.

"Dearly beloued, auenge not youre selues, but gene rowme vnto the wrath off God. For it is wrytten: Vengeaunce is myne, and I wil rewarde, sayeth ye LORDE. Therfore yf thine enemye hunger, fede him; Yf he thyrst, gene him drinke. For in so doinge thou shalt heape coales of fyre upon his heade. Be not ouercome with euell, but ouercome thou euell with good."

From these extracts, and from other known facts, it is evident that our present authorized version owes much to Coverdale's Bible, even more than to Tyndale's or Wiclif's works.

It greatly added to the success of Coverdale's Bible that he and his publishers were allowed to act openly, and were not hindered by persecution in distributing the word of God for a number of years.

Coverdale's success has an intimate connection with his personal piety. One says: "Others dedicated themselves in part only; he gave himself wholly up to propagating the truth of the gospel."—Christian Intelligencer.

The Fight at the Wood-Pile.

One night at a late hour Dr. Bentley, well known among the clergy of olden time, was disturbed at his studies by a rattling sound among some wood which, sawed and split for his study fire, had been left by the teamsters the afternoon previous, too late to be properly housed. He rose, went cautiously to the window, and saw a woman filling her apron with wood, which she hastily carried away. He resumed his seat and recommenced his study. Shortly after the same noise occurred, and on looking out a second time he saw a similar operation—the woman filling her apron to its utmost capacity. When she had gone he returned to his book, with a tender pity in his heart for a destitution which sought relief in this lonely, dreary, not to say sinful manner. By and by he was startled by a crash of falling wood, and, hurrying to the window, beheld the poor woman casting the very dust of the wood from her apron. He remained motionless, his gentle heart filled with commiseration.

She swiftly departed, and soon returned heavily laden with wood, which she threw on the pile as if it were indeed "the accursed thing." The doctor's compassion and curiosity were now intensely excited. He followed her retreating figure till he discovered her residence, and thus ascertained who she was. What she was was no mystery to him. The last hour had shown him her virtue's lofty height. He called early the next morning on Mr. B., the wood-dealer, and directed him to send a half cord of his best wood, sawed and split, to Mrs. ——, but by no means to let her know from whom it came, which was readily promised. Mr. B.'s teamster, who happened to be within ear-shot, though out of sight, was not so bound, and when he tipped the wood into the poor widow's yard, replied to her eager inquiry who sent it relating the conversation he had overheard.

The conscience-stricken woman, feeling that her sin and her repentance in the lonely darkness of the midnight hour were known and understood by another heart besides her own, hastened without delay to the house of the benevolent man to express her gratitude and her sorrow, and with deep humility and bitterness, told him the temptation which her extreme poverty had induced her, of breaking the eighth commandment. "Sir," she said, "though my house was dark and cold, though my heart was wrung with anguish at the sight of my poor shivering little one, I could not keep it! I could not keep it! My conscience would not let me!" "O no more, my dear madam," said the good man. "I saw it all—I saw you conquer the devil in two fair fights."—Salem Register.

Obituaries.

DIED, at the residence of her step-father, in Baker county, Alabama, September 28, 1873, Miss ALICE HUNT, in her nineteenth year. She possessed rather a superior mind and it was easy for her to grapple with the more solid branches of education, in which she excelled. About four years ago she was converted under the ministry of the Rev. M. Winn. From that time to her death she was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, walking in all its ordinances blameless. Her last sickness was long and painful, which she bore with calmness and patience, as fully resigned to the will of God. As calmly fall to sleep the smiling babe on its mother's bosom, so calmly passed away our sister from earth's sorrows as we trust, to a rest in heaven.

DIED, at the residence of her mother, in Bibb county, Alabama, November 30, 1873, Miss SARAH COX, sister of Amanda Cox, in her twenty-sixth year. Previous to her conversion I never knew a young person so strongly exhibit the Christian graces as she did—patient, meek, charitable and kind—but after her conversion they shone with double splendor. She was converted about eight years ago, under the ministry of the Rev. S. H. Cooper. From that time to her death she was a living epistle of the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, known and read of all; and all might behold in her an Israelite indeed in whom there was no guile. She died as she had lived—in peace with God and all mankind. Her record is on high. She doubtless rests in heaven.

DIED, at the residence of his father, Zeno Lawrence, on the third of September, 1873, HOUSTON LAWRENCE, in the nineteenth year of his age. He was converted very early in life and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South; became quite prominent among the young members of the church, and readily bore his cross in our prayer meetings. Being a young man of solid brilliancy and firm piety, the church had strong hopes of his future usefulness; but, alas! he has fallen like the morning flower nipped by the chilling frost of winter, and has passed away from us, as we trust, to a happier clime, to rest forever in heaven.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, at the home of her mother, on the thirty-first of August, 1873, Miss AMANDA COX, daughter of Avaltna and Daniel Cox, in her twenty-third year. Being left an orphan in very early childhood she was so trained as to be impressed deeply with those nobler virtues that highly adorn the female character—modesty, prudence, neatness and industry. In these she excelled. Converted when very young, she became a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She adorned her profession by a godly walk. She took delight in all the institutions of the church. Her last sickness was long and painful, which she bore with resignation to the will of God. Thus has passed away one of our most lovely members to her rest in heaven.

DIED, at his residence in Bibb county, Alabama, on the twenty-seventh of August, 1873, ZENO LAWRENCE, in the fifty-second year of his age. He embraced religion in the thirty-fifth year of his age and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. From that time to the time of his death he was a faithful and prudent member of the church, walking humbly with his God. He was a pattern of honesty, integrity and truth, never speaking evil of any one nor retailing the slanders and gossip of the neighborhood, but moved on silently in the faithful discharge of duty. Although he seldom shouted the praise of God, yet the falling tear and the glow of countenance clearly manifested the deep feeling of the soul under the influence of the Holy Spirit and the love of God. Although poor in this world, he was, according to his ability, ready to contribute to the support of the gospel. Truly the church has lost a valuable member, and we believe he has gained a blood-washed redeemed spirit.

MISTAKEN APPLICATION.—There are many sermons good enough to be repented to the same congregation; and when clergymen exchange pulpits the hearers rather expect to be treated with an old sermon; but it does not follow, however, that the minister should not change the locale, points in the manuscript to suit the place and occasion. A Somerville (Massachusetts) preacher went over lately to Andover to preach. In his discourse was an allusion to the insane asylum at Somerville. And, forgetting that he was in Andover, he said, "Sooner than a child of mine should be subjected to such influences, I would be willing to have him confined in yonder institution," pointing directly at the Andover Theological Seminary.

The Back Door.

There are two doors in our churches. At the front door new members are received. In revival seasons this door is thronged with incomers. Some come in hastily and without good evidences of conversion. And these are the ones who commonly disappear soonest through the postern door.

For our churches have a rear door also. People do not go out through it in crowds; they slip out steadily, one by one. I never knew of a converted backsliding from Jesus Christ. Persons often urge the unconverted to repent and come in to Christ; but no one ever urges his fellow-member to steal out of the back door and become a backslider. The very proposal would shock and alarm. People backslide without urging, and often before they are fairly aware of it themselves. That church which during the last year has had more travel through the door at the rear than through the door of ingress has gained a loss. They had better begin the New Year with a day of humiliation and prayer.

Backsliding is usually a gradual process. It is not a bold, sudden leap, but a series of slow and almost imperceptible slips. "Christian" and "Hopeful" first grew discontented with the straight road to heaven, and found the footing rather rough. Then they looked over the stile into the soft, velvet "By-path Meadow." It promised easier walking. They flattered themselves that the meadow ran close alongside of the King's highway of holiness. So after looking over wistfully they concluded just to step over for a little while. But that crossing of the stile cost them a kidnapping by Giant Despair, and a wretched imprisonment in his dungeons, by which they were only delivered by deep repentance and the key of prayer. That wise man, Bunyan, describes only one door of admission into the Christian life, but the gateways of egress are very numerous. So our churches have only a single door of admission, but there are a great many posterns through which deserters slip out.

One professor begins to neglect secret prayer. If he keeps up the form he loses the spirit of devotion. Presently he drops off from the social prayer meeting. A slight excuse suffices to quiet his conscience. "The meetings are growing dull," he whispers to himself. "A sociable," a concert, a sleighing party, the opera, or almost anything that promises a lively evening, draws him away. He drops quietly out of the back door, and gets fairly over into the ranks of the pleasure-seekers before he is aware. The number of professing Christians who owe their spiritual declension to sensual temptations is larger than is supposed. When a young man begins to desert his post of duty I soon expect that the dance or drinking cup or secret licentiousness is at the bottom of it. The besetting sin soon becomes an over-match for him; and if he does not quit his sinning he will very soon quit his praying. The backslider who slips out of the door to gratify fleshly lusts always intends to go "just this once" and then return again. But a person rarely commits one deliberate sin and stops with that single transgression. When the devil fairly gets hold of a church member he does not let go his grip so easily.

But back of all outward backsliding lies the decay of religion in the heart. Our heart must be in our religion, and our religion in our heart, or else it becomes an up-hill drudgery or a sheer hypocrisy. Here lies the secret cause of many a church member's desertion. He has no heart for his religious duties. They are downright penance. He tugs at them awhile as a galley-slave pulls at the oar. He goes to his closet, or to the prayer circle, or to the Sabbath school, because he must, and not because he wants to. If the church bell rings him to the sanctuary, he hunts an excuse in the weather or his health, and if none avails him he goes reluctantly to keep up appearances. Money-giving to the Lord's treasury becomes a tax, and he submits to it with secret protest. It is not a free gift, but an assessment, like the tax on his house or his income; he pays it grudgingly. In fact, the whole routine of external service is gone through slavishly and reluctantly, and he strikes everything that he possibly can. As soon as the service of Jesus Christ ceases to be a cheerful, voluntary labor of love, backsliding has begun. It is a mere question of time as to when he shall become an open deserter. His heart is outside of the door, and he soon goes with it.—Dr. Cuyler, in Church Union.

The recent break in the submarine India cable between Kurrachee and Gwadur was caused by a whale. On winding in the cable unusual resistance was experienced, as if it were foul of rocks; but after persevering for some time the body of an immense whale, entangled in the cable, was brought to the surface, when it was found to be firmly secured by two and a half turns of the cable immediately above the tail. Sharks and other fish had partially eaten the body, which was rapidly decomposing, the jaws falling away on reaching the surface. The tail, which measured twelve feet across, was perfect, and covered with barnacles at the extremities. Apparently the whale was, at the time of entanglement, using the cable to free itself from parasites, such as barnacles, which annoy them very much, and the cable hanging in a loop over a submarine precipice, he probably with a flirt of his tail twisted it around him, and thus came to an untimely end.

Coleridge, when lecturing as a young man, was once violently hissed. He immediately retorted: "When a cold stream of truth is poured on red-hot prejudices, no wonder that they hiss."

When a man is opposed to Christianity, it is because Christianity is opposed to him.—Hall.

The Best Remedy for Obesity.

Obesity has been regarded in all ages and by nearly all people as a great misfortune. Some of the Gentoos enter their dwellings by a hole in the roof, and if a person is so fat that he cannot get in they regard him as an outlaw, swelled out big with sin. In China obesity is considered a blessing. In that great country a man's mind is measured by his corporate bulk.

Over Dr. Stafford, who was enormously fat, they placed the following epitaph:

Take heed, oh, good traveler, and not tread hard,
For here lies Dr. Stafford, in all his church-yard.

Over the corpulent chandler they inscribed this epitaph:

Here lies in earth an honest fellow,
Who died by fat and lived by tallow.

Dr. Beddoes was so stout that a lady friend used to call him the "walking feather-bed." At the court of Louis the Fifteenth there were two very fat noblemen—cousins. The King rallied one of them on his corpulency, and added: "I suppose you take little or no exercise?" "Your majesty will pardon me," replied the duke, "for I generally walk two or three times around my cousin every morning." Many remedies have been resorted to; vinegar and other acids have been used. Dr. Fleming advised the swallowing of a quarter of an ounce of common castile soap every night. Darwin thinks that salt and salt meat are efficacious. Mr. Banting, an Englishman, became very fat, and strove by all sorts of means to rid himself of his incumbrance, and at last hit upon a method which he took great pains to communicate to others. This was to live exclusively on meat. In 1863 Mr. Banting published a pamphlet giving the secret of his relief. He tells us that the sorts of food which he particularly advises fat people to avoid are "butter, sugar, potatoes, milk and beer." He urges that there need be no stint in quantity. The only thing requiring attention is the quality. He argues with much force and spirit against sugar and other sweet things. He thinks that saccharine matter is, of all food, the most fattening.

Banting's system has attracted considerable attention. Thousands of the waddling Germans have tried it, but now few believe in it—not that it will not reduce the flesh, for it will certainly do that, but because it reduces it by producing a diseased condition, particularly of the kidneys. Many grave cases of disease of the kidneys, produced by the Banting system, are reported from Germany. The only safe and effective treatment of obesity is a reduction in the quantity of the usual food, an increase of exercise and a reduction of the hours of sleep. This should be gradually pushed until the reduction in weight is one or two pounds a week. This will invariably improve the health.—To-Day.

Characteristics of Methodists.—The Methodist is pre-eminently a present church. Its work and interests are all now. Methodists have no concern whether their church is the same as the ancient church, or whether it is derived from it, or whether its ministers have succeeded to the apostles. They don't trouble themselves, as do the Episcopalians, about defending the ancient church or ancient Christians, but let them stand or fall on their own merits. Their church, moreover, changes every four years, when it is cut off anew from the past. At the Tyng trial an Episcopalian minister asked a Methodist for his Book of Discipline. When the latest edition—that of 1864—was given him he inquired: "Where are your previous authorities?" The Methodist answered: "All of Methodism is in 1864." The Methodist Church is as different from what it was in the days of Wesley as from what it will be in the twentieth century; so that it is amusing to see Episcopalians try to convert Methodists by proving that Wesley was an Episcopalian, or Congregationalists arguing against their episcopacy because Wesley did not approve of it. The Methodists do not care any more for Wesley's opinion than for St. Dominic's or St. Paul's on such subjects. In their preaching, too, the Methodists are modern, even to the latest telegraphic quotations. They often preach on the newest sensation, or on Huxley's or Renan's theory, instead of dwelling on Simon Peter's wife's mother or the sycamore-tree up which Zaccheus climbed. They discourse on General Grant's last message rather than on the decree of Nebuchadnezzar. They talk about the United States rather than about Judea; about petroleum rather than frankincense. They attack the sins of New York, and of 1873, rather than of Jerusalem and of antediluvian times. And they do this though it is breaking off from all church precedent and ecclesiastical propriety. In all things they change with the time, and give themselves entirely up to the present, throwing themselves into the live questions which constitute the spirit of the age. Christian Quarterly.

Juggernaut Victims.—The last Friend of India states that the Juggernaut festival in Hoogly, which closed on the fifth of July, was attended with more murderous results than ever. At Goopto, in the interior, twenty people fell while the car was being dragged, and eight were run over. Five were killed on the spot, and three were wounded, of whom one has died. The six victims were women. At Serampore not only the people but the magistrate and the police inspector had a very narrow escape during the Oolta, or return of the Ruth. The car was stopped at the request of the priests, to enable them to secure more rice by appealing to the people. While resting on its shady side the magistrate suddenly found it go off with a rush, without notice, at a time when the people were crowding round. It could not be again stopped till it had run some twenty yards. Providentially no one was injured, but it is during such unexpected starts that people have been crushed to death on former occasions.

Scientific.

To Prof. John W. Draper, of the University of New York, belongs the honor of having taken the first photographic portrait from life; and Prof. Morse, who, though he never claimed the honor, has received credit for it, never made a photograph until he had learned the art in the laboratory of Prof. Draper.

Nature quotes from a technical journal the following account of the straightening of a bridge: "During the recent building of a bridge in Holland one of the traverses, four hundred and sixty-five feet long, was misplaced on its supports. It was an inch out of line, and the problem was how to move it. Experiment proved that the iron work expanded a small fraction of an inch for every degree of heat it received. It was noticed that the day and night temperature differed by about twenty-five degrees, and it was thought this might be made to move the bridge. In the morning the end out of place was bolted down securely, and the other end left free. In the heat of the sun the iron expanded, and toward night the free end was bolted down, and the opposite end was loosened. The contraction then dragged the whole thing the other way. For two days this experiment was repeated, till the desired place was reached. We find no record that the heat of the sun has ever been employed in this way before.

A Sugar Revolution.—An invention which threatens to interfere greatly with our commerce is reported from Paris, and if it proves a success it will probably have the effect of causing an entire revolution among the Southern planters. This new discovery is a method of making sugar by uniting into a compound its constituent atoms of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. The inventor, M. Jouglet, says that the cost of production will be fifty cents per hundred weight, and he has already so far succeeded in establishing the utility of his invention that a company of manufacturers have been persuaded to purchase it from him for the comparatively moderate sum of $240,000. What the sugar planters and refiners will do if this discovery turns out to be as important as it promises remains to be seen; but there is no doubt that if it is only partially successful strange developments may be expected. The invention is said to be very simple and one easily explained, and endless quantities of saccharine substance can, it is claimed, be manufactured by this new process in so short a time and at so small a cost as to preclude the possibility of competition.—World.

Health Principles.—A man had a finger-nail torn off, causing very great pain; brown sugar was thrown on a pan of burning coals, and the finger held over the smoke for twenty minutes. The pain was removed, and in due time a cure was effected. In Health at Home it is narrated that a horse seemed to be dying of a festered wound. Some old shoes were cut up in a hog-trough and set on fire under the horse, so that the smoke would reach the wound. In a few hours the swelling began to subside, the wound discharged, and the horse got well. An old lady was knitting a stocking. A member of the family came in with a painful wound. She unraveled the stocking, put the yarn on a shovel of burning coals, caused the smoke to ascend against the wound, giving immediate relief. The first thought of ordinary readers is that of wonder that such "simple" things should have such beneficial effects. Instead of burdening the mind with the remembrance of old leather and brown sugar and yarn stockings, it is better to ascertain the general principles; for one may have the most agonizing sore, and be a thousand miles from an old shoe or spoonful of brown sugar or a yarn stocking. What then? In all cases there was smoke; out of smoke creosote is made, and carbolic acid is of the same essential nature; hence the application of these useful substances to all varieties of wounds and burns and sores. Their essential nature is two-fold—they arrest decay and purify.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Bees as Architects.—Man is obliged to use all sorts of engines for measurement—angles, rules, plumb-lines—to produce his buildings and to guide his hand. The bee executes her work immediately from her mind, without instruments or tools of any kind. "She has successfully solved a problem in higher mathematics which the discovery of the differential calculus, a century and a half ago, alone enables us to solve at all without the greatest difficulty." "The inclination of the planes of the cell is always just so that if the surfaces on which she works are unequal, still the axis running through it is in the true direction, and the junction of the two axes forms the angle of sixty degrees as accurately as if there were none." The manner in which she adapts her work to the requirements of the moment and the place is marvelous. In order to test their ingenuity, Huber glazed the interior of a hive, with the exception of certain bits of wood fastened on the sides. The bees cannot make their work adhere to glass, and they began to build horizontally, from side to side. He interposed other plates of glass in different directions, and they carved their combs in the strangest shapes, in order to make them reach the wooden supports. He says that this proceeding denoted more than an instinct, as glass was not a substance against which bees could be warned by Nature, and that they changed the direction of the work before reaching the glass, at the distance precisely suitable for making the necessary turns—enlarging the cells on the outer side greatly and on the inner side diminishing them proportionately. As the different insects were working on the different sides, there must have been some means of communicating the proportion to be observed; while, the bottom being common to both sets of cells, the difficulty of thus regularly varying their dimensions must have been great indeed.—Scientific American.

Religious Intelligence.

There are 349 places of worship in New York, with a total seating capacity for 308,500 persons, and the aggregate estimated valuation of these churches is $46,000,000.

The Baptist Home at Philadelphia, which has cost $70,000, and will accommodate 200 persons, was recently formally opened. It was designed principally for aged and indigent women, but is now opened to men also, particularly ministers.

The Friend of India gives the Christian population of Persia as about 25,000 Armenians and as many Nestorians. Both of these classes are exempt from military duties, and the Armenians no longer suffer persecution for their faith, as formerly.

A recent Catholic letter from Rome says the Pope received, a few days previous, immense sums of money from various parts of the world. Among the offerings was a large "golden chalice" from Guadalaxara, Mexico, filled with gold pieces.

The Presbyterian Church in the Canadian Dominion numbers 19 presbyteries, 633 regular charges and 51,396 communicants. The total contributions during the year for congregational and benevolent purposes was $550,901, an average of $10.96 to each member.

There are 237 Congregational churches in and around London, 87 of which have been established since 1852. Fourteen of these are the result of missionary labor; 30 owe their existence to the efforts of individual Christians, 13 of whom were laymen and 16 ministers.

The Baptists propose celebrating the approaching centennial by making an advance all along the line, in the endowment of their various educational institutions, academic, collegiate and theological. The sum which it is thought should be raised is stated at $2,000,000.

The following advertisement of a Protestant Episcopal church appeared in late New York city papers: Prayers for the holy dead will be said and the blessed sacrament administered to-morrow, morning, at eight o'clock, at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, West Forty-Fifth street, near Broadway.

Several members of Mr. Cheney's church in Chicago have applied for an injunction restraining him from further exercising power as a minister of the Episcopal Church. The great majority of his church, however, consent to his acting as itinerant Bishop of the West, in Dr. Cummins' new church.

An enthusiastic meeting was held at Exeter Hall, London, on the sixteenth ultimo, to hear the report of delegates to the Evangelical Alliance. Lord Ebury presided. Speeches were made by Lord Alfred Churchill, the Dean of Canterbury, Rev. Dr. Parker and others, who alluded with the utmost enthusiasm to their reception in America.

Lively meetings to protest against the introduction of auricular confession in the Church of England continue to be held in different parts of the kingdom. The trouble seems to be that the practice cannot be touched by either the civil or ecclesiastical law, and its suppression must depend upon the opposition of public sentiment to it.

Rev. Charles E. Cheney was consecrated Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church in Chicago, on Sunday, December 15. Bishop Cummins preached an able sermon on the nature of the episcopal office, and of the power conferred by ordination to the ministry. The ceremonies were according to the formula of the new church, and were very impressive.

And now the Bishop of Peterboro appears as an advocate of using the lay element. Recently the Bishop ordained nine lay helpers in St. Luke's, at Leicester. He said that act was one of very deep importance and significance to the Church of England, and urged the desirability of influential laymen setting themselves apart to assist the clergy in their work.

As the Pope is old and liable to be cut off at any time, there is good reason for crediting the report that he has asked the College of Cardinals to name their choice for a successor. They have selected, by a considerable majority, the Archbishop of Perugia, Cardinal Pecci, and it is stated that he will undoubtedly be the next Pope. He is called an Ultramontane, but is of a conciliatory spirit, and would live on terms of amity with the Italian government.

It appears, after all, that the Queen's communing in the Presbyterian Church in Scotland recently was something unusual; in fact the Ritualistic Church Herald calls it an event unparalleled in the history of the National Church. Of course it doesn't like it, and dares to express the regret that "her most religious and gracious majesty, the Queen, has thought it consistent with her duty to almighty God and to the faithful of the ancient Church of England to partake of bread and wine at the so-called communion of the Scotch Presbyterians."

The decree of the government of Mexico promulgating religious liberty in the republic meets with singular and violent opposition in many places. A correspondent sends us an account of some of the excesses committed by the aboriginal Indians, who have pillaged villages under the cry of "Down with Protestants," being doubtless instigated to commit these acts by Catholic emissaries and priests. In some cases the cry has been "Long live Religion," which clearly indicates that the papal party see a loss of their influence in the full toleration of other religions.

The oldest foreign mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church was opened in Africa in 1833. It now exists in the form of a small Annual Conference under the superintendence of Bishop Roberts. The Conference is principally within the republic of Liberia. It contains 2,239 communicants, 87 local preachers, 31 churches, with an estimated value of $31,710; 25 traveling preachers, 6 parsonages, 25 Sunday schools, 1,309 scholars; 15 day schools, 450 scholars. From the lines of the Conference, missions are now projected into the interior. Mission work in Mexico was commenced in 1872, and has been favored with remarkable prosperity. Valuable property has been secured in the City of Mexico and elsewhere, and congregations gathered in several of the principal cities of the republic.

Bishop Harris has been making the second episcopal visitation of the Methodist mission in China. Hereafter the mission at Peking and Tientsin is to be called the North China mission, the one hitherto known as the Foochow mission is to be called the East or Southeast China mission, that at Kiukiang the Central China, and the one to be founded at Canton the South China mission. Thus the Methodist Episcopal Church will be represented throughout the entire empire. Mr. Lowry becomes superintendent of the North China mission, assisted by Messrs. Pilcher and Harris at Peking, and Mr. Davis at Tientsin. Besides the wives of Messrs. Lowry and Harris, there are three single ladies engaged in teaching or other service—Miss Brown, Miss Porter and Miss Dr. Combs. There is an earnest call for more laborers in this hopeful field.

Besides the Syrian College at Beirut, with nearly 100 students, and the Girls' Seminary, with as many pupils, the Presbyterian mission in Syria has normal schools at Abeih and Sidon, and is now opening a similar school at Tripoli. The expense of training in these schools is very slight, varying from $40 to $60 a year, and the teachers there educated are scattered up and down the Mountain of Lebanon, where, in their turn, some fifty of them are instructing more than 2,000 children. The salary received by one of these teachers is only about $60 or $70. Thus the cost of a year's schooling for a Syrian child is not far from $1.50. Notwithstanding the slight cost of sustaining these village schools, the Presbyterian Board, owing to its lack of necessary funds, is not only obliged to refuse to establish new schools where they are earnestly begged for by the villagers, but threatens to close some of those already established.

In the General Synod of the French Reformed Church, which is now in session, a protest was read from forty-two delegates of the Liberal party against the Declaration of Faith voted in 1872. These delegates declare that they will not desert the principles of liberty, which are the raison d'etre of Protestantism, and that they cannot take their seats in the synod so long as it adheres to its decision. The seats on the left were, in fact, deserted, and only sixty-two delegates, instead of one hundred and eight, were present. The synod voted a resolution declaring that it would not abandon the principles which had been proclaimed, and which constitute its system of faith. The reporter of the permanent committee of the synod proposed to ask the government for authorization to publish the Declaration of Faith of June, 1872, and the ratification of the sanction given to that declaration. In consequence of that sanction, future Protestant pastors would only be able to exercise their ministry on condition that they promised obedience to the Declaration of Faith.

In its organized form Swedenborgianism seems to have gained no great success in this country, according to a writer in the New Church Magazine. It is nearly ninety years since the doctrines of Swedenborg were first openly proclaimed in America, and now the avowed believers in them do not number over 4,000 or 5,000. The first society was organized eighty years ago, in Baltimore, and the regular attendants are less than 150. The society in Philadelphia is fifty years old, and has 200 attendants—50 less than forty-six years ago. The New York society is fifty-seven years old, and all the attendance in New York and Brooklyn is less than 500. The present number of members is 3,558. Mr. Hitchcock concludes that it is impossible to build up a great ecclesiastical organization on the basis of Swedenborg's teachings. Only a limited class, soon exhausted, can be brought into such an organization. Still he thinks, as do the Unitarians, when comforting themselves over their similar feebleness as an ecclesiastical body, that, if other churches reject their name, they are yet accepting the substance of their teaching. Certainly the contrast is striking with the ecclesiastical success of the Methodists, who invaded the country about the same time.—Independent.

Mr. Stevens, missionary of the American Board in Guadalajara, writing to the Missionary Herald in regard to the addition to the Mexican Constitution of the famous laws of reform, enumerates those which in his opinion have the most important bearing upon the missionary enterprise in Mexico, as follows: "1. The Church and State are independent of each other. Congress has not the power to make laws for the establishment or prohibition of any religion. 2. Matrimony is a civil contract, the ceremony to be performed only by civil officers. 3. No religious institution shall receive or acquire real estate, nor capital from it, except as provided in Article 27 of the Constitution. 4. The simple promise to say the truth and fulfill one's obligation shall take the place of the religious oath, with all its effects and punishments. 5. No one shall be obliged to work against his will, or without just recompense for the same. The State cannot permit any contract or promise which interferes in the least with the liberty of any one, be it for the sake of education, work or religious vow. The law, therefore, does not recognize monastic orders, nor is it able to permit their establishment, whatever be the denomination or object for which they pretend to erect them. Neither will it permit private contracts that have for their object the banishment or exile of either party."

Fellowship With the Works of Darkness.

It requires no little carefulness on the part of religious people to keep themselves clear of all complicity in some of the vices and sins prevailing in the world. The sanctions of custom, public opinion and legislation are apt to be regarded as an adequate justification, while the precepts of religion receive an interpretation which is shaped by the popular practice. Then, again, "fellowship" is regarded as a shade less responsible, and somewhat less criminal, than to be leaders and organizers in doubtful undertakings. The amusements of the world, and many of its prominent forms of evil, are already existing. To have fellowship with them, in some degree, seems almost a social necessity. While the Christian conscience would protest against their introduction, and would perhaps wish them done away, it may be perverted so as to tolerate and even accept them as things which it is useless to oppose. The danger lies in this tolerance of wrong, and in this fellowship with the established and customary forms of sin.

In reference to amusements, the theater and the dance are very ancient, and they are so rooted in the habits and passions of the world that it would seem fatuitous to expect their abolition. Always corrupt and corrupting, ever adverse to good morals and spiritual religion, they flourish nevertheless, and command a certain amount of respectability. They are woven and interwoven into the structure of fashionable society, and there are thousands of ordinarily intelligent people, not altogether strangers to religious institutions, who affect a degree of surprise, and even of wounded feelings, when their favorite pastimes and pleasures are condemned. There are heads of families in the churches who pay as much for the service of the dancing-master as they do for the support of the gospel, and there are professors of religion who are more frequently found at the theater, the opera and the dancing party than at the prayer meeting. These are exceptional cases, but even the more exemplary often hesitate to condemn what they cannot conscientiously approve.

The present day is conspicuous for the number of its lottery associations and other systems of organized and legalized gambling. Here in New Orleans, and throughout the country, are advertised the Havana lottery, the Louisiana and the Kentucky State lotteries, all legalized and stamped with the indorsement of State governments. They are commended and puffed by the secular press, published in handbills and flaming placards, and bushels of tickets are temptingly exhibited in the show-windows of our cities, and are on sale at every cross-road and at almost every railroad station throughout the land. These lotteries are doing more to educate the people in vice and idleness than can well be estimated. This prospect of getting much for little, something for nothing, of becoming suddenly rich, without the price of labor and years of industry, is exceedingly alluring. Millions of dollars are wasted in this way, besides the ruinous effects upon the morals of the country. These State lotteries may be fairly conducted, for anything that we know, but the demoralizing and corrupting tendencies among the people are evident. The effects are immeasurably worse because of the prestige and respectability which State legislation gives them.

It is not wonderful that the gambling element, the principle of chance, and a wild and reckless speculation, more and more taint and pollute the business and the recreations of the people. Our young people are growing up under the shadow of these institutions, and their minds are being poisoned and their principles undermined by the influences which go out from these fountains of death. As a citizen and voter, and as a man of business, and as a member of society, it behooves the Christian to avoid even the appearance of evil. This is a work of darkness, fruitless of good, but fraught with evil whose fellowship he is to shun as he would shun the fang of a serpent. The card table, the dice box, the public and the private lottery, and the charitable raffle, are all alike to be numbered among the traps and snares of satan.

Another work of darkness is the liquor trade. It is so related to the commerce of the times that it would seem difficult for business men to avoid the defilement. Some reputable branches of business are said to be impracticable without a wholesale dealing in wines and ardent spirits. But can a dealer in whisky, although the traffic be incidental and against his wishes, be clear of having fellowship with the works of darkness? We have known good and estimable men who have been thus connected with the liquor trade, and who, under a slight protest of conscience, have yielded to what they regarded as a justifiable necessity. True, the whisky will be sold, and somebody will make the profit, but it does not follow that a Christian man can accept the wages of unrighteousness. Better give up a business which involves this obnoxious feature, and leave to those who are willing to face the final account all that may be made by contributing to the tide of drunkenness which threatens to engulf the world. We have heard of country merchants, bearing the Christian name, who retail whisky because the trade and custom of the community demand it. The excuse is that they cannot compete with others unless they keep the unclean thing. This may be so, but what then? Christianity demands that we cut off a hand and that we pluck out an eye if they offend. If all is to be forsaken for Christ, and if, on occasion, believers are to suffer the loss of all things for their religion, are Christian men to plead necessity to justify the sale of liquor? There are men, fair-minded and intelligent, whose consciences reproach them for this thing, and others who are excusing a practice because blinded by interest. Let them wake up to the fearful reality that they cannot be clear before God, and that they must answer for it in the dreadful day of judgment. We have known men to withdraw from lucrative business because it had this evil in it.

Louisiana Annual Conference.

The Conference met at Baton Rouge, January 7. A fair attendance of preachers at the opening. Bishop Marvin present, opened with the usual religious exercises, and expressed his gratification at being once more with the brethren, with the most of whom he was already acquainted. The attendance of laymen was small, but there were some who entered heartily into the business of the Conference. The preachers looked in good health, and, although but poorly paid for the most part, they appeared exceedingly cheerful. The Conference has lost several by transfer to other Conferences. The venerable Nehemiah A. Cravens, for so many years among our foremost preachers, has gone to the Texas Conference, and has been appointed to Houston. In addition, Samuel Armstrong, another old and beloved member, Thomas B. White, W. F. Alexander and Benjamin J. Baldwin have gone to other fields of labor. But one had died during the year—Joseph D. Adams, the loved and sainted. The memorial service in the Conference-room, on the reading of his memoir, was conducted by Bishop Keener. Fitting tributes were paid to his memory by several of his brethren, and the large audience present, composed of preachers and people, was overcome with emotion. Few men have been more universally reverenced or regretted.

To repair our losses, two were received by transfer—W. P. Owen, from the Tennessee, and Felix G. Hocutt, from the North Mississippi Conference. Five young men of promise were received on trial, to wit: William R. Whatley, John T. Sawyer, Alfred Elihu Clay, Eugene G. Miller and William Lieser. Among the greatest gratifications of the session was the privilege of once more meeting in Conference Dr. Henry C. Thweatt, whose bodily infirmities have for years prevented his attendance. He is still crippled by chronic rheumatism, and gets about with difficulty, but he is cheerful and happy in spirit, and zealous for the welfare of the church. He has a strong place in the affections of his brethren, and will not be forgotten in their prayers. Three young men were received into full connection—Christian Keener, Samuel H. Schroeder and Enos B. Foust. The Bishop magnified the occasion, much to the profit and edification of the whole Conference and a large and deeply interested congregation. The solemnity and impressiveness with which the questions were put to the candidates, and the address, will never be forgotten. This service alone was ample compensation for the difficulties and expense of coming to Conference from the most distant points.

Bishop Keener was present during the most of the session, and some times in the chair. His preaching, Conference talks and intercourse with his old associates were sources of pleasure and profit to all. The well-known hospitality of Baton Rouge was finely exhibited, and the homes and entertainment were ample and most generous. At no place has the Conference been better accommodated, and the kindness of this noble people will long be held in affectionate and grateful remembrance.

The following delegates were elected to the General Conference: Clerical: Linus Parker, John Pipes, Alexander E. Goodwyn. Reserves: James E. Cobb, John Wilkinson, Robert J. Harp. Lay delegates: William H. Foster, W. H. N. Magruder, J. Harvey Brigham. Reserves: J. O. Fuqua, T. B. Reneau, W. H. Drake.

Reports of committees were prepared with care and elicited considerable discussion. Bishop Marvin is a fine presiding officer, and does the full work of a Bishop in the most satisfactory manner. He has endeared himself greatly to the preachers, and the people were delighted and edified by his addresses, exhortations and preaching. The whole community seemed interested in the proceedings of the Conference, and a decided revival influence pervaded all the religious services. There were mourners at the altar, accessions to the church and conversions. At no session of the Conference do we remember to have witnessed a deeper work or more gratifying manifestations of religious interest. The congregations were large, and the preaching in demonstration of the Spirit.

Discipline.

The venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce is still busy with his pen. From a recent article published in the Southern Christian Advocate we quote somewhat at large:

One of the surest ways to build up and maintain a pure church, where the doctrines held are scriptural, is the idea that it is hard to get in, and easy to get out if moral principles are ever wantonly trifled with. And I doubt very capitally whether there is a church among us (I use church now denominationally) that is not involved in the condemnation of making it easy to get in members and slow to get them out, even when it is generally understood that they misrepresent Christ and his spiritual kingdom. Now, brethren, let me say to you, this policy and practice is all of the flesh and of the world. It is only when we are carefully separating the precious from the vile that we are as God's mouth. To me it is noteworthy that, in the New Testament especially, we are as absolutely forbidden to maintain fellowship with disorderly church members as we are required to abstain from any lust of the flesh. And it is especially noteworthy that this immediate order to the Thessalonians seems to have embraced only a set of religious loafers who were lounging about, doing nothing in the way of self-support, but living upon the benefit of church fraternity. Now who among us would ever think of arresting a member of our church simply because he was slothful in business, letting his family rub on, hardly bestead because of his idleness? And yet the Christian character, as delineated by the spirit of inspiration, is: "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." If my rule of exegesis is correct, this means that no one can be "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," who is "slothful in business." It will be well for the church when the day comes in which it will be its settled policy and practice to hold all in abeyance until they bring both soul and body under law to Christ. So long as the policy of the church is self-prompted, differing in its results from what would result from a careful conformity to the divine policy, so long will we force the Lawgiver to hold the church in a sort of judicial abeyance from him, in what ought to be the internal evidences of his divine presence and approval. God cannot bestow these upon a church that is suffered, by our negligence, to become a miserable amalgam of much that is alien in spirit from the constituent elements of a gospel church membership. Take, for instance, what St. Paul said to the Thessalonians, Second Epistle, third chapter, sixth and fourteenth verses, especially, for the present, the last: "And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man and have no fellowship with him, that he may be ashamed." No one who has any proper sense of Christian communion will ever consent to live in a church where Christian fellowship is denied him by church action on account of moral inequality. He or she will either come into line or withdraw. Any one who would not would not be worth keeping.

But, alas for us, we have incautiously ceased from hearing what the Spirit has said unto the churches. We have even got where we will read our general rules, based, as Mr. Wesley said, and as we all believe, on God's word, and yet keep up daily open fellowship with members who treat with practical contempt everything in these rules that interferes with their unrenewed affections and lusts. Now if these rules are a libel upon God's word, Methodism ought to be bombarded until it capitulates. But if they accord with it, then every member of our church that is living contrary to these rules is no Methodist; every pastor that knows of these cases and lets them alone, and every church that quietly looks on this state of affairs and does not demand a disciplinary purging of their ecclesiastical floor of this chaff, is complicated in this surrender of Immanuel's land into the hands of the enemy. If they find themselves in the hands of a pastor who, as captain of the Lord's hosts, fails to bring his men into action even after they have given him notice of their readiness for action, and they do not charge him as unworthy to be intrusted with the care of the Lord's territory, they make themselves accomplices in all this work of desolation. Nay, brethren, charge every man of us with unfitness to be in the pastoral office who either fails to make you do your duty in this commission, or fails to do his own duty when you call his attention to it.

We will never fulfill our original commission—the spreading of scriptural holiness over these lands—until you center your souls on a pure church. You are all the time whimpering after a revival of religion, by which most of you mean accessions to the church. This looks all right, but it is all wrong. It is depletion, not plethora, we need. The revival of religion we need is the purging of the church, and nothing but this will be a revival of religion. What use can God have for any church after it ceases to keep itself pure? It is immaterial how gorgeous the temple may be, unless it is kept clean it is just as well destroyed as preserved. I ask all thinking Methodists: Do you believe the temple of God itself would ever have been destroyed by an invading army if it had been kept for the inhabitation of God alone, as was designed? You answer me: No. Surely not, but this temple was the symbol of the church, and its being surrendered at last to destruction was for our admonition, upon whom have come the ends of the world. It was to teach us that there is nothing that can prevent the final judgment of God against any house for his worship, but the preservation of it from all moral deterioration. This can never be effected if it is laid over, as we have been doing in some large city churches, hoping to cure these vagrant members by religious revivals fanned up like a forced flame on uninflammable coal, that dies down as soon as the blower is taken off. There is no church alive to God where effectual discipline is neglected. As well might you assume the presence of a native love of cleanliness in a house of filth as to assume a church alive to God, in the absence of the broom and its use in keeping the floor clean. One of John's special characteristics of Christ was: "Whose fan is in his hand and he will thoroughly purge his floor." But the floor is not purged where the fan is adequate to its end, and the chaff visible unless it is thoroughly purged. This same idea is evidently set forth in the parable of the vine and its branches: "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away." "In me" means in my church, because the church is his spouse and body. This "taking away" is at the instance of the Father—a remarkable evidence of the unity of the Godhead. Christ as a divine Son may lead the way in the gathering in of branches, but unless they are fruitful in the genuine grape the Father taketh them away. No wild-grape bearing will do any good. The fruit must be spiritual. And if we, as pastors, suffer these fungus growths to remain in the church, as if fellowshiped by us, we are unfaithful keepers of the Lord's holy house. The world has a right to despise us as false in practice, compared with our creed and preaching. Nay, verily, let us declare non-fellowship at least.

Astronomy and Religion.

The Rev. E. P. Rogers, D. D., writing in the Christian Intelligencer on "The Eighth Psalm and Modern Astronomy," closes an able article with the following statements and reflections:

The word heaven is used in three senses. In the first sense we speak of the birds of heaven, the clouds of heaven, the winds of heaven, and we mean the atmosphere which surrounds our globe to the distance of about forty-five miles in all directions.

In another sense we speak of heaven as the dwelling of God and angels and glorified saints. But in the sense in which the word is used in the eighth psalm it means the sidereal heavens, or the starry worlds. These are said to be the work of God's fingers, and they declare his glory. A brief glance at these amazing worlds will give us some idea of their overwhelming grandeur.

Leaving our world and setting forth on an aerial voyage, after traveling 240,000 miles, we reach the moon. If we travel at the rate of the fastest railways we shall reach it in 250 days. If we travel with the speed of a cannon-ball, 1,000 miles an hour, we shall reach it in ten days. If we travel with the speed of light we shall reach it in two seconds.

Leaving the moon, we travel onward to the sun. At the fastest railway speed we shall reach it in 280 years. Standing on this planet, and looking at the sun and the moon as they appear to our eye, they seem to be about the same size. But the sun is 50,000,000 times larger than the moon, and if it were brought as near to us it would almost cover the entire heavens. It is a million times larger than our globe. "And if we were to hang a necklace of moons around it it would take 900 just to encircle it once."

We next visit the planets, which compose the solar system, and are smaller worlds revolving round the sun. The planet nearest to the sun is Mercury, which is 32,000,000 miles distant, while Saturn is 890,000,000 miles distant.

Beyond the solar system we come to the region of the fixed stars and the nebulæ. In a clear night we can see perhaps a thousand with the naked eye. But the telescope has revealed 800,000 times as many. Herschel has told us that in one spot, which appears to the eye about as large as the apparent size of the moon, he could count 200,000 suns. To the eye they seem like bright points, like the head of a pin, yet one of them, the most brilliant star in the constellation Lyra, is found to have a diameter 3,000 times greater than that of our sun, and to be distant twenty-two millions of millions of miles from our earth. Light, which travels at the rate of nearly 200,000 miles a second, is eight minutes in coming to us from the sun. From the nearest of the fixed stars it is six years, and from a star of the eighteenth magnitude it is 2,000 years in reaching us!

The mind of man can scarcely appreciate these magnificent sizes and distances of the heavenly bodies. Yet even from this hasty glance we get some idea of the amazing power and wisdom of the great Creator. But we return from this excursion among the stars to our little world, with new views of its importance in this boundless universe. This little planet has been the scene of a far more wondrous and glorious exhibition of the Creator than any of those mighty orbs which hang in space. The astronomer may "astonish us with his discoveries of the inconceivable magnitude of the starry heavens, compared with which our tiny planet sinks into almost infinite insignificance, yet we can tell him that this little world may be an object of the deepest wonder, the most absorbing interest to all the rest of creation; as the scene of the most astonishing displays of the highest glory of the Creator." Here, passing by those magnificent worlds, whose colossal dimensions fairly overpower our imagination, the mighty Maker of them all came to dwell in human flesh. Here he was born and lived, and taught and suffered, and died to accomplish the redemption of a sinful race. From this planet he rose and ascended to the eternal abode of his glorified humanity. This not only gives a glory to our world, but imparts a new interest to the starry heavens which they never would have possessed. Christianity has made the grandest contribution to the science of astronomy. The doctrine of the incarnation, resurrection and ascension of Christ gives new glory to the stars, but it is a glory reflected from this planet. An absolute Deity, unincarnate, would need no material throne as the seat of his empire. But we know now that somewhere among those brilliant orbs the glorified body of the God-Man Christ Jesus dwells, before whom at last all the universe will stand. Ah! little may the undevout astronomer think, as he raises the revealing telescope to the skies, that he may all unconsciously be gazing at the very star where that great white throne is erected before which he shall yet appear, on which he sits who rose from this little world to universal and everlasting dominion. There, exalted above all thrones, principalities and powers, dwells the King of kings, the Lord of lords, before whom the inhabitants of every star must bow in homage, who is also our Savior, who lived in our world, who bore our nature, and who made here a revelation of the most glorious attributes of the Deity, far more astounding and sublime than any of which the astronomer has told us, though he has swept around the great circle of the universe and visited the mightiest orbs which roll in space.

Death of James Ross.

This old and highly esteemed citizen of New Orleans died on Friday, January 2. Mr. Ross was a man of exemplary piety, for many years a devoted and useful Christian, and at the time of his death a member of the Presbyterian Church. We copy the following notice of Mr. Ross from the Daily Picayune of Saturday, January 3:

One of our best citizens, one of the landmarks of the past half century's history of New Orleans, departed this life yesterday. This was Mr. James Ross, so long known as the principal flour inspector in this city.

Mr. Ross was born in Princeton, New Jersey, April 7, 1804, and was therefore in the seventieth year of his age when he died. He was the eldest child of William Ross, an Irishman by birth, who emigrated in the latter part of the eighteenth century to the United States, residing in Princeton, afterward in the State of Ohio, and removed to New Orleans in 1810, when the subject of this notice was six years of age. William Ross, the father, was appointed flour inspector for the port of New Orleans in the year 1812 or thereabouts, and held the office, without interruption, until 1832, when he died, and his son James was appointed in his stead; he, too, held the office through every State administration, regardless of political favor or preference, to the present time, about forty-one years—though it may be said he filled the office even longer than that, having, in 1825, been appointed, by his father, deputy, which position he held until 1829, when he received an appointment in the customhouse, which office he held until after his father's death, and his own appointment to the office of flour inspector in 1832.

There is in the possession of Mr. Ross' family the inspection auger used by William Ross from 1812 to 1832, and donated by the father to his son; also an old-time Kentucky rifle that William Ross carried, as a private, in Captain Beal's company of riflemen at the battle of New Orleans. James Ross, when a boy of eleven years of age, frequently visited his father at the battle ground, on errands from his mother in the city, carrying a change of clothing or little delicacies to his father on the line, and was present on the memorable eighth of January, 1815, and witnessed the fight. A little negro boy accompanying him was killed on this occasion.

Mr. Ross has held other offices of trust and honor, being for a number of years an alderman in the then second municipality. He was twice married, first in 1829, and the marriage lasted to 1867, and was blessed with ten children, only three of whom survive—Emmett L., of Canton, Mississippi, and Elijah S. and Sarah H., residents of New Orleans. His second marriage occurred in the fall of 1869—his wife survives him. In the death of James Ross one of the old landmarks of New Orleans is removed. The city and commonwealth lose a faithful servant; the poor a friend and benefactor; the church a devout and faithful member, and society one of its brightest ornaments.

A good man has gone, but he leaves behind him, in the hearts and memories of a large circle of friends and acquaintances, an honorable name and record that death cannot destroy.

The deeds of good men live after them. The grave may hold their perishable bodies, but their memories never die.

Lightly rest the sod above him,
Soft and peaceful be his rest,
Till the angels bear his spirit
To the councils of the blest.

The Death Warrant of Jesus.

Of the many interesting relics and fragments brought to light by the persevering researches of antiquarians, none could be more interesting to the philanthropist and believer than the following—to Christians the most imposing judicial document ever recorded in human annals. It has been thus faithfully transcribed:

Sentence Rendered by Pontius Pilate, Acting Governor of Lower Galilee, stating that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death on the Cross.

In the year 17 of the Emperor Tiberius Cæsar, and the twenty-seventh day of March, in the city of the holy Jerusalem—Annas and Caiaphas being priests, sacrificators of the people of God—Pontius Pilate, Governor of Lower Galilee, sitting in the presidential chair of the prætory, condemns Jesus of Nazareth to die on the cross between two thieves, the great and notorious evidence of the people saying:

1. Jesus is a seducer.
2. He is seditious.
3. He is the enemy of the law.
4. He calls himself falsely the Son of God.
5. He calls himself falsely the King of Israel.
6. He entered the temple, followed by a multitude, bearing palm branches in his hand.

Orders the first centurion, Quillius Cornellus, to lead him to the place of execution.

Forbids any person whomsoever, either poor or rich, to oppose the death of Jesus Christ.

The witnesses who signed were Daniel Robani, a Pharisee; Joanna Robani, Raphael Robani; Capet, a citizen.

Jesus shall go out of the city of Jerusalem by the gate of Struenus.

The foregoing is engraved on a copper plate, on the reverse of which is written: "A similar plate is sent to each tribe." It was found in an antique marble vase, while excavating in the ancient city of Aquilla, in the kingdom of Naples, in the year 1801, and was discovered by the commissioner of arts of the French army. At the expedition of Naples it was inclosed in a box of ebony and preserved in the sacristy of the Carthinians. The French translation was made by the commissioner of arts. The original is in the Hebrew language.

Sharper Than a Two-Edged Sword.

A steamboat captain was fond of ridiculing the Scriptures, and making fun of religion and its professions. He was a confirmed infidel. He took special delight in uttering his sentiments in the presence of ministers of the gospel. On one of his trips there was on board an excellent minister of Christ, who had the courage to sit down and talk with this skeptic.

The special subject of conversation was the impossibility of miracles. The minister, after patiently hearing him, said:

"Captain, did you ever read the New Testament?"

"No; I can't say I ever did. I've read parts of it."

"Will you promise me you will read it all through, and then I'll discuss any subject on which you have doubts?"

This was said in a kind, persuasive tone, and the captain replied:

"I will."

The minister then went to his trunk and presented a copy of the New Testament to the captain, who again assured him that he would read it all through.

Thus they parted. After some weeks the minister had occasion to travel on the same boat, and soon sought out the captain, whose countenance and manner were entirely changed. After the warm greeting and salutation the minister inquired about his reading the book.

"Ah, sir!" said he, "I had not read far before I felt I was a guilty sinner, and that I needed just such a friend as Jesus, the Son of God. I was enabled to cry with the publican, 'God, be merciful to me a sinner,' and with the blind beggar of Jericho, 'Jesus, Son of David, have mercy on me.' And I can now trust in that Jesus, and love him, whom I once despised."

The joy of this minister of Christ can better be imagined than described. The captain became a devout Christian, and lived long to tell to others "what a dear Savior he had found."—Sailors' Magazine.

Good Rules.

1. On rising in the morning determine in your own mind the kind and amount of work which you intend to perform during the day, and arrange the order in which each part of your self-assigned task can be performed in the best manner, and with the greatest ease to yourself. From this order never depart, unless you are compelled to do so by invincible necessity.

2. Before retiring to rest at night examine yourself as to how and to what extent you have accomplished the task which you imposed upon yourself in the morning; and should any part thereof remain unfinished, or be finished in an unsatisfactory manner, sit up an hour or two later than usual, in order to complete your day's work. Should you be unable to get up your unfinished work in this way, rise earlier than usual the next morning, and devote to work that portion of the day which you usually devote to recreation.

By persevering in the strict observance of the two foregoing rules you will soon find that at night you will very seldom have any unfinished or badly executed work left upon your hands to be made up.

3. Never give a promise or make an appointment without first having taken into consideration the probability of your being able promptly to fulfill the same.

4. Having once given a promise or made an appointment, never fail to fulfill the same promptly and faithfully, if you can possibly avoid making a failure. If, however, unexpected necessity should oblige you to fail in keeping an engagement, if possible, notify the person with whom the engagement has been made of your inability to keep the same, in time to prevent him from receiving inconvenience therefrom. If you cannot notify the party in time to save him from inconvenience, then let him know, as soon as you can, the cause of your failure to keep faith with him.

The observance of these two rules will add very much to the esteem in which your neighbors and associates will hold you.

5. Answer all letters, which you receive, as soon after receiving them as you possibly can, even when their contents may not appear to you to render an answer necessary, for the knowledge that his letter has been received and acknowledged is always a source of gratification to the writer thereof.

6. Never, when vexed and annoyed by the ill-conduct or negligence of those with whom you are forced to mingle, permit your vexation to show itself in any manner that may be disagreeable or annoying to persons who are innocent of having caused your vexation.

REV. LYMAN WHITING, D. D., in a communication to the Advance, recommends a pastor who is getting old to do more pastoral work among the young than among the old, as in this way he will imbibe, in a measure, the vitalities of young life, and have a freshened, greener and sweeter spiritual manner. He says: "The Hindoo parricidism in our churches comes in part from pastoral neglect of children. Old ministers are often turned out to die, because no little sweet child-love spreads its tendrils over the shortening branches of the parish cedar."

THE MORE believers love God the more they love one another—as the lines of a circle, the nearer they come to the center the nearer they come to each other.

WE CALL the attention of planters and others to the advertisement of B. J. West, Nos. 115 and 117 Magazine street, one of the most extensive establishments of the kind in the South. His stock of plows and improved agricultural implements, plantation hardware, steam engines, saw and grist mills, etc., are of the most approved patterns and manufacture, and are offered at low prices for cash. Mr. West is a reliable dealer, and parties in want of machinery, etc., will do well to examine his stock.

T. WHINREY CARTER, ARCHITECT. The attention of our readers is directed to the card of the above-named gentleman, who is favorably known as an experienced architect, and we feel confident that any business intrusted to his care will receive proper attention. Mr. Carter is now engaged upon the designs for St. Stephen's church, on Napoleon avenue, and also on St. Joseph's, on Common street.

SEE THE advertisement elsewhere of the Crescent Saw Mill Association, whose mills are situated at the foot of General Taylor street, Sixth District. Mr. T. R. Brady is the president and Chere Verneuil the superintendent of this association. Orders for lumber, shingles, laths, etc., left at Box 28, Mechanics' and Dealers' Exchange, will receive attention.

POTATOES, ONIONS, HAMS, BULK SHOULDERS, SAUSAGES, ETC.—Mr. E. H. Roquest No. 45½ Tchoupitoulas, has in store and for sale five hundred barrels potatoes, assorted, five hundred barrels French and Boston choice onions, a large stock of hams, bulk meat, pigs' feet, spare ribs, etc. See advertisement elsewhere.

LOUISIANA REMEDY FOR ALL THROAT AND LUNG COMPLAINTS.—It is a home product, from the Louisiana swamps, which is indorsed by numbers of our citizens, whose certificates can be seen at the depot, No. 104 Camp street, from which it appears that many have been cured by the timely use of this remedy.

PREVIOUS to providing a supply of coal and wood, it will be well to see Messrs. Gorman & McNally, who are ready to offer inducements to purchasers. Their office and yard are at the corner of Rampart and Erato streets, where will always be found a large supply of coal and wood.

THOSE in want of hardware and cutlery are advised to notice the advertisement of V. Oehmichen. At the corner of Bienville and Old Levee streets will be found a well-assorted stock of builders' materials, general hardware and cutlery, which Mr. Oehmichen is offering low for cash.

PEOPLE'S BANK.—It is with pleasure we direct the attention of our readers to the statement of the People's Bank, which appears in another column. We have no doubt that its prosperous career will continue under the present judicious management.

IN ANOTHER COLUMN will be found the statement of the New Orleans National Bank, at the close of business, December 3, 1873. Under the trying circumstances of the past few months, so healthy a condition must be gratifying to its numerous friends.

CONSUMERS of coal and wood are invited to read the advertisement of P. Sullivan, whose yards are situated at No. 391 Julia street, where he keeps on hand a large supply of Pittsburg, Anthracite and Cannel coal, and all kinds of wood.

WE CALL attention to the card of William Velden, dealer in all kinds of wood and coal, which he will deliver to purchasers at the lowest market rates. Office and yard, corner of Prytania and Philip streets.

AT THE corner of Second and Dryades streets Mr. F. Jorger, druggist and apothecary, keeps on hand a fresh stock of drugs and medicines, perfumery, soaps and fancy articles.

AT THE old-established lumber yard of Thomas Hasam, corner of Cedar and Julia streets, will be found every description of lumber, sash, blinds, etc. Cabins made to order.

JOHN MANING, No. 112 Annunciation street, is prepared to deliver, at the lowest market rates, all kinds of wood and coal.

THE crockery store of Messrs. Joseph Wolf & Co. is at No. 531 Magazine street.

COLGATE & CO.'s new perfume for the handkerchief, "CASHMERE BOUQUET," will be appreciated by all who have enjoyed the delicate and peculiar fragrance of their toilet soap of the same name, which is so universally popular. je12 1y

TAKE SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR

THE FAVORITE HOME REMEDY.

—IT IS—

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which in all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver diseases most prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE

is eminently a Family Medicine; and by being kept ready for immediate resort will save many an hour of suffering, and many a dollar in time and doctors' bills.

After over forty years' trial it is still receiving the most unqualified testimonials to its virtues from persons of the highest character and responsibility. Eminent physicians commend it as the

MOST EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC

for Constipation, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, bad taste in the mouth, Billious attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, despondency, gloom and forebodings of evil, all of which are the offspring of a diseased Liver.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion it Has No Equal.

Price, $1. Sold by all druggists. se25 1y

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this diffidenity physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY and STRENGTHEN

At One and the Same Time.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is which purifies the blood and removes all corrupt humor and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a strengthening purgative and a purifying tonic.

DR. TUTT'S PILLS are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping or debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

THEODOR DANZIGER & SONS,

N

The Child's Corner.

THE LITTLE BIRD.

A little bird, with feathers brown,
Sat singing on a tree;
The song was very soft and low,
But sweet as it could be.

And all the people passing by Looked up to see the bird
That made the sweetest melody
That ever they had heard.

But all the bright eyes looked in vain,
For birdie was so small;
And with a modest, dark-brown coat,
He made no show at all.

"Why, papa!" little Gracie said,
"Where can the birdie be?
If I could sing a song like that I'd sit where folks could see."

"I hope my little girl will learn
A lesson from the bird,
And try to do what good she can,
Not to be seen or heard.

"This birdie is content to sit
Unnoticed by the way,
And sweetly sing his Maker's praise
From dawn till close of day.

"So live, my child, all through your life,
That, be it short or long,
Though others may forget your looks,
They'll not forget your song."

Lee, in Congregationalist.

How to Become Great.

BY J. H. LAIRD.

Hundreds of you have repeated in your school exercises:

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime."

But you ask: How? A somewhat impatient old gentleman once stopped a bright little fellow abruptly and said:

"What are boys good for?"

The boy answered:

"To make men of, sir."

Yet the question remains: How? Will it be simply by having enough to eat, and growing up?

You may take a little beaver from his nest before his eyes are open, and bring him up in your home; give him bark and roots enough to eat, and he will grow up a nice pet. He will be a real beaver too. Not only will he look like one, but he will act like one. He will want to do just what other beavers do, though he has never seen any of them. By and by he will try to cut sticks and build a dam. If you should take him when his kind gather, in the fall, to build their submarine homes for winter, he would mingle with them, and join in their work and play at once, though he had never seen one of his own people before.

Now suppose you were to do the same thing with a girl or a boy. I think what I have said would be true of the beaver if he had been shut in a cage. A boy or girl shut in a cage when a baby, with only food, if it grew up, would not be a man or woman ready to go into good society, to share the duties and the enjoyments of human life. I cannot stop to tell you all it would lack. You can tell a great many of the things it would lack if it never saw a human face or heard a word spoken or saw the sun or the earth. I think there is no animal that would be so helpless or look so uninteligent.

We can see the difference between ourselves and the brutes. God has given them a nature that is mostly in their bodies. When their bodies grow their instinct grows. They get very little from things outside of them. It makes very little difference with them where they live—whether in a small country or a great one, in a heathen or a Christian land, before the flood or in the present year—they would grow to be the same animals, and have the same knowledge.

Not so with you. You will be affected with every one of these things. It will make a difference with you to know that the world is round; that there are nearly a billion of people on it; that the stars are larger than this world. It makes a very great difference with you to know that there is a God and a heaven, and that you can very greatly affect the happiness of those around you by what you do and say. You will see that what I wanted to say was this: An animal becomes an animal simply by growing up; a human being must not only grow up, but must take into himself a knowledge of the wonderful things about him. If you want a great beaver you must feed him well. If you want to be a great man you must let thoughts about great things come into your soul.

Some men take in very little of the wonders and beauty and goodness there is about them. So we have men of all sizes, from those so small that they are not much above animals all the way up to the noble and glorious men and women that every one loves and praises. The difference is made by the way the mind and heart are opened to take in the great thoughts and interests about us.

You hear something now in your schools about "smart boys," "bright girls," and you will get the impression that there is a very great difference in young people—that the teachers expect great things of some of you, and that others of you will never amount to much, because you are not so smart. As you get a little older you will hear your friends talk about talent—the "splendid talents" of this and that one—and you will get the impression that you can never be great, because you have not talent.

To be ready with thoughts and words is good; but it goes only a little way toward making one great. Remember what I have been telling you—that human greatness is the result of the thoughts and scenes that God has arranged so that they can come into the soul.

Because you have a human mind you can take into yourself the beauty and uses of God's wondrous works around you. Because you have human thought you can take in the great truths about goodness, about evil, wrong and right. And because you have a human heart you can take into your affections a large number of your fellow-beings—can let your sympathy go out to all in the world, and, best of all, you can have your heavenly Father come down to you, and be your best and nearest friend. You want to be great. I think you can be. Not on account of some "brilliant talent" you have, but because you live right on the shores of oceans of greatness, and you can open the door to let them flow in upon your soul. Then it is true:

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime."

For this greatness was not in themselves; it came from the continents and oceans of greatness from which God allowed them to draw soul-food. You may drink from the same, if you will.

So, my young friends who want to grow—and I hope you all want to have noble thoughts, and great, loving hearts—do not be discouraged if you have not much talent; do not trust in it if you think you have. Thousands who have talent are very small, because they think greatness is in themselves, and will not turn to drink at God's deep fountains. A truly noble man says: "I am nothing in myself; all that is in me comes from God's high-piled mountains of everlasting truth around me."

Do not worry, then. Be patient. Don't try to stretch your little empty selves up toward greatness. Welcome all good thoughts, all noble motives; be moved by them, and as you are a human being and God's dear child, you will become great and good.—Little Corporal.

SHARING WITH OTHERS.—A little girl and her younger brother were on their way to the store one windy, frosty morning. They were both poorly dressed, but the girl had a sort of a cloak over her. As they went briskly along she drew the boy nearer to her and said:

"Come under my cloak, Johnny."

"It isn't big enough for both," said he.

"Then I will stretch it a little." And they were soon closely nestled together.

What a lesson! How many shivering bodies and sad hearts there are just because people do not stretch their comforts beyond themselves.

HOW TO TRAVEL FASTEST.—At a tavern in Pennsylvania once a traveler stopped on Saturday evening, and had his horse taken good care of. He was asked if he wanted him brought out early on the following morning.

He answered: "No, indeed."

"Why not?" asked a friend, who knew that he was on a journey.

"Because," said he, "I am on a long journey, and wish to perform it as soon as I can. I have long been accustomed to travel on horseback, and have found that if I rest on Sunday my horse will travel farther during the week than if I do not."

Farm, Garden and Household.

DEVONSHIRE CREAM.—One of the noted luxuries of the west of England is Devonshire cream, or clotted cream. The method of its preparation is as follows: From six to eight quarts of milk are strained into a thick earthenware pan or crock, which, when new, is prepared for use by being stood in clear, cold water for several days, and then scalded three or four times with skimmed milk. The pans may be used if they are scalded in hot bran and left to stand with the bran in them for twenty-four hours. The milk, being strained in the pans, is stood in a cool room from nine to fourteen hours, according to the temperature. It is then carefully moved to the top of the stove or range, or placed over a bright fire (not too near it) and slowly heated, so that at the end of a half hour the cream will have shrunken away from the sides of the pan and gathered into large wrinkles, the milk at the sides of the pan commencing to simmer. The pan is then carefully returned to the cool room, and left about ten hours, when the cream is skimmed off. This cream is very delicious to use on fruit or preserves, and is esteemed a great luxury, selling for about the price per pound of the best butter.

HONEY VINEGAR.—The best of vinegar can be easily and quickly made from honey. To twenty gallons of rain-water add five pounds of honey and two gallons of cider vinegar. If the weather is warm, or it be kept in a warm room or cellar, it will be fit for use in a few weeks; more vinegar added would hasten the process. Every family that keeps bees should be able to have good vinegar all the time. After a barrel is once made, honey and water may be added as the vinegar is used, so as to always keep it nearly full. The barrel should never be entirely full.—D. L. Adair.

A JOHN BULL, conversing with an Indian, asked him if he knew the sun never sets on the Queen's dominions. "No," said the Indian. "Do you know the reason why?" asked John. "Because God is afraid to trust an Englishman in the dark," was the savage's reply.

EDUCATE men without religion and you but make them clever devils.—Duke of Wellington.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.

Obstruction of nasal passages, discharge falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, acrid, or thick and tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid, offensive, etc. In others a dryness, weak or inflamed eyes, ringing in ears, deafness, ulcerations, scabs from ulcers, voice altered, nasal twang, offensive breath, impaired smell and taste, etc. A few only of above symptoms likely to be present in any case at one time.

To cure, take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery earnestly, to correct the blood and system, which are always at fault; also to act specifically, as it does, upon the diseased glands and lining membrane of the nose and its communicating chambers. The more I see of this odious disease, the more positive is my belief that if we would make treatment perfectly successful in curing it we must use constitutional treatment to act through the blood, as well as a soothing and healing local application.—Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, when used warm and applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, effects cures upon common-sense, rational and scientific principles, by its mild, soothing and healing properties, to which the disease gradually yields when the system has been put in perfect order by the use of the Golden Medical Discovery. This is the only perfectly safe, scientific and successful mode of acting upon and healing it.

So successful has the above course of treatment proven that the proprietor offers $500 reward for a case he cannot cure. All the means sold by druggists. R. V. Pierce, M. D., proprietor Buffalo New York.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1873.

Faculty.—REV. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law; REV. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science; G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages; T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science; REV. R. D. NORSWORTHY, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $80; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its inland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—Its Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

The Spring session of this widely-known and popular institution begins on the Twenty-ninth of JANUARY next, and closes on the Seventeenth of June, which is Commencement day. In view of the present financial depression we now make this liberal offer:

FOR NINE HUNDRED DOLLARS, paid in advance, we will give, for one entire session of twenty weeks, to any student in the Collegiate, Scientific or Business course, his board at the Ayars House (now reduced to $40 per month), tuition, fuel, room-rent, washing, library and contingent fees. In the Preparatory Department the charges will be even less. Board at the Ayars House and in private families may be obtained at moderate rates at somewhat more advanced rates. The advantages now offered here to those seeking thorough collegiate training and culture were never excelled in our previous history, as those best acquainted with the school will testify. FROM A RECENT ANALYSIS BY Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Yale College, the following table will show the chemical composition of YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN:

Albuminoids	12.45	Sugar	13.06
Gum	5.21	Starch	55.62
Fat	8.59	Cellulose	2.95
Ash	2.12

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, gluten, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. "These," says Yonmans, "are the flesh-forming principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable to all requiring a highly nutritious and at the same time easily assimilated diet, and hence is used as an article of daily consumption in climates which occasion rapid waste of the system. "Almost all Asiatics, Africans and (aboriginal) Americans use it as their chief nourishment."—Louis Figuier, or his work on the Vegetable World.

In Hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN all the nutritive qualities of the grain are preserved. The grain is cut from the ear and placed in the canisters with the rich juices (or milk) which exude from it, and is then sealed air-tight and the canister subjected to steam heat, which coagulates the albumen. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by this that all the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and the most nourishing article of food in the domain of nature placed within the reach of all.

Thos. Broughton, with John D. Park, of Cincinnati, says: "H. I finally tried your preparation—KRESS FEVER TONIC. One bottle completely broke up the malady, and I am now perfectly well. I can testify that your medicine does all you claim for it; and it is only due to you that this acknowledgment should be made, especially as so many worthless chill medicines are now offered."

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the ninth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales...	21,591
Arkansas		3,872
Mobile		1,610
Texas		450
Total		27,526

On Saturday the business was to a fair extent. Clean, even-running lots commanded full prices. In fact all other desirable kinds were steady, but in some cases, in order to effect sales of the general run of the offerings, factors found it necessary to make slight concessions. Adding 570 to the amount reported gives 10,250 bales as the total sales on Friday, swelling the week's business to 57,000 bales, which was much the heaviest reported this season. On Monday, under the influence of an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool and ½c. in spots at New York, together with an improvement of 2-16 ₱ cent. in foreign exchange, the movement commenced with an active demand, and quite a liberal business was done during the morning, partly at previous rates and partly at an advance of ⅛@¼c., after which it continued animated, and the entire sales summed up 11,125 bales at higher prices. The sales included low ordinary at 10c., ordinary at 11¾c., strict ordinary at 13c., good ordinary at 14@14½c., strict good ordinary at 14¾@15c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 15⅛@15¼c., low middling at 15⅜@15⅝c., strict low middling at 16⅛c., and middling at 16¼c. Toward the close the market appeared to be more quiet, the receipts at all ports showing less falling off than was generally expected. The demand ran more on the lower grades than for some time last. On Tuesday, although the demand continued general, twenty-two brokerage houses participating in the business, yet it evinced very little spirit, and prices exhibited a marked tendency in favor of buyers, resulting in a falling off of 3/16@⅛c. in good ordinary and strict good ordinary, and about ⅛c. in the better qualities, the lower grades maintaining their previous position.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 24,250 bales, against 23,750 for the corresponding time last week and 27,550 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 638,945 bales, against 556,718 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 178,693 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 29,710 to Great Britain, and of 35,926 to France, and a decrease of 71,246 to other foreign ports. We quote:

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

YAZOO CITY, Jan. 8.—Colonel A. T. Morgan, sheriff elect, took possession of the sheriff's office this morning before daylight, driving out Hilliard's deputy. About eight o'clock Sheriff Hilliard summoned an armed posse and attempted to retake possession.

A general shooting with pistols commenced. Sheriff Hilliard was shot through the head, and cannot live through the day. Many spectators will swear that he was shot by Morgan. Frank Stewart, colored, coroner and ranger elect, was also fatally shot, and several others slightly wounded.

No further trouble is apprehended. All parties are Radicals.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The convention of Mexican veterans in the course of the evening selected General Denver as its president. The members meet to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock, at Willard's Hall, and will thence proceed in a body to the Metropolitan Methodist church, where General Negley will deliver an oration.

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—On Sunday, the fourth instant, the Duke of Edinburg arrived at St. Petersburg in good health and capital spirits. About an hour previously the imperial carriage and sledges arrived at the railway station to receive him, and presently a guard of honor, with a band at its head and the Russian eagle displayed, was drawn up on the platform.

Soon afterward the Grand Duke Alexis appeared on the scene, saluting the guard with a hearty "Good-morning, soldiers," and was received with a stentorian response. Next came the Grand Duke Nicholas, who gave and received the same greeting, and it now only remained for the Emperor to appear, which he did a few minutes after two o'clock, accompanied by a brilliant staff, among whom was the British embassador.

So soon as the train had entered the station the Duke of Edinburg jumped out and advanced to the Emperor, who gave him a most affectionate welcome, as did also the grand dukes in turn; the band in the meanwhile playing "God Save the Queen." The chief thoroughfares were gaily decorated with flags. When the duke arrived at the Winter Palace he was received by the Empress and Princess Marie, together with the imperial household.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The nomination of Morrison R. Waite, of Ohio, to be chief justice of the Supreme Court was a surprise to senators and all others about the capitol, including the justices of the court. It did not occasion the same degree of wonder as when Caleb Cushing's name was transmitted for the same office. Subsequently the Senate, in executive session, referred the nomination to the committee on the judiciary, who will probably report favorably on it to-morrow.

Many inquiries were made as to the standing of this gentleman, he not having a national reputation. The nomination recalled the fact that he acted as one of the counsel at the Geneva tribunal of arbitration; and some of the senators remembered him as an able lawyer of thirty years' standing in Ohio; and, although a Republican, not an active partisan. At the present time he is the president of the Ohio Constitutional Convention.

JACKSON, Jan. 19.—The Supreme Court to-day decided that the general election of November last was constitutional.

The new Legislature will convene to-morrow. General Ames, the Governor elect, and all other State and county officers elect, will at once enter upon their duties.

WHEELING, W. VA., Jan. 19.—Rev. J. J. Q. Malone, rector of St. Matthew's Episcopal church, of this city, has dissolved his connection with the ministry of said church on account of the growing tendency of the Episcopal body throughout the United States to ritualistic practice. For the present he does not join the Cummins movement, although he indorses it, but will await the action of the church in Virginia and West Virginia.

AUSTIN, Jan. 20.—The president of the Senate to-day discharged all assistant sergeants-at-arms, there being no further use for them. The votes for other State officers were counted to-day. Their majorities average the same as that for Governor, which now reaches fifty thousand.

The contest for United States senator has increased in interest. There are now five candidates in the field: Throckmorton, Reagan, Demerse, Naxey and Flournoy.

ATLANTA, GA., Jan. 20.—The Legislature to-day passed a resolution congratulating Texas upon her release from Radical rule; also thanking President Grant for his impartial decision in the Texas matter.

NEW YORK, Jan. 20.—A dispatch from Richmond, Virginia, says a dispatch from Greensboro, North Carolina, gives the announcement of the sudden death of the Siamese twins on Saturday morning last, at their residence at Mount Airy, Surrey county, North Carolina.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, VIA HAVANA, Jan. 5.—Congress will adjourn its session on the fifteenth instant.

An opposition to President Lerdo de Tejada is forming. Some of the journals which first changed their political complexion to the opposition were formerly government organs.

There is a majority in Congress of five for the Vera Cruz railroad proposition, and it is considered certain that the Mexican company, who have received the concession for the construction of the International railroad, are unable to begin the work for want of funds and credit at home and abroad.

The serious disturbances in the City of Mexico have ceased.

President Lerdo has summoned all the State Governors to the national capital to discuss affairs of State.

MADRID, Jan. 14.—The government force, on occupying Carthagena, found the fortifications and buildings badly damaged by the bombardment.

One of the insurgent steamers, which attempted to escape, was captured with a large number of refugees on board.

The Mendez Nunez, with another party of insurgents, succeeded in reaching a port of France, into which she was pursued by a French man-of-war. Members of the Junta surrendered the ironclad Numancia to the French authorities at Mers-el-Kebin, and the tri-color now flies at her masthead.

MADRID, Jan. 15.—The government troops shot ten insurgents while attempting to escape from Carthagena; otherwise the occupation has been free from bloodshed.

The condition of the forts around Carthagena indicates that there was treachery. Provisions were plentiful in the town.

The Intransigentes at Barcelona have surrendered. The authority of the government is fully restored there.

At a meeting of the deputies, constituting a majority in the late Cortes, a vote of confidence in Castelar was adopted, and he was requested to prepare a manifesto to the nation.

The iron clad Numancia has been delivered to a Spanish frigate. The insurgent chiefs, Contreras Ferrez and Galoes, have been sent to the capital of Algeria, and the other Carthagenian refugees were placed in the forts and barracks of Oran and Mers-el-Kibin.

MATAMORAS, Jan. 15.—The right of trial by jury has been established in the State of Tamaulipas in criminal cases, the law having been proclaimed with great solemnity by the civil and military authorities in the plaza. Jury trials have heretofore been unknown to the laws of Mexico.

The Voz Publica announces that Leon Gusman, the attorney general of Mexico, has resigned because he was not in accord with President Lerdo in his administration of the national government.

Trouble in the Country.

Recently the negroes in Terrebonne parish, Louisiana, made some violent and threatening demonstrations. The Daily Picayune furnishes the following history of the affair:

The late difficulty which occurred in Terrebonne parish seems to be a fair example of the manner in which a large number of the negroes in the State expect to conduct themselves under the prevailing system of Republican government, and it is hoped the salutary check given them by the State forces will prove a lesson they will heed in the future.

The first difficulty, it appears, originated on the evening of January 5, when about two hundred plantation laborers met at the Zion church, about a mile and a half below Houma, and organized an association whose objects, explained by resolutions passed, were:

"1. To form sub-associations and rent lands to work by themselves, they agreeing to wave all laborers' privileges on the crop made to such persons who would rent them the land, and also furnish supplies to make the crop and subsist themselves.

"2. Binding themselves not to work for any planter for less than $20 per month, rations, etc., the payments to be made monthly in cash.

"3. That they would allow the person furnishing the supplies to appoint an agent on the place to take charge of the interest of whoever should furnish the supplies until the crop should be made and shipped to market, the factor or the furnisher of supplies to have the privilege of selling the crop and deducting the amounts due for the laborers."

To ratify these another meeting was called on the eighth instant, when the most incendiary speeches were made, principally by W. H. Keys and T. P. Shurbem, who advised them, if the lands were not given, to seize them by force; also not to allow any one to work for any wages under those stipulated, which were, at the most, simply outrageous. After the meeting a mob, headed by a fife and drum, paraded through Houma, threatening the citizens, but doing no harm. On the Tuesday following a man named Alfred Kennedy and about fifty armed men came down the bayou, and, upon arriving at the Southdown plantation of Mr. H. O. Minor, halted for the purpose of preventing his laborers from working.

Mr. Minor, however, met them and explained that his people were peaceably working, and he would not allow them to interfere. After hesitating awhile they retired, though threatening to shortly return and burn his sugar-house. The next day they did return, but were met by the colored sheriff Lyons, with a posse of white and colored men, and they agreed to disperse upon condition the posse was disbanded. Captains Snow and Joseph, of the State troops, arriving at this opportune moment, however, considerably dampened their ardor; the more when these gentlemen stated their action would not be tolerated by the State government. Still persisting in their demands, however, the troops under Colonel Flanagan were telegraphed for, and sent, as already published; the rioters, before their arrival, firing into the train as it passed Terrebonne, and severely wounding Mr. Gery, who was a passenger in one of the cars.

With the troops came Colonel DeKlyne, deputy United States marshal, who, with the assistance of the cavalry under Captain Taylor, arrested the ringleaders, as follows: Philip Gray, Calvin Morris, Robert Jones, James McGinnis, Abe Chesnut, R. Mobly, R. Baron, Alfred Kennedy, Henry White, Edward Bradford, R. Kennedy and Calvin W. Williams.

After the arrest of these and the arrival of the troops it was decided that a grand mass meeting should be held. This took place on Saturday, when Keys and others made speeches, followed by Mr. Minor, when everything was satisfactorily arranged and the troops yesterday returned to the city. The prisoners were marched to the Parish Prison and locked up, and the soldiers were dismissed to their homes, all apprehension of difficulty, at least for the present, being over.

Our Modern Bastile.

Under this heading the Picayune of January 18 notices an abuse of power which has seldom been equaled in modern times. The statements are as follows:

Some months ago, it will be remembered, the police militia, under Colonel DeKlyne, and others, invaded Grant parish, and after overrunning the country arrested seven of its prominent citizens and brought them to this city, when they were incarcerated in the Parish Prison, where they have remained since without trial, without sufficient food, and subject to all the horrors of a close confinement, not even being allowed to stir beyond the walls for a moment to catch a breath of fresh air. These gentlemen—William Cruickshank, John P. Hadnot, William Erwin, D. Lemonic, A. P. Gibbon, J. P. Lemoule and Clem Penn—were all arrested on warrants alleged to have been sworn to by two ignorant negroes, under what is known as the Kuklux act; and this is all that holds them. Repeated efforts have been made by themselves and friends to obtain a trial or arraignment, or something under which they can be placed under bonds and allowed to return to their plantations, which are sadly in need of their attention; but all without effect, the United States officials being stolidly indifferent to every appeal on the subject, and unmindful of the constitutional right of every man, which guarantees a prompt and speedy trial.

Nor is this all. Some two weeks subsequently Judge A. C. Lewis, a prominent planter of the same district, who, too old and infirm to even take part in any political proceedings, visited the city for the purpose of consulting medical authority relative to his health, was seized on the streets, and, without word or warning, thrust into the same prison.

These statements, outrageous as they may appear, are nevertheless facts, and go to show the manner in which some of our people have been treated by a government which pretends to be free and equal to all.

These gentlemen were on Saturday morning visited by a representative of the Picayune, and their statements obtained on the subject. They are mostly old gentlemen—Judge Sims especially so; his health, infirm at the time of his incarceration, has grown feebler and feebler every day, until now he can barely stand alone. The other gentlemen, once strong and able-bodied, have during this bitter weather been so chilled that their suffering has been intense; and yet, though Colonel Patton and Captain Fremaux do everything in their power to make them comfortable, they are subject to a close confinement, which has told upon them terribly, until they are mere wrecks of men.

Imagine a room ten by twelve, stone roof, stone walls, bare floor, iron grated bars, on the walls a miserable colored print; the furniture a bare deal table, and hard bed with scanty covering, and small protection from the wind rushing through the cracks in the window. This is the accommodation, the best that can be had! What must the worst be? With men of the city—men used to culture, thieves, assassins and cutthroats generally—it must be hard, but what to men of education, gentlemen of wealth and respectability, guilty of no crime, held under no direct charge, and ready at all times for a lawful trial. It is unspeakably hard, and no wonder, as day by day they have watched the shadow of the sun come up on the walls and go down at night, their faces have grown thinner, their hearts weaker and their hopes very faint indeed.

It is stated, and has been over and over again, that the reason of their incarceration without trial is that Judge Durell has no right to hold court, and they must wait until next September for trial; but if so, when that time comes and they are released, what can compensate them for all these months of confinement? Nothing. And they therefore demand that they be accorded their rights of a prompt and speedy trial.

IN 1639 the first printing-press in the American colonies was set up in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

OVER one hundred ladies are studying law in the United States.

The Theory of Darwin.

BY DR. THOMAS NICHOLSON.

The following short article is a reply to a query to the writer by Prof. D. K. Whitaker, LL. D., whether he adopted the Darwinian theory:

It will be doubtless conceded that the vegetable world presents the most obvious illustration of adaptation of means to an end, in its countless and varied relations to the animal kingdom, that by its means the wants and requirements of the latter, under every conceivable circumstance of place and climate, are completely and most wonderfully fulfilled, and that such fulfillment is so perfect as to exclude the possibility of its being the result of accident, or even remotely suggesting the theory of natural selection. The survival of the fittest is not an original theory of Dr. Darwin. It is a leading notion, or doctrine, if you please, of the book of books—to be found from Genesis to Revelation. None but the moral heroes of the Bible win in the race for heaven. Only those who conquer or "overcome" the "principalities" or "powers" in the great struggle of life can win the "crown of righteousness." The notion of this moral struggle radiates on every page of Jewish and Christian history, and is exemplified in the individual life history of the illustrious worthies of both Testaments. The survival of the fittest, and only they, is the sublime lesson sincerely and fervently pressed from every pulpit in Christendom.

A philosophical consideration of the Darwinian theory suggests the following questions, viz.: If the different species of animals have become developed by a process of natural selection, upon what theory is it attempted to be shown that the development of the vegetable world has taken place?

Did such development occur before that of the animal world, or has it taken place with the latter pari passu? It could not have occurred subsequently. Therefore, if it be assumed that it occurred before, then by such assumption it is implied that the animal kingdom became adapted to the vegetable—a circumstance which would presuppose a foregone necessity for a development in a special direction, in precedence of natural selection.

If it be held that it occurred progressively with that of the animal world, then of necessity its wonderfully subservient adaptation to the latter would imply the possession of powers which it is known not to possess.—New Orleans Times.

Model Stewards.

MR. EDITOR: A first-rate steward must have a clear, sound appreciation of the value of the gospel, of the ministry and of their great work. He must have a great, strong love for God's cause, a warm heart and a generous soul. Having all these, he will be a brave man to defend, and an earnest man to plead for the proper support and propagation of such a glorious cause. Such stewards are a great blessing to the ministry, to the church and to the world. It is a rare thing, Mr. Editor, to find such stewards; but, sir, I was most agreeably surprised, at my first quarterly meeting this new year, at a recently established and nice little station on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, to find three such stewards—Bros. S. T. Taylor, Angus Taylor and W. S. Davis. Although the new preacher did not reach the place until two days before the quarterly meeting, and had never preached there, and was a stranger, they received him cordially, treated him kindly, and just as soon as the Quarterly Conference was organized and the question of finance came up, these stewards made a liberal allowance for their pastor and presiding elder, and in a few moments walked up to the secretary's table and counted out and turned over, cheerfully and happily, more than one-fourth of the whole allowance to their preachers, in cash. Now, Mr. Editor, I call these model stewards. I expect to see that church prosper. If we had five hundred such stewards divided out among the various charges in the Mississippi Conference, we would soon witness a great freshet in the financial channels of the church, and then God would pour us out such a spiritual blessing that there would not be room to receive it. "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy vats shall burst out with new wine." "Give, and it shall be given to you; good measure, heaped up, shaken together and running over."

MERIDIAN, MISS., Jan. 6, 1874.

A Card.

A meeting of the undersigned members of the Louisiana Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, passengers on board the steamer Robert E. Lee, on our return from Conference, was called in the cabin. On motion Rev. J. E. Cobb was requested to take the chair and Rev. J. Gorton Miller to act as secretary. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we hereby express our hearty thanks to the commander and officers of the steamer Robert E. Lee for the gentlemanly and courteous bearing, princely hospitality and reduction of fare extended to us on our trip.

Resolved, That though the steamer Robert E. Lee needs no commendation from us, yet we hesitate not to commend her to the traveling public as possessing every desired quality of speed, safety and comfort.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to Captain Campbell, and that they be published in the Vicksburg Herald and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

REV. J. W. BULL, M. D., a member of the Baltimore Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, died at Alexandria, Virginia, on the morning of the twenty-fifth ultimo. He had been ill during a considerable time, and his death was not unexpected.

PUNCH'S idea of family government:

Mother—"Where's baby, Mary?"

Mary—"In the other room."

Mother—"Go directly and see what she is doing, and tell her she mustn't."

All Along the Line.

The proposition to purchase $100 worth of our publications, and pay for them within ninety days, was first submitted to the Louisville Conference, and accepted with an enthusiasm that gave every assurance of success. A large number of the members of the Conference have promptly responded to the resolution adopted, and have sent us their orders, in whole or in part. To accomplish the purpose contemplated the action must be general, embracing every section of the church and every member of the Conference. Although the ninety days have elapsed since the proposition was first submitted, it is not yet too late to give us the needed help. Up to this time our Publishing House has been kept above the waters by the prompt responses of so many of our brethren. We insist on every preacher doing his duty. With a fair prospect of success, let us not, for want of proper effort, fail. We publish below the list of preachers in the Louisville Conference who have sent their orders on this proposition. We will publish lists of other Conferences next week, and from time to time until we go through the Conferences. A complete list will be published before the General Conference meets.

HYMNOLOGY.

In the collection of Sternhold and Hopkins, 1580, we have the following paraphrases of Scripture:

Why dost withdraw thy hand abacke
And hide it in thy lap?
O pluck it out, and be not slack
To give thy foes a rap.

The race is not unto the man
That can the fastest run,
Nor the battle to the people
Who shoot with the longest gun.

To whosoever wicked is,
An enemy's to the Lord—
Shall quaile, yea, melt even as a lamb's grease,
Or smoke that flies abroad.

The righteous shall his sorrows scan,
And laugh at him, and say: Behold!
What has become of this here man,
That oo his riches was so bold?

All hail, thou glorious sun!
Bright as a new tin pan;
The roundest, purest, surest source
Of bread and cheese to man.

Methodist Sketches.

MR. EDITOR: In this sketch I propose to introduce the name of R. L. Kennon, M. D., a man of precious memory wherever he was known. In stature he was small and delicately constituted. He moved to this State at an early period, settled in Tuskaloosa and took up the practice of medicine. He entered the itinerancy in the Georgia Conference at a very early age, and pretty well exhausted his physical man in the arduous work of an itinerant preacher. He did not, however, remain many years in a local capacity, but re-entered the itinerancy (year not recollected.) In this service he died, while attending the Annual Conference in Columbus, Mississippi, at the house of Major William Dousing, whose wife was a relative of Dr. Kennon. In 1832, according to my recollection, his remains were carried to Tuskaloosa and there buried.

As a pulpit orator Dr. Kennon had few equals in the Alabama Conference, and no superiors at that day. His discourses carried with them a dense body of divinity. His reading was thorough and extensive, which enabled him at all times to interest and instruct the most refined society, as well as the most humble and illiterate. It may well be said of him, as it is written in God words: "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." He threw all his powers of mind and body into his work of saving souls. At times he was so completely absorbed with his work that he seemed to lose sight of the common occurrences of life passing around him. On one occasion he was met by a friend walking the streets of Tuskaloosa bareheaded. His friend remarked: "Doctor, where's your hat?" He quickly threw up his hand to his head and remarked that he had forgotten it when he left his study.

His eloquence in the pulpit was not of that kind which captivated his hearers with a mere play upon words, but rather of that kind which deeply impressed them with his subject. Such was the fervor of his soul that his audience could but be seriously impressed. I have heard him for two hours or more in one sermon, yet never heard any one complain of weariness. His sermons were delivered without being written out. If he used even notes, they were scant. His fund of ideas and command of language enabled him to interest his hearers. Indeed his pulpit efforts would not have been so interesting and impressive had they been written out. When he entered the pulpit he seemed to lose sight of everything save Christ and the sinner. This was the great secret of his popularity and success. This was the all-absorbing thought, whether in or out of the pulpit, with him. His favorite themes were the atonement and sanctification.

In connection with Dr. Kennon I beg to introduce to the reader the name of Rev. James H. Millard, who moved from South Carolina to this State in 1825. In stature he was considerably below medium size, but what there was of him was every inch a man. He entered the itinerancy in the South Carolina Conference when quite young, and, being full of zeal, he had pretty well worn himself out when I first knew him. He, however, never lost his zeal, even when local, in which condition he did not remain, but re-entered the itineraney, and did good service as long as he was able to ride. He was a very fearless man, and rarely lost an opportunity to reprove sin, no matter where or on whom found. He remarked that it was necessary to do this, though unpleasant, and he might as well do it as any one else. This fearless trait in his character rendered him unpopular with that class that called for his reproofs; but he was dearly beloved by the church which he so long and faithfully served.

His style of preaching was instructive and impressive; never at a loss for ideas, or words to express his ideas. He would at the present day be considered too lengthy in his discourses, seldom stopping short of an hour to one and a half hours. At times he was truly eloquent. He did not confine himself to system, but he never uttered a meaningless word. His manner was impromptu—ready on all occasions. I remember on a certain occasion an old brother was trying to preach, but became so entangled and confused that he stopped short and turned round to Bro. Millard, who was in the pulpit, and said: "Bro. Millard, preach to this people. I can't." Bro. Millard rose on the spur of the moment, and took up the subject just where the old brother left off. I do not remember to ever have heard such eloquence fall from the lips of any man. On one occasion, when he was quite a youth, he was preaching in Georgetown, South Carolina, when a mob approached the pulpit to take him down; but the closer they got to the pulpit the harder he poured hot shot among them, and finally they quailed before him, without offering any violence. As to the fear of man he was a stranger; but he sleeps with the thousands of worthies who are resting from their labors.

This closes my sketches. Though meager and imperfectly written, the writer hopes that some competent writer will undertake to write out the history of Methodism in Alabama and Mississippi.

PRATTVILLE, ALA., January 7, 1874.

Items from the Late Session of the Mississippi Conference.

The Sunday school committee reported resolutions, which were passed, that in order to secure a more thorough acquaintance of the children with the doctrine and polity of the church, pastors and superintendents be urged to have the Discipline taught in the Sabbath school; and that the General Conference be memorialized to define more clearly the mode of electing superintendents of Sunday schools.

The secretary of the board of missions was instructed to report to Conference the amounts collected and disbursed during the year, and that he have the report published in the Minutes.

TO PREVENT EXTENSION OF THE TERM OF THE PASTORATE.—A resolution was passed, signed by B. Jones, J. L. Forsyth and F. M. Featherstun, instructing the delegates to the General Conference to use their influence to prevent the extension of the term of the pastorate.

TO ENLARGE THE COURSE OF STUDY.—A resolution was passed to this effect, with especial reference to young men who have not had the benefit of a classical education.

TRAVELING EXPENSES OF DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.—A resolution was passed instructing preachers in charge to take collections, during the months of March and April, to defray the traveling expenses of delegates to the General Conference.

The Missionary Board passed a resolution that hereafter no draft shall be accepted or paid by the treasurer until a satisfactory report shall have been made of the labors of the missionary, and the state of missions in behalf of which the allowance shall have been made.

FOR BISHOPS' AND CONFERENCE FUNDS.—The joint board of finance estimated the amount needed for support of the Bishops to be $1,450; for Conference fund, $5,000. These amounts are apportioned among the districts as follows, viz.:

	Bishops' Fund.	Conference Fund.
Vicksburg district	$225 00	$487 [illegible]
Jackson district	250 00	900 [illegible]
Brandon district	150 00	350 [illegible]
Brookhaven district	225 00	725 00
Woodville district	200 00	700 00
Seashore district	75 00	300 00
Meridian district	250 00	600 00
Summit district	95 00	300 00

Presiding elders are to take the collections for the Bishops.

The General Conference was memorialized to strike from the Discipline, page 152, chapter 9, section 5, clause 7, all after the word final.

JOINT BOARD OF FINANCE.—Clerical: B. Jones, W. C. Black, C. Chamberlin, J. A. Ellis, J. A. Godfrey, H. P. Lewis, C. McDonald and W. B. Lewis. Lay: J. N. Applewhite, W. L. Nugent, J. V. Enochs, T. P. Bell, J. H. Hines, G. Nicholson, W. M. Thornton and T. Reed.

A Scrap of Church History.

FURNISHED BY BRO. P. W. WALKER, AGED SEVENTY-EIGHT YEARS.

DEAR SIR: At your request I take pleasure in furnishing you with a short extract from facts I have obtained and the notes I have made of the introduction and progress of the Protestant religion into this parish since the American government took possession of it in A. D. 1810, and more especially as it relates exclusively to that branch of Christ's church to which you belong.

The Rev. Adonijah Harbour, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, came from Surrey county, North Carolina, to this State, with his large family, in the year A. D. 1801. He first settled in the parish of West Feliciana, where he remained for seven or eight years. He brought with him his Bible, which was then a prohibited book, but to him a precious treasure. He read it daily, prayed with his family and taught them the principles of our holy religion. The ever-vigilant enemies of the Bible being informed of the fact, reported him to the Spanish authorities, who had him arrested and brought before the priest, Father Burke, to answer for a crime which they considered the most heinous. Mr. Harbour being a man of wealth, influence and sterling integrity, the Spanish officers interceded for him, and, after having been severely reprimanded by the priest and forbidden to read any more the obnoxious book, he was discharged.

Mr. Harbour disposed of his property in Feliciana and came to East Baton Rouge in the year 1808 or 1809, and purchased a large tract of land on the Bayou Manchac. Several of his sons and one of his daughters, Mrs. Harelson, wife of John Harelson, settled near him. On the first Sabbath after the adjournment of the convention, which, in the name of the inhabitants of the Florida parishes, renounced the allegiance to the Spanish crown, Mr. Harbour collected his family and friends at his house, and then and there preached to them the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. It was the first Protestant sermon delivered in this parish, and probably the first preached in any of the Florida parishes. He organized a church, and continued to preach at that place until his death, on the thirty-first of August, 1815. A large number of his descendants, to the third and fourth generation, are living in this and the adjoining parishes. Nearly all of the inhabitants at that time belonged to the Roman Catholic Church. A few acknowledged to Mr. Harbour that before coming here they were Protestants, but through fear had kept their light hid.

The writer came here about the year 1820, and was married to the youngest daughter of Mr. Harbour on the twenty-third of June, 1823, from whom he learned most of the facts above stated.

EAST BATON ROUGE, Louisiana.

The undersigned received this from the above writer, Mr. P. W. Walker, on the twelfth day of December, 1871. Mr. Walker is well in his seventy-eighth year.

Wesley Chapel Sunday School.

MR. EDITOR: The Sunday school at Wesley chapel send greetings, wishing you a happy New Year, and ask for a respectful notice in a corner of your paper. The school is held at Wesley chapel, four miles east of Pontchatoula station. It was organized, one year ago last May, by Colonel Terry as superintendent, and his lady and a few friends as assistants in the enterprise. The prospects were not the most flattering, for it was predicted to be a short-lived thing, like many of its predecessors. So little was the interest taken in it that there were no more than twelve or thirteen scholars present, and those not altogether punctual attendants. But the patrons of the school kept at work, with the colonel at their head, and on the fourth of July last the school held a celebration, and several prizes in the shape of books, etc., were distributed. From about a dozen pupils at the commencement, the school had now on its roll more than forty scholars. The school to-day has celebrated Christmas and New Year together. The exercises were singing, prayer, reading the Scriptures and an address for the occasion. The attendance was respectable, and quietude and good order were maintained. A Christmas-tree had been planted, and when it was unveiled the school gathered around it, and lo! there were suspended from its branches a present for each one. I trust a new interest is awakened in the cause of the Sunday school; and the coming May anniversary, now looked forward to, I trust, will deepen that interest. We would all, Mr. Editor, like to form your acquaintance, and hear you talk as Christian editors alone can talk in the cause of Sunday schools. May we claim you as our guest at the coming anniversary? J. BOYES.

WESLEY CHAPEL, January 1, 1874.

(NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Nothing would please us better than to be with our friends of Wesley chapel, and to enjoy the exercises of their anniversary. But, alas for us! we fear that it will be impossible. May God bless the school and all connected with it.)

Colportage in the Levant.

JOURNAL OF GIURGIUS AUKKAR.

BIBLE HOUSE,
Constantinople, Oct. 21, 1873.

In August, 1872, I left Beirut for Zahleh, and thence went down the Bukaa, east of Lebanon, to Kub Ellas and Altaneet to Rashelya-el-Wady, where I found a school of the Damascus mission, of forty boys and forty girls. The papal priest was much enlightened and in distress of mind, seeking some way of escape.

At Kamid-el-Towz I found an extraordinary community of people, followers of Sheikh Muhyed-deen Ibu Arab, a sect of Sulites, who believe in a kind of trinity—i. e., that God has three persons. I stopped at the house of Sheikh Ahwedel-Bekri, the governor and religious sheikh. He asked me: "How do the Christians prove that Christ is the Son of God?" I said: "He is of God's nature and essence, but we do not say that he begets or is begotten." He asked: "How can he be in heaven and on earth about the same time? or did the second person separate himself from the first when Christ became incarnate?" I said, "No," and used an illustration such as they are accustomed to. "When the sun shines on the earth, and the light enters a house, does the light separate itself from the sun?" He accepted the illustration and said: "Very well. But how about his sufferings?" I said: "It is like driving a nail into a wall on which the light shines—does the light suffer from the nail?" He said: "No. That is precisely the Sufite doctrine, as taken from the words of our Sheikh Muhyed-deen Ibu Arab."

I then asked him about faith and works, and whether salvation is from works? He said: "No, from faith alone." "Then why do you practice ablutions and pilgrimages, and fastings in Ramadan, and other Moslem observances?" He said: "We do it outwardly, but the Moslems really regard us as heretics, and we regard all these outward rites as useless."

I asked: "What do you believe about the salvation of women?" He was silent and gave no reply. I then gave him a New Testament, and he began to read in it from the nineteenth chapter of Matthew, when suddenly he said that he regarded the Koran and the gospel as of equal authority, but "we are not like the Moslems, who take the Koran literally; we receive it spiritually." I then asked why they followed the Koran literally in the matter of divorce? He was silent, but his wife spoke out: "Your religion is certainly better than ours." The sheikh said nothing. I asked if they wished a school. He said: "Yes, but we can do nothing in the absence of our great sheikh, who is in Aere or in Tersheeba, near Aere. But if you should open a school you will be the means of saving more than twenty thousand souls." As the people were all busy in wheat harvest I did not remain long, but went on to Teb Jenin. The priest came in to discuss on confession, priestly absolution and saint worship, but soon went away, the people declaring to him: "You are beaten in the argument and the man is right." We then read the Scriptures and conversed with the people until late at night. Thence I returned north along the eastern side of the Bukaa, to Kefr Zebad and Serain, where the papal priest was teaching the boys. He asked if I had books from the Jesuit press. I told him: "No, only Scriptures and evangelical tracts." He refused to let the boys buy. Thence I came to Tulya, where I visited the Scotch school and heard the boys recite. A Greek in the village, named Ibrahim Effendi, argued with me to prove that it is right for Christians to marry more than one wife. I answered him from the New Testament, proving that it is not right.

On Monday I visited the Bedaween Arabs encamped in that region, and found a Moslem khateeb teaching them, whose daughter knew the Koran by heart, and was correcting the reading of the children without a book. I conversed a long time with the khateeb about the faith of Abraham, the friend of God, and the children begged permission to purchase Testaments, but he forbade them. I then went around from tent to tent, talking with the Arabs until evening, when I returned to Tulya. On Tuesday I left for Baalbec, where I was taken ill with fever, and lay four days very sick in a khan. On Saturday evening I left by night for Ras, six hours to the north, where I spent the Sabbath in trying to talk with the people, but, being still unwell, my tongue and throat were too dry to allow of my preaching to them. When I left Ras for Hums my muleteer was a Greek, who listened to the preaching of the word as we journeyed, with great gladness, and promised to always entertain at his house any Protestant who might visit his village. On Monday noon we reached Hums, and after resting made a tour to the Moslem and Christian villages in the vicinity, but, being still unwell, I returned to the city after two days. I found the people everywhere ready and willing to hear the truth.

On Sunday I attended the Protestant church. About one hundred men, women and children were present, and all showed great zeal in listening to the preaching of their native pastor, Yusef Bedr. The brethren there have a custom that when any one is ill the women visit the family of the sick in the morning, and the men in the evening, and thus no one is left unvisited. I went through the streets with the brethren, and was much gratified with what I saw and heard. On reaching Hamath my books were examined by the customhouse officers: A Greek clerk, an elderly man, insulted me, and ordered me to leave the city, but his superior, the Moslem mudir, rebuked him, and when he told me he wished to enter into a discussion with me on religion, the mudir told him to beware how he undertook it, as no one could stand before these Protestants in controversy. I accepted the invitation, and asked him to meet me on Sunday. In going about the city with Nasif, the native preacher, I found a few interested in the truth, and on Sunday we had eight persons at religious worship, among them Naum Naaman, the Syrian Jacobite, with his wife, the first fruits of the gospel in Hamath.—Bible Society Record.

"A SCORE of years since, or more, Father Taylor was among the guests at the session of the Providence Conference, held in the city of Providence. At the close of the services preceding the reading of the appointments, the presiding Bishop called upon the old hero to lead in prayer. He had a very free time, and began to soar upward in one of his flights of eloquence, as he invoked the divine blessing upon the laborers about to receive their appointments. On reaching the climax every one became deeply impressed by the words: "O Lord, send thy servants up to Conference next year with as many sheaves as they can stagger under." No language can describe the effect produced. In the midst of responses and tears the Conference arose, and one strong man, who was kneeling near the writer, said: "I am now ready to go to Jericho."

ONE of the most beautiful images that ever arose upon my imagination was suggested to me by a chance delay for two days, among the lakes and mountains of the Trosach's Glen. I happened to make inquiry what became of the villagers, so suddenly disappearing at nightfall from the streets, and a sandy-haired Scotchman replied: "Most of them would be at prayers about this time!" And I looked up into the far blue sky, and thought how fine a thing it would be to have a resting-place high enough just to hear the murmur of voices, as they read a verse about and sang one of the old psalms, before the impressive hush in which the father offered prayer. How grand would be the swell of sound when a whole village was going on its knees before God!

A CORRESPONDENT of the Germantown Telegraph asserts, giving details, that a smoke-house was built in eastern Pennsylvania in 1790; that during the past season, in repairing the building, a head of wheat was found imbedded in the cap of the gable; that five of the grains thus found were planted, and four of them grew "in bare ground," after having been imbedded in mortar eighty-two years.

A MAN should never be ashamed to own he has been in the wrong, which is but saying, in other words, that he is wiser to-day than he was yesterday.—Pope.

IF A MAN is odious in society he might as well be in prison. The worst prisons are not of stone; they are of throbbing hearts, outraged by an infamous life.

Obituaries.

GILLIE, daughter of Mr. Robert J. and Martha C. Elliott, was born March 17, 1866, and died, at the residence of her parents in East Baton Rouge parish, Louisiana, after an illness of twelve hours, September 20, 1873.

Gillie was the sunshine of that home that is now made dark by her absence, having lived just long enough to show how bright and sprightly she was. God took the sweet little girl to himself.

N. B. YOUNG.

MISS ELVIRA S. MOORE was born in the State of North Carolina about the year 1809 or 1810, and moved to Louisiana in 1850, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South about 1857 or 1858. The writer of this notice knew but little of Sister Moore. She was very modest and retired seemingly, but she loved to talk of the church and its want of prosperity, of Jesus and his power to save, and of her constant, abiding trust in the merits of his blood. Of this I have been assured by one who knew her well. She lived a consistent member of the church until her death, on the third of August, 1873, near Winnsboro, Franklin parish, Louisiana. Her seat is vacant in the church here below, but we fondly cherish the hope that she sits where Jesus is, where she can rest from labor, toil and strife, where sorrow is no more.

J. M. MCKEE.

SUSAN LUCINDA RICHARDSON, daughter of John and Rebecca Richardson, was born on the twentieth of December, 1856, and was drowned in the Ouachita river, near Columbia, Louisiana, on the sixteenth of December, 1873. She was ferrying the mail over the river, when the oar-string broke and she fell backward into the water. Her sister, in her efforts to save her, caught her dress, and held on to it until it tore loose from the body, when she sank to rise no more. Her father carried the mail from Columbia to Monroe. From the utmost affection for him in his afflictions, she was ready to assist him in any way she could. She proposed to ferry him across the river, and was always ready to meet him when he came off his trips. He was not with her however, when she came to her unfortunate end, he having been called away on some other business.

A FRIEND.

DIED, in Franklin parish, Louisiana, on the thirtieth of November, 1873, ROBERT B. GERMAN. Bro. German was born in Claiborne county, Mississippi, December 18, 1808, and spent almost his entire life in that State. He moved to our State, however, last winter (about January.) On the thirtieth of October he was born again, at a protracted meeting held at Kenton chapel, at which time and place he joined the church, and was baptized by the writer of this obituary notice. His stay among us was short as a member of the church, but we have hope in his death. He leaves an aged companion and several children and grandchildren to mourn his departure. Weep not, broken-hearted wife; grieve not, children. He whom you have lost was called an affectionate husband and a kind father, and our church has lost one of her valuable members; but we give him up, for the Master called for him. May the Master be a father to the fatherless and the widow's friend.

J. M. MCKEE.

MRS. MARY E. BARNES was born March 23, 1846; married to William Barnes June 30, 1869, and died, at the residence of her beloved father, John B. Lewis, on Steen's creek, in Rankin county, Mississippi, November 8, 1873. She professed religion in 1861, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South under the administration of Rev. William Price.

The sufferings of Sister Barnes were great, but she bore them with the patience and fortitude of a Christian heroine. She loved the Lord Jesus Christ as the Savior of sinners, and in him she trusted. A few days before her death she said to her father: "Let me shout the praises of God aloud;" and while her sun of life was rapidly sinking below the dark hills of death there was a smile of joy upon her lip, and the sting of death had to yield its terrors to that love which had sustained her in life, and gave her the victory over death. Her stay on earth was not long, and we mourn because one so young and lovely, so generous and useful, has been taken from our midst. She leaves a husband and two little children, with a father, brothers and sisters, to mourn the irreparable loss. May we all follow her example, and meet the young Christian in the better land.

W. W. HURST.

MINNESOTA, daughter of Mr. D. B. and Mrs. Minerva E. Morgan, was born January 8, 1869, and died July 31, 1873, aged four years, six months and twenty-three days.

In the last thirty-six hours of little Minnie's life we have a remarkable exhibition of a child's faith in God, and of the presence of the Holy Spirit with her. For hours before she died she talked as though she was in the presence of angels. During this time her language was extraordinary for one of her age. She asked her mother what it was to belong to the church; and when this was explained she expressed a desire to be in the church. She told her mamma that she would not get well, and repeatedly said she was going to heaven. She told her grandmother that she was going to see her grandfather Powers, who had died in triumphant faith only a few months before. A few hours before her little spirit had fled she looked up into her father's face and said: "Papa, I am happy." Her physician offered her water and she refused, saying that the angels would give her water. Flowers were offered her, and she refused all except the white ones. She spoke of the flowers and everything about her bed as looking like they had icing on them. She told her father to tell her sister Emma, who was absent, that she was going to heaven. During an illness of eleven weeks of her mother she often went and kneeled at her sick mother's bed, and prayed, covering her little face in her hands; and after she herself was on her death-bed she prayed, saying: "Dear Jesus, make my sick mamma well." May God draw little Minnie's parents to himself.

N. B. YOUNG.

MRS. ELLEN M. GREAVES, of Madison county, Mississippi, died December 25, 1873. Many hearts will be saddened by this announcement, and many friends will appreciate the irreparable loss sustained by a numerous circle of family connections, by a devoted husband and by five precious children. Alas, that one upon whose life the happiness of so many was dependent should be called away! Man's judgment would say: "Take any, yea, all others, sooner than the mother of a family of little children, one scarcely a year old." But God has decided differently, and God knoweth what is best and doeth what is best; therefore faith saith, even while the heart is sorrowing and the way is dark: "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good."

Mrs. Greaves was blessed in life far above the lot of the majority. She was reared in affluence, and in a circle of accomplished and refined relations and friends. Her education was completed at the school of Dr. Elliott, in Nashville, Tennessee. To say this is to say, at least to the many who knew that school in its palmiest days before the war, that her educational privileges were equal to the very best. She was married just as she grew into a blooming womanhood, to Dr. William F. Greaves, and the union was blessed of God by natures that grew into congeniality with each other, by peaceful and prosperous circumstances, and by a comely and sprightly offspring. She was of a most amiable character, and was loved by all who knew her. With her husband she joined the Methodist Church in the fall of 1869, and continued an exemplary member till her death.

Neuralgia of the heart was the disease of which she died, and so unexpectedly and quickly did it perform its sorrowful work that there was no time for a testimony of hope or triumph, so desirable to weeping friends. But the testimony of a meek and quiet spirit, of a life devoted to Christ, of the exemplification of the Christian graces, is guarantee convincing and consoling, of her abundant "entrance through the gates into the city."

C. G. ANDREWS.

JACKSON, LA., January 4, 1874.

AT THE fourth Quarterly Conference for Natchez station, held November 29, 1873, it was, on motion,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to draft suitable resolutions expressive of the sense of this conference occasioned by the death, October 2, 1873, of Hon. D. L. Rivers.

Whereupon George I. Dicks, F. A. W. Davis and S. L. Guice were appointed, who reported the following, which was unanimously adopted.

GEORGE I. DICKS.

See. Quarterly Conference.

IN MEMORIAM.—HON. DOUGLASS RIVERS.

Resolved, That the absence of Hon. Douglass L. Rivers from this Quarterly Conference makes us painfully aware of the sad loss the church has sustained in his death.

Resolved, That while we feel unable to shape expression so as to embody our full appreciation of his worth, we nevertheless feel that it is due to ourselves to leave some memorial that shall bear testimony to the sincerity of our esteem for his Christian character and his blameless life.

Resolved, That in the purity and generosity of his habits, the zeal and integrity of his devotion to truth and duty, the wisdom of his counsels and the breadth of his charity, there was illustrated the highest type of manhood—a Christian gentleman.

Resolved, That while the fidelity and courage with which he discharged official and political trusts secured for him the fullest confidence of the public, the most noble and brilliant traits of his character were reserved for the hours of unrestrained domestic life, on the companionship of the friends in whom he confided.

Resolved, That, bereft of his example and the service he above others seemed fitted to perform, the church is made sad by his death, and that the measure of our grief shall be the measure of our sympathy with the afflicted family.

Resolved, That the secretary of this Quarterly Conference be required to have the above testimony and memorial published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; and to furnish a copy to the family of our deceased brother.

JAPANESE, Chinese artisans and Bedouin Arabs from continued practice use their toes nearly as readily as their fingers. Short and cramped ours are in their stiff leather shoes we have scarcely any will-power over them. But the Chinese and Japanese workmen actually pick their tools with their toes and work with them thus handled, while other operations are conducted with the instruments in their hands. We have often seen chisels held by the handle with the left hand, while the toes guided the cutting edge in working beautiful forms in a lathe. At Constantinople. Arabs braid mats with their fingers and toes, laboring in concert.

IT IS ON the cross of Christ we see reality in God's hatred of sin and love to the sinner. We hear of a stupendous mystery, God manifest in the flesh, too much as a tale that is told; we set about seeking an interest in it too much like a child's play; but we cannot dwell long in Gethsemane or on Calvary without perceiving that there is a reality in sin, a reality in justice, a reality in punishment, a reality in love.

THE LIVING FOUNTAIN.

BY PROF. T. C. UPHAM.

I hear the tinkling camel's bell
Beneath the shade of Eliel's mount,
And man and beast, at Jacob's well,
Bow down to taste the sacred fount.

Samaria's daughter, too, doth share
The draught that earthly thirst can quell;
But who is this that meets her there?
What voice is that at Jacob's well?

"To I ask of me, and I will give,
From my own life, thy life's supply;
am the fount! Drink, drink and live!
No more to thirst, no more to die."

Strange, mystic words, but words of Heaven;
And they who drink to-day, as then,
To them shall inward life be given—
Their souls shall never thirst again!

r Samuel Baker on Central Africa.

Sir Samuel Baker, says Zion's Herld, delivered an address on Central frica, in the theater of the London niversity recently, of which the llowing is a synopsis:

Upon the arrival of their royal ghnesses, the Prince of Wales and uke of Edinburg, at half-past eight, r Bartle Frere took the chair, and, fter offering a few preliminary remarks, asked Sir Samuel Baker to ive the meeting an account of what e had seen and heard and done n the regions of the Upper Nile. Cheers.)

Sir Samuel, in response to this invitation, after remarking that he had ooked forward as his very great reward to the reception which had been given to him, said he would proceed to give his report, and in as concise a manner as he could present an outline of all that had passed from the commencement to the end of his late undertaking. The distinguished speaker was received with loud applause, and commenced by saying:

"It is important to everybody to know what was the real intention of the Viceroy of Egypt in undertaking the great enterprise which had been carried through. In those countries beyond the regions of the Upper Nile there were between ten and fifteen thousand slavers, miserable outcasts from society, who avoided the necessity of labor by kidnapping men, women and children in the interior. The viceroy had determined to put down this traffic, which had existed from time immemorial, and he (Sir Samuel Baker) had received an invitation to accompany him and the Prince and Princess of Wales on their tour through Upper Egypt.

"The viceroy went forth on this expedition with one thousand seven hundred men; but it must be remarked that the progress of Egypt was represented by three persons—the viceroy and two of his ministers, Nubi Pacha and Cherif Pacha. He had to place himself in opposition to the opinions of his country; and Sir Samuel, finding himself in command of a Mohammedan force destined to put down this cherished Mohammedan institution, the meeting could imagine that the expedition was thwarted by every possible intrigue. The staff of the expedition was composed of Lieutenant J. A. Baker, royal navy, Sir Samuel's nephew, Mr. Higginbottom, a most able engineer, six mechanics from Samuda & Co., Dr. Joshua Gedge and Signor Marco Polo.

"On arriving at Khartoum he found that his officers had fraternized with the slave-hunting parties, and the expedition proved then a failure. The following year he started again with a force of one thousand two hundred men, and succeeded in cutting a canal through the marsh and tangled vegetation, and, putting a small steamer upon it, he dragged the whole of his force through until he struck the clear Nile. Upon reaching Gondokoro he found that the slavers, having preceded him, had formed intrigues and incited the natives against him. Now it might be supposed that a person going out from England would meet with a great reception from the natives if they knew his object; but his experience was that a man and a brother would invariably, if he could, enslave another man and a brother. He had preached almost a sermon to a highly intelligent chief upon the iniquity of the slave trade, explaining to him what an abomination it was for human beings to be bought and sold like cattle. The chief replied: 'It is true it is horrible. Have you got a son?' 'No,' I replied, 'I have not, unfortunately.' 'Well,' he said, 'I have; but he is very thin now. If he were to go with you he would grow fat. He is a dear boy, and I will sell him to you for a slave.' (Loud laughter.) That would give the meeting a good idea of the obtuseness of these people. They did not believe in the horrors of slavery at all."

Sir Samuel then proceeded to give an account of the difficulties he had with his troops, a conspiracy having been formed among them which might have thwarted the expedition; but by making presents of cattle, and paying wherever he went, he made his way among some of the most warlike people without firing a shot, obtaining camels and everything he required. As he marched he found that this beautiful country, like many others he had formerly known in a flourishing and happy state, had been devastated by the rascally slavers. There were whole tracts of country where the women had been carried off, and in fact, he might say, the whole population gone. On one occasion there was an attempt to poison the men of his force by means of liquor given to them, apparently with the knowledge of the sheik, which was followed by a general attack on the camp by the natives, armed with guns, who, after a sharp battle, were defeated, and the march resumed. The line of march lay through tracts of land on which the grass grew nine or ten feet high. It was the rainy season, and there were ninety-three miles cut through. There were just enough provisions to last the men four or five days. The march was conducted in perfect silence in single file, the path being not more than six or eight inches wide. There might be twenty thousand men lying around in ambush and the traveler not aware of a single soul being in the country. The first intimation of their presence will be a shrill, peculiar whistle, in imitation of the cry of a bird, and then thank goodness for the Snider rifles! The [illegible] had to open fire right and left, and in this way they fought for seven days, losing very few men, fortunately, but having thirty wounded. He had never known men behave in a more admirable manner—the black men, he was speaking of—for though they had few officers and little to eat, they were perfect metal for soldiers. (Applause.)

The lecturer then described an interesting ceremony, by which he attached the King of Mayouda to his interest—i. e., exchanging blood, each making a slight incision in the other's arm, and mutually sucking the wounds. Upon his return he found that a camp which he had established had been attacked by the slavers, and the survivors put to flight, that being, in fact, the origin of the report which had reached England of his (Sir Samuel's) death. (Cheers.) It seemed too bad, after surviving incredible hardships, to hear this bad intelligence. The natives, however, having seen the difference between the government soldiers and those rascals, had remained true to the government, and showed very good feeling. They had further seen the troops literally walk over these men with the bayonet when they had met them, and the terrible effect of the Snider rifles; and indeed in every expedition there was nothing like using force in the most strenuous manner, whenever it was necessary to resort to it—(loud cheers)—for now he could assure the meeting there was not a single slave-trader in the country. (Applause.)

Sir Samuel then gave a humorous account of his establishing a tax paid in corn, and paid regularly, which was more than could be said of some more civilized countries, judging by the acknowledgments of "conscience money" in the papers. (Laughter.) The whole country was now in a state of the most perfect order, for no tribe could make war without the permission of the government; there was nothing but peace and good will in the whole of the great territory; his trials were over, and he had nothing to do but to thank God for the success which had been extended to the enterprise.

In closing the speaker feelingly alluded to his reception on that occasion, and again stated how the thought of the welcome he would receive had cheered him in all his dangers, though he must consider that the best half of the meeting had come in compliment to the prince, whose presence he felt was the greatest honor that could possibly be conferred upon him.—(Cheers and applause.)

God's "Fear Nots."

How precious to the believing soul are the "fear nots" of God recorded in his holy word! Let us look at them for a moment.

To Abraham, the great father of the faithful, God said:

"Fear not, Abram; I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward."

To Jacob, at Beersheba, when he had arrived on his journey to see his long-lost Joseph, saying:

"I am God, the God of thy father; fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will there make of thee a great nation."

To the trembling children of Israel, with the Red sea before them, and the host of Pharaoh pressing on behind, Moses, as the mouthpiece of God, gave the cheering watchword:

"Fear ye not; stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will show you to-day."

Over the pages of Isaiah there is scattered many a sweet and precious "fear not." "Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God." "Fear not; I will help thee." "Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Israel; I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy Redeemer, the holy One of Israel." "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine." "Fear not, for I am with thee; I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west." "Fear not, O Jacob, my servant; and thou, Jeshurun, whom I have chosen. For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground." "Fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings." "Fear not, for thou shalt not be put to shame; neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame."

Jeremiah, too, has "fear nots," and Ezekiel one, to make his forehead as adamant against apostate Israel:

"Fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house."

To Daniel, the "man greatly beloved," God sent a most precious "fear not" by the hands of an angelic messenger:

"Fear not, Daniel; for from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, and to chasten thyself before God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words."

We now come to the New Testament, and here all the "fear nots" are Jesus' own. For the reviled and slandered he has one:

"Fear them not, for there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, and hid that shall not be made known."

For the persecuted, even unto death, he has one:

"Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul."

For the mourner, whose beloved one is even now dead, he has one:

"Fear not; believe only, and she shall be made whole."

For "Little-faith" (with his unbelieving cry, "The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me") he has one:

"Fear ye not; ye are of more value than many sparrows."

For the "little flock" which he loved with an everlasting love, and for which he laid down his life, he has one (O how precious!)

"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

For Paul, in his tempest-shattered bark, and amid the howling of Euroclydon, he had one:

"Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar; and lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee."

And last, but not least, for the beloved John in the Isle of Patmos, when, overwhelmed by the effulgence of his glory, "he fell at his feet as dead," he had one:

"Fear not; I am the first and the last; I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore. Amen."

O beloved, what treasures of divine love, what stores of blessed consolation, what sources of spiritual strength, what pledges of final victory, do these most precious "fear nots" contain! They are God's "fear nots," and therefore as true and faithful as himself.

Then forward, and fear not, we'll speed on our way;
Why should we e'er shrink from our path in dismay?
We tread but the road which our Leader hath trod;
O let us press forward, and trust in our God.

Deception.

Rev. Dr. Macleod (father of the late Norman Macleod) was proceeding from the manse of D. to church, to open a new place of worship. As he passed slowly and gravely through the crowd gathered about the doors, an elderly man, with the peculiar kind of wig known in that district—bright, smooth and of a reddish-brown—accosted him:

"Doctor, if you please, I wish to speak to you."

"Well, Duncan," says the venerable doctor, "can ye not wait till after worship?"

"No, doctor, I must speak to you now, for it is a matter upon my conscience."

"Oh, since it is a matter of conscience, tell me what it is; but be brief, Duncan, for time presses."

"The matter is this doctor. Ye see the clock yonder on the face of the new church. Well, there is no clock really there—nothing but the face of the clock. There is no truth in it but only once in the twelve hours. Now it is, in my mind, very wrong, and quite against my conscience, that there should be a lie on the face of the house of the Lord."

"Duncan, I will consider the point. But I am glad to see you looking so well; you are not young now; I remember you for many years; and what a fine head of hair you have still?"

"Eh, doctor, you are joking now; it is long since I have had my hair."

"Oh, Duncan, Duncan! are you going into the house of the Lord with a lie upon your head?"

This settled the question, and the doctor heard no more of the lie on the face of the clock.

INTERESTING GERMAN CUSTOMS. The Standard of the Cross has an interesting account of "Life in Germany," from which we clip the following respecting two old fashions which are still kept up:

In towns four men play a solemn choral from the highest tower every day at twelve and at sunset, and people below cannot help remembering the words belonging to the tunes, for they are familiar with them from childhood. Another good old fashion is the hourly cry of the watchman in towns and villages; they cry or sing:

"Hear, O people, what I tell,
Nine o'clock has struck on the bell!
Nine reminded unthankful once;
Flee that vice, ye human sons!
It is nine o'clock!"

At ten o'clock they say: "Ten pious men were not in Sodom;" at eleven: "At eleven o'clock the Lord spake: Go ye also into the vineyard;" at twelve: "Twelve gates has the Golden City; blessed he that enters in!" And I can never forget how this twelve o'clock cry came once in awhile to me, when sickness kept me awake, like a voice from eternity. And then one o'clock: "One thing is needful; Lord Jesus, teach it to me;" at two: "Two roads lie before man; Lord, lead me in the narrow one;" at three: "Three times holy, holy is called: Father, Son and Holy Ghost!" and so forth, but all in quaint rhymes. These outward tokens of Christian faith and life have a great influence in reminding people of their God and their duties. On New Year's day the congratulation is not: "A happy new year!" only, but: "I wish you a blessed new year, a healthy body, peace and the Holy Ghost!"

A HINT TO GRUMBLERS.—"What a noisy world this is!" croaked an old frog, as he squatted on the margin of the pool. "Do you hear those geese how they scream and hiss? What do they do it for?"

"Oh, just to amuse themselves," answered a little field-mouse.

"Presently we shall have the owl's hooting; what is that for?"

"It's the music they like the best," said the mouse.

"And those grasshoppers, they can't go home without grinding and chirping; why do they do that?"

"O! they're so happy they can't help it," said the mouse.

"You find excuses for all; I believe you don't understand music, so you like the hideous noises."

"Well, friend, to be honest with you," said the mouse, "I don't greatly admire any of them; but they are all sweet in my ears compared with the constant croaking of a frog."

WHAT a scene does this world exhibit to any spiritual being who, from his elevation, sees the globe go once round. It should quicken our efforts to secure for ourselves a refuge there, where sorrow and sighing, and guilt and pain shall flee away, and the reign of love be complete and eternal!

IT IS a heaven upon earth to have the mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.—Bacon.

MODESTY is a merit, as shades to figures in a picture, giving it strength and beauty.—Bruyere.

A MOTHER'S WISH.

"If I were a fairy—
Now listen unto me—
And had the power to grant a wish,
What should the baby be?
Would you wish these little hands
Might early learn to toil?
Would you wish this idle head
Might win a name of gold?

"Would you wish this prattling tongue
Might sway the hearts of all?
Would you wish a golden crown
Upon these curls to fall?
Tell me, mother of the boy,
Now what should I bestow?
Everything is possible
To fairies, you must know."

"If you were a fairy,"
The gentle mother said,
"And could you grant my little wish,
As soon as it had sped,
I'd have you stay the flight of years
For him upon my knee,
That he might never, never change,
But still my baby be!"

IMMENSE WINDMILLS.—Syracuse, New York, is engaged in a novel manufacturing enterprise, one firm there now constructing no less than seven mammoth windmills as large as the enemies of Don Quixote. The mills are designed for crushing gold ore, and are to be sent to the Island of Oruba, in the Caribbean sea. The prevalence of trade winds in that section and the high price of fuel have induced the quartz-crushing company to introduce windmills for ore-crushing purposes. An accurate idea of the size of these powerful agents may be conceived from the following dimensions: The diameter of the wheel, which is of the "rosette" pattern, is thirty-six feet long, thus securing power equal to a twenty horse-power engine. The weight of each mill is about nine thousand pounds, the cost of construction being about $1,600 each.

THE Food Journal relates that Pompeian dinners usually comprised three courses: the first consisting of eggs, oysters, salad, pickles, etc.; the second of made dishes, fish, roasts, etc.; the third of pastry, confectionery and fruits. A painting at Pompeii represents a feast in those days, in which an immense dish containing four peacocks stands in the center of the table, surmounted by lobsters, one holding a blue egg in its claws, another a stuffed rat, another an oyster, and the fourth a basketful of grasshoppers. At the bottom of the table are four dishes of fish; and above these partridges, hares and squirrels, each holding its head between its paws. All these are surrounded by a sort of sausage; outside this runs a circle of yolks of eggs; then follows a row of peaches, melons and cherries; and last of all are placed the vegetables in great variety.

WATER IN GRANITE.—It is now about fifteen years since Mr. H. C. Sorby, of Sheffield, England, read his celebrated paper before the Philosophical Society of that city, announcing the discovery that granite contained water in appreciable quantity. As it had been the fashion to class granite among the igneous rocks, this statement caused considerable astonishment, and was vigorously debated, both sides appearing to believe, at first, that the presence of water in the rock, being proved, would necessitate the adoption of the hypothesis of its sedimentary origin. The discussion and the further investigation had a somewhat unexpected result. It is now admitted that many granites are sedimentary; but the conclusive evidence is found in their stratigraphical position and relations, not in the water they contain, for it has been shown that recent eruptive rocks, such as lava, also contain water. Indeed, as water is invariably an element in volcanic eruptions, furnishing the motive force and constituting a large part of the ejected material, it may naturally be expected to enter into the crystalline result. The fires at Chicago and Boston illustrated this fact with regard to granite by the manner in which blocks of this stone in buildings exploded, or were disintegrated and splintered by the expansion of their water. Brick is the true fire-proof and weather-proof and time-proof building material. It will not oxidize, because it is oxidized; it will not burn, because it is burnt. But these remarks apply to good brick only.

AT LEIPZIG, says the Jewish Chronicle, a work of art is being exhibited prior to its removal to the Vienna Exhibition. It is a synagogue curtain for the Holy Ark. A palm-tree embroidered thereon is headed by the scriptural verse: "The righteous shall flourish like a palm-tree." Several other appropriate inscriptions are placed in a surmounting cupola. The palm has thirteen branches, symbolizing the thirteen articles of the Jewish creed. On the boughs are to be seen some well-chosen adages, of which we mention the following as a specimen: "The palm-stem rooted in the earth displays unto heaven its budding fruit; thus shall thy transient work become mature in the land of life." The fruits growing on the tree contain benedictory terms, such as "life," "prosperity," "happiness," etc. The border inclosing this palm-tree is shaped in the mauresque style, the framework being composed of inscriptions. The roots of the tree are in part exposed to view, and in coloring appear to bear the mark of many ages; others seem to be of later growth. The rarity of the display of works of art relating to modern Jewish worship will make this master-work an especial object of attraction.

HOP YEAST.—One and one-half pounds of grated raw potato, one quart of boiling water, in which a handful of hops have been boiled, one tea cup of white sugar (coffee sugar,) one-half tea cup of salt; when almost cold put a little good yeast to start it, say about half a pint. One pint of this yeast makes four good-sized loaves of the most delightful bread you ever ate.

BE FRIENDLY to all; but make none your friends until they know you and you know them. Many a friendship born in the darkness of ignorance hath died suddenly in the light of a better acquaintance with each other.—Spurgeon.

Religious Intelligence.

THE Canadian Wesleyan Missionary Society raised last year more than $105,000, an increase over the receipts of the previous year of over $14,000.

THE Lay College of Dr. Talmage has an attendance on the lectures of its professors of 120 to 130 persons. There is also an increasing religious interest in the Sabbath school of the Tabernacle church.

THE Presbyterian Synod of Iowa (South,) at its last meeting, set apart the western part of Nebraska, lying west of a line running east of Nuckolls county, as the field to be covered by a new presbytery, to be called Kearney.

THE Ritualists in London are making great efforts in the way of raising funds. In some districts school boys and young women are employed to canvass the inhabitants for subscriptions, and they are most perseveringly in their calls.

THE total number of Church of England clergy shown by the census of 1871 was 20,694. The clergy were first separately enumerated in 1841, and the following table shows the increase in each succeeding decade since that time:

	Number of clergy.	Increase in ten years.
1841	14,953
1851	17,621	3,668
1861	19,195	1,574
1871	20,694	1,499

AMONG the local revivals which are in progress here and there, the most remarkable is the one which has blessed the Methodist church at Paris, Kentucky. Since October 19 there have been 305 conversions and as many accessions to the church. Whole families have professed conversion, and Thanksgiving day was made a joyful one by the baptism of over 200 persons. The city at large has felt the influence of the revival to a considerable extent.

A SMALL INSTALLMENT of Mennonite emigrants has arrived in this country and settled in Dakota Territory. They are the advance guard of a large number of co-religionists who expect to come here from the borders of the Black sea during the next year. The importance of this emigration lies in the fact that the families composing it are generally well-to-do people, who bring with them strong religious convictions—something not to be overlooked in a settler on the frontier.

ACCORDING to the recent census the two and a half million people in Ceylon are distributed, according to their religious belief, as follows: Buddhist, 1,520,575; Sivite, 464,414; Roman Catholic, 182,613; Mohammedan, 171,542; Protestant, 24,756; Wesleyan, 6,071; Presbyterian, 3,101; Baptist, 1,478. Devoted to the religious instruction of these there are 5,345 Buddhist priests, 1,078 Sivite priests, 449 Mohammedan priests, and 862 devil dancers, while the Protestant clergy and missionaries number 217, and the Catholic priests 87.

THE Friends' National Biennial First-day School Conference met at Lynn, Massachusetts, on the nineteenth of November, and continued in session several days. The first day's discussions concerned the duty of seeking the conversion and growth of grace in pupils, and the importance of home instruction in Scripture. The subject of the distinctive Quaker dress was introduced and discussed at some length. We gather from the reports that the general sentiment of the meeting was in favor of discontinuing the peculiarities of costume as essential features.

THERE seems no longer to be any doubt that the whole, or nearly the whole, of the Swiss Jura district has gone over en masse to the Old Catholic movement, expelled the Ultramontane clergy, and thrown off its spiritual subjection to Rome. This is the statement of a well-informed English correspondent, who says further that, in view of the probable expulsion of the priests, a French father, Abbe Deramy, who has been laboring in conjunction with Hyacinthe, has been raising a body of French clergy to take their place. In this mission he has succeeded to a considerable extent.

THE Rev. Dr. Hitchcock stated at the meeting of the Palestine Exploration Society, held in New York a few weeks since, that the work would probably be accomplished in about five years, and the necessary expenses would amount to $30,000 per annum. Lieutenant Steever, who has charge of the surveying party, is now in this country temporarily, and he gave a brief account of what his party had done in the way of surveying the Holy Land, east of the Jordan, six hundred square miles having been gone over. Judge Daly, Drs. Adams and Washburn also made addresses, calling attention to the importance of the enterprise.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH, Brooklyn, presents the following statistical report for 1873: Number of members received into the church during the year, 205; dismissed, 80; average yearly admissions for twenty-six years, 136; whole number received since its organization, 3,547. In its three Sunday schools there are 2,746 scholars, with 258 officers and teachers; average attendance for the year, 1,815; number of volumes in libraries, 4,914; school contributions, $2,486. The church contributed for benevolent objects, $57,335; home expenses, $40,000; total amount raised during the year, $97,335. This sum does not include the private contributions of the society and members.

COLORED PRESBYTERIANS.—The following is the action of the Synod of Memphis, at its late meeting, on this subject: The committee which was required to bring in a report for the consideration of this synod, as to the best method of having the gospel preached efficiently to the colored people, beg leave to present the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in our judgment our church can most efficiently promote the spiritual interests of the colored people by organizing them into a separate Presbyterian Church.

Resolved, That we think that it is not only desirable, but that it is our duty as a church to adopt this plan of evangelization among the colored people, at the earliest day, with the greatest unanimity possible.

OUR Primitive Methodist brethren report a small but growing work in the States and Territories. There are now two Annual Conferences, Western and Eastern. The Western Conference returns 1,742 members, 18 traveling preachers, 102 local preachers, 93 class-leaders, 36 chapels, and 42 other preaching places, and 12 parsonages. They have 42 Sunday-schools, 463 teachers and 2,495 scholars. The Eastern Conference reports 1,123 members, 10 traveling preachers, 89 local preachers, 61 class-leaders, 17 churches and 21 preaching places; 26 Sabbath schools, with 360 teachers and 1,918 scholars. The Western Conference reports an increase of 90 members for the year; the Eastern Conference, 179.

THE American Lutheran gives the following items of progress in the Lutheran Church for 1873: "The General Synod increased, above all losses, 46 ministers, 34 congregations, 3,197 members; the General Council increased 26 ministers, 34 congregations, 14,353 members; the General Synod South increased 7 ministers, lost 4 congregations, increased 775 members. The extraordinary increase of members in the General Council is, no doubt, largely owing to the immigration from Germany." Under a more liberal policy adopted by the Russian government in its Baltic provinces, the Lutherans who had embraced the Greek religion under pressure are returning to the church of their fathers. Not less than 30,000 conversions are reported to have taken place in 1873.

THE Southern Baptists have in connection with their Canton mission a church of twenty members at Shin-Hing, about eighty miles in the interior from Canton. It was once the provincial city, but is now a place of residence for the families of many men whose official positions or business require a residence in Canton. The church was organized twelve years ago by Mr. Graves. A people called the Hakkas, or "strangers," occupy the mountain regions in the vicinity of Shin-Hing. They are a simple, wild people, despised by the Canton people, whose language they do not speak. Some late efforts among them by German missionaries have been very hopeful, and Mr. Graves reports that he has just left a laborer among them, who is received with great hospitality and prospects of success.

FATHER GRASSI, the recently converted priest at Rome, has made a powerful and exultant defense of his course before the Tribunal of the Holy Inquisition. As the London Freeman observes: "When a priest can throw off the yoke of the Romish Church in Rome itself, and can deliver a defense before his ecclesiastical superiors and escape unhurt, it may be taken as a proof of the complete establishment of personal liberty under a free Italian government." In the course of his address justifying his abandonment of the papal church, the father boldly said: "In this room, to-day, I come to bear witness to the truth; and you no longer have the power to touch a hair of my head; you have lost all authority; the work of God has commenced; and soon these walls, these chambers, these instruments of torture and this tribunal will be ground like so much dust under our feet. Now listen to what God has promised to do here in Rome against the enemies of his church. Here is the infallible order that God sends to the Roman believers: 'The God of peace will soon grind satan under his feet.' Do you not tremble at these words of the Lord? Is it not satan perhaps who has imposed and directed so many judgments, so many tortures, so many butcheries and massacres in these very rooms? But already satan begins to be conquered; the torch of the dog of the Inquisition is forever extinguished, the breath of God has blown upon it, and from this time forth it can never more be ignited." New and strange words, these, to be spoken in an Inquisitorial hall, where the cries of tortured Christians were once heard. It was the very place for their utterance.—Christian Union.

THE following facts give the age, work and periodical of each of the various woman's missionary societies of America. The oldest of these, organized in 1861, represents a union of six different Christian denominations, and is known as the Woman's Union Missionary Society. Its receipts for 1872 were $56,012, and it was represented in the field by 30 missionaries, 27 Bible readers and teachers, and 50 schools. Its reports are given to the public through the Missionary Link. The woman's boards in connection with the Congregational Church, founded in 1868, are known as the Board of Missions and Board of the Interior, and have for their headquarters respectively Boston and Chicago. They carry on their work through means of the American Board. Last year these societies received $56,169, employed 54 missionaries, 70 Bible readers, and supported 18 schools. Their periodical is Life and Light for Heathen Women. The Methodist Episcopal Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, established in 1869, received last year $54,920, employed 12 missionaries, 93 Bible readers, taught 83 schools and published the Heathen Woman's Friend. The Presbyterian boards are the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and the Woman's Board of Missions for the Northwest. These societies, formed in 1871, received last year $51,226, employed 74 missionaries, 27 Bible readers and teachers, have in operation 21 schools, and tell their story through the pages of the Woman's Work for Women. The Baptist societies of East and West were both instituted in 1871. Their receipts are given as $29,997, their missionaries 15, Bible readers 7, and schools 20. They are represented in print by the Helping Hand. The Protestant Episcopalians have also a woman's auxiliary to the Board of Missions, with which 19 missionaries are connected. In all a little more than a quarter of a million of dollars were collected for the support of 193 schools, 204 missionaries and 234 Bible readers and teachers.—Independent.

Endure Hardness.

These times, especially in the extreme South, call for soldierly qualities in the preachers. From the pretty thorough canvass of the work in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, which we have been able to make recently, we infer that a comfortable support is the exception. Conditions social and political, and failures in business and in the crops, are sure to be felt. It may be that the people are remiss and that they fall below their ability. We believe, however, that they have done better the past year, in proportion to their means, than usual. We hope the present year will be an improvement on the last; but at the best it requires a strong faith to venture forth and to trust.

It must be done or the work of God will be retarded, and the tabernacles will fall into decay. Our itinerants must arm themselves with the mind to suffer, and go out expecting to meet with straitness. If no preaching is done except under the guarantee of fair salaries, commodious parsonages, and pleasant and attractive churches, not much will be done in some Conferences. We have but little of the apostolic spirit, and are unworthy to assume the grand commission given by the Master, if we are unwilling to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. The men who went out from Jerusalem, to preach the gospel to every creature, had no well-filled missionary treasury, and no homes and supplies to greet their entrance to new fields of labor. Those who planted Methodism in America, and especially in the West and South, found nothing prepared to their hand. Perils, hardships and poverty were expected, as a matter of course, and these were cheerfully encountered, that the lost sheep might be hunted up, and that the blessings of the gospel might be conveyed to those who were in the shadow of death. We have need perhaps to recur to our marching orders, to go because God sends, and to go trusting him whose commission we bear.

The Bishops know well the perplexities they have experienced in making the appointments, because of the meager support which is offered by the great majority of the charges. In many instances it has perhaps the appearance of presumption and of oppression to the preachers and to the people. If it were not God's work it might be so, but with his authority and promises it is far otherwise. To give back and to abandon the country on account of the present distress would be a grievous wrong. Things are not as bad, certainly not worse, than in the days of Asbury and McKendree. The fields we occupy were originally opened by dint of toils and sacrifices which, in an equal degree, are scarcely demanded now. Softness, self-indulgence and effeminacy will neither win nor retain these lands for Christ. There must be the heroism of primitive Christianity, and a resolute and determined devotion to the cause.

There is hard and rough work to be done, and an alarming destitution of the gospel to be supplied. Not well-organized works, spacious parsonages, efficient boards of stewards and fine churches, but wasted and impoverished communities, and generations of half-grown youth who have scarcely heard the voice of the living preacher. To meet this state of things the ministry must be after the primitive type—full of faith and the Holy Ghost, and eaten up with the zeal of the Lord's house. Without these high and invincible qualities but little can be done anywhere, but especially in our Southern Conferences are they absolutely necessary.

Louisiana Conference.

CONTINUED.

The Conference missionary anniversary on Saturday night was an occasion of unusual interest. The report of the secretary, John Wilkinson, was a well-prepared and eloquent paper, and the report of the treasurer, A. E. Goodwyn, was, as usual, complete and clear. Bishop Marvin protested against making a speech, but he came very near it in a lucid exposition of the organization of our missionary boards, and of the character and condition of our foreign and domestic missions. Then came an address of great richness and unction from Bishop Keener, in which Mexico received full attention, and the great principles embraced in the spirit of missions were exhibited with massive strength and convincing power. The collection, in cash and pledges, amounted to $710.

On Sunday there was a love-feast at nine o'clock, and a very good one. At the Presbyterian church President Andrews, of Centenary College, preached an excellent sermon at the eleven o'clock service. At the Methodist church the large and beautiful house was filled to overflowing. Bishop Marvin's sermon, at eleven o'clock, was of the highest excellence, the hearing of which will make an epoch in the lives of his hearers. Rev. James E. Cobb preached at three o'clock, on Christian perfection, in his accustomed earnest and forcible manner. At night Bishop Keener gave us one of his grand presentations of gospel truth. After the morning sermon the following were ordained deacons: Samuel H. Schroeder, Enos B. Foust, Thomas F. Webb, Robert S. Isbell, Armistead R. Holcombe. At the afternoon service Christian Keener, William F. Alexander and Thomas B. Reneau were ordained elders. All the preaching during Conference was spiritual and pointed, and every sermon led sinners to Christ. The commencement sermon on Wednesday night, by Rev. John Wilkinson, was, by almost every standard of merit, a complete sermon, and in the highest order of true gospel preaching. The altar was thronged with seekers up to the last service, and the names of over forty persons, mostly young people, were taken as applicants for membership. The religious impression made upon the church and community of Baton Rouge was most profound.

We were glad to meet visitors from the Mississippi Conference, and among them James L. Forsyth, Jas. A. Godfrey, William H. Leith, N. B. Young and Robert Downer. Rev. C. G. Andrews, president of Centenary College, was also present and most welcome.

Monday and Tuesday were days of reports and discussions. The educational interests were presented in an able report, and the Conference was considerably stirred up by addresses from several brethren. It is a matter of regret, and perhaps it should be a mortifying fact, that neither the Conference collection nor that for the Bishops was adequate to meet the claim. The amount required for widows, orphans and superannuates was $3,530; the amount collected was $2,128.85. Bishops' claim, $1,200; paid, including travelling expenses, $896.45. This is a large deficiency for a Conference which has so long been proud of its record in meeting these demands in full. Well, Louisiana has been subjected to a severe ordeal during the past year, and she is still sorely tried. The collections for missions were something over $3,000, and a considerable part of this was in the form of special collections for Mexico and the forty per cent. for the foreign work. What remained for domestic missions had been mostly anticipated by the drafts of the year, leaving only three or four hundred dollars in hand. This, and no more, was appropriated to the domestic work, the Conference board deeming it best, for the future, to adopt the cash system, and to appropriate only the funds actually in the treasury. The Conference resolved to come up to the $7,000 apportioned to it by the board at Nashville, and to go beyond it, the present year. Peeled and impoverished as we are, this purpose should be realized. The increase of membership, we judge, will hardly be less than one thousand five hundred, though we were not able to obtain an accurate footing of the several districts.

Conference closed on Tuesday at three o'clock P. M. A most gracious and profitable time it was, and to be put on record as perhaps the pleasantest of many pleasant sessions of our Louisiana Conference. The church in Baton Rouge have yielded their faithful and eloquent pastor with regret, while they accept his successor with true loyalty and devotion. Bro. A. E. Goodwyn was wanted at Shreveport, and Bro. John Wilkinson comes from Shreveport to Baton Rouge. Both places are equally fortunate in their new pastors, and both are to be congratulated on having these able and gifted men of God for their spiritual guides. Other and considerable changes were made here and there, and the work, on the whole, has been tolerably well supplied. There is some shortness of men, but comparatively few places have been left to be supplied.

Buy the Books.

Our book agent has issued a cheap list that is "marked down" even to these hard times.

His cheap list for Sunday schools is a marvel of cheapness. No trash is offered, but solid, living and lively volumes, full of religious and moral truth—volumes of biography, travels, essay. He offers four libraries. No. 1 contains twenty volumes, such as have been selling at fifty cents each. The whole twenty may be had for $5. No. 2 contains twenty volumes. The standard price would put this lot over $10. They are also offered for $5. No. 3 ditto. No. 4 has twenty volumes, that amount to over $12 in the old catalogue prices. This library may now be had for $6. All cash. It is a rare opportunity for Sunday schools to replenish their shelves and furnish good reading to their pupils.

What congregation cannot raise the amount needed? A good circulating library may be had for $21; and portions of it, complete in themselves, for less amounts.

If cotton were selling at six cents a pound, these prices for good books could not be complained of.

Besides all this, there is another cheap list for the preachers and other grown-up people.

What wonders of cheapness do we see here? Winans' Discourses, that noble volume of divinity that has hitherto sold at $3, is now offered at $1.25. Let all Louisianians and Mississippians take this opportunity to get this representative volume of the "great commoner." It is solid reading—contains his best thoughts, and the most elaborate discourses of that great mind.

Protestantism in Mississippi, by Rev. John G. Jones, is here offered at ninety cents. Bro. Jones furnishes material for the future histories in this volume. Few are the men who could write such a book, and he has done it well. The rise of the church—our own and others—is here told, and told by one who without vanity could say: Magna pars fui.

The sermons of the eloquent P. P. Neely are here. The volume, heretofore sold at $2, is now to be had for $1.

Bishop Capers' Life, by Wightman, that used to sell at $2, and cheap at that, is now put at seventy-five cents. The picture of the Chrysostom of Methodism, that adorns the book, is worth that.

Look at the advertising columns. Send for a catalogue. Get the cheap list. Buy the books.

To help our Publishing House in the financial embarrassments, and to pay the debt of rebuilding and refitting it, the preachers of the Annual Conferences have resolved to order, within thirty or ninety days at least, $100 worth of our books.

This, the book agent says, will in thirty or ninety days enable him to pay every debt, and go to General Conference in May without any incumbrance.

Thus we may accomplish two good things at one stroke, and either of them worth doing. Let us do it quickly. Help our Publishing House and bless our people. Pay the debt and scatter the best reading. The time is short. The need is great. The books are good. The people need them.

Special Demands on Our Ministry.

Our older readers may call to mind the letters of X. Y. Z., the English correspondent of this paper in 1852-3. Those letters were written at the price of £1 each, and were widely copied by the press at the time.

The writer was Rev. James H. Rigg, of the British Conference. He was a young man then, and has since risen to distinction. He is looked on as the most representative man of English Methodism in his influence among outsiders. He was voted for at the last Conference as president of the body, and his elevation to that seat is confidently expected at no distant day.

A Northern exchange has this item:

Rev. Dr. Rigg, Wesleyan minister from England, came to this country as a delegate to the late Evangelical Alliance. He afterward traveled considerably in this country, and visited many of our large cities and rural districts. On his return to England he gave a very interesting report of his observations in the United States. The following is an extract from one of his letters written back to a friend in this country:

"Your people are certainly the most intelligent and best informed in the world as a whole people. No Christian ministers have to preach to such a body and bulk of eager, keen, receptive and fairly informed intelligence as yours. It follows that no ministers need themselves to be men of such powerful and highly cultivated intelligence. Your ministers need, as a class, to be men of higher powers, and of riper, deeper, sounder cultivation than their brethren of England. Moreover, as the work required of them is higher, so it is also more varied and difficult in kind. They have to deal with congregations intellectually eager and restless, daring and adventurous, out of all proportion to the degree of their mental discipline, or the soundness and completeness of their thinking. Such a vivid people, and such intense and far-reaching forces, such sudden and rapid movements could not but be intellectually daring and speculative. In a soil so marvelously rich all things must grow rapidly, and in extraordinary, often abnormal, development. No wonder that a certain portion of your press is outrageously sensational. No wonder that all things tend to extremes.

"This is but a consequence of your intense life and amazing resources; it could hardly be otherwise. But, then, all the more there comes back a most solemn responsibility on the Christian ministers. It must be theirs to correct and counteract the excesses of the press; it must be theirs to guide, as I have said, and to mold the principles and convictions, the moral and intellectual development of the people. The churches, led by them, are bound to be the salt of the land, redeeming it equally from profane unbelief and from moral and political corruption. I have thought and talked this over again and again, and still the more does this conclusion come home to me. Of all the churches the Methodist is the greatest; upon Methodism, accordingly, must devolve the weightiest part of this solemn responsibility. Your sufficiency is of God, and of God only. In view of such considerations as these, how unspeakably important do such institutions as your colleges and your theological schools appear!"

WE ARE glad to learn, by a note from Rev. F. L. B. Shaver, of the Alabama Conference, that his health is slowly improving. We sincerely trust and pray that he may be restored to his former strength, and that many years of active usefulness are yet before him. His address is Whistler, Mobile county, Alabama.

The Publishing House.

The one hundred dollar proposition is being pushed by our energetic book agent. We believe all the Conferences have resolved to try. The Louisiana Conference passed the usual resolution at its session recently closed. The books can be ordered from the New Orleans Depository, and the sales will go directly to the relief of the Publishing House at Nashville. Now is the time to perform the doing—early in the year, rather than late, as the crops are going to market and the returns are being received.

There is hardly any good thing that Methodist preachers cannot do if they once determine that it shall be done. Our Publishing House must be sustained, and the diffusion of our literature will be an incalculable benefit to the people. Let the books be ordered, and let no effort be spared to sell at least $100 worth within the next two or three months. In a recent note Dr. Redford says:

The Conferences have nearly all been held, and, so far as we are advised, our proposition to purchase one hundred dollars' worth of our publications, by each preacher, has been accepted without a dissenting voice. It only remains for the preachers to carry out faithfully the resolution, in order to relieve the House of all embarrassment, and place it on the highway of future success and usefulness.

The thought that, within ninety days from this writing, the Publishing House may not owe a dollar in the world, is surely sufficient to inspire every preacher with the firm resolve to do his best in meeting the obligations he and his Conference accepted. This may be the case, and will be if all do their duty. The church is feeling an interest in the success of the Publishing House never felt before; and from every charge the people are ready to respond. The responsibility is with the preachers. We invite every man to the post of duty.

Great Revival in the Southern Army.

Rev. Dr. Bennett, editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, has commenced in his paper a series on the great revival in the Confederate army. The work, we suppose, will appear in book form after awhile. Dr. Bennett says:

"For several years past the editor of this paper has been engaged in collecting materials for and in preparing a narrative of the great revival which prevailed in the Southern armies, during the late civil war. He has derived his information from the most authentic sources, and, in the task of collecting matter for this work, he has had the aid of chaplains, army missionaries, pious officers and soldiers, colporteurs and other persons who labored in and contributed to this the most remarkable revival of religion among soldiers that has probably ever occurred in the history of the world. The reader will see the power of religion manifested in the camp, on the march, in the bivouac, on the battlefield and in the hospital—in sickness, in wounds, in death. It has been the aim of the writer to preserve, as far as possible, the names, regiments and homes of the pious men who, as privates or officers, illustrated the purity of the Christian faith and character amidst the appalling scenes of civil war. On the first of January next we shall begin the publication of this work in serial numbers in the Advocate. All, therefore, who subscribe for this paper will have the privilege of reading this narrative, which in itself will be equal to a large volume, in addition to all the other matter which the paper will contain. We beg the aid of all the patrons and friends of the Advocate to bring it to the notice of all who desire to read of the great army revival. As the work was participated in by all the Christian churches of the South, the account of it will in no sense be denominational. Persons of all the churches, and of no church, will, we trust, find much to touch the heart and raise their appreciation of the Southern soldiers."

TOO SANGUINE.—It is refreshing to read the deliverance of the New York Christian Advocate on the nomination of Williams for chief justice. No matter where it may lead, Dr. Curry sticks to Grant and the party. The Independent comments and quotes as follows:

By this time the Christian Advocate will begin to wish that it had restrained its prophetic inspiration. Instantly on learning of the nomination of Attorney General Williams for chief justice, it devoted to him a eulogistic editorial, assuring its readers that "there can be no doubt of his prompt confirmation by the Senate." The Senate does not find the path to confirmation quite so easy. The Advocate may also wish it had left the following unsaid:

"There need be no apprehension that its honor will be depressed by this last appointment. In learning, in natural force of character, in moral elevation and purity, and in the specifically judicial cast of his mind Chief Justice Williams will prove a worthy successor to the great men who have passed from the place to which he is called. The thanks of the country are due to President Grant for this additional instance of the wise use of the appointing power."

Mr. Williams' record hardly justifies this eulogy or this thanksgiving. Is he a Methodist?

IF YOU see anything your duty, the sooner you attend to it the better. David says: "I made haste and delayed not to keep thy commandments." Follow his example.

Louisiana Conference.

A WORD FROM THE TREASURER.

The complicated character of the missionary collections taken during the past year, together with the pressing demands upon me in entertaining the Conference, rendered it impossible for me to balance my account properly at that time. It required a whole day, with the assistance of Bro. Harp's accurate and skillful book-keeper, to adjust the report. And now the result reveals the fact that I was compelled to borrow of Bro. Harp money to meet the outstanding obligations of last year. Before this result was reached I had paid two drafts for the present year, but can pay no more. Brethren to whom money has been appropriated will have to wait till the amount can be collected and paid to them from the work.

I trust the collections will not be so complicated this year. Let us take general collections subject to the division prescribed in the law.

A. E. GOODWYN, Treasurer.

A Note.

MR. EDITOR: Bishop Pierce has removed me from Marianna station to Hot Springs station, Little Rock Conference. He has supplied Marianna with another man. I write that you may notice it in your paper. I prefer the station above to any, but when the Bishop says, "Go," I am ready. He left the place open for me, but failed to notify Bishop Marvin until after our Conference met. I shall be at my new work as soon as I can get there. Expect to become a member of that Conference.

Your brother,
I. Z. T. MORRIS,
Alabama Conference.

MARIANNA, ALA., January 12, 1874.

WE ARE indebted to the lecture committee of the Young Men's Christian Association of New Orleans for complimentary tickets to a course of lectures, to be given at Lyceum Hall during the winter and spring. The course comprises the following lecturers and subjects:

January 29, 1874.—Rev. Campbell Fair, of Christ Church. Subject: "The Book of Common Prayer—Its Place in History."

February 12, 1874.—Prof. C. G. Forshey. Subject: "Science and Human Duty, Illustrated from Meteorology and the Weather."

February 26, 1874.—E. John Ellis, Esq. Subject: To be announced.

March 12, 1874.—Rev. R. Q. Mallard, of Prytania Street church. Subject: "Italy—Its Religious Past and Present."

March 26, 1874.—Prof. Jos. Jones. Subject: "The Limited Nature of Man's Knowledge of the Creator, Derived from the Investigation of the Physical Laws of the Universe."

April 9, 1874.—Rev. J. T. Sawyer. Subject: To be announced.

LEFT FOR MEXICO.—Bishop Keener left, on the morning of the eighteenth of January, for Mexico, whither he goes to visit the mission inaugurated by him twelve months ago. He took passage on the steamship Frankfurt for Havana, where he expected to connect with a New York mail steamer for Vera Cruz. The Bishop expects to return about the first of March. Bishop Simpson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, accompanied by his wife and Mr. George McCreary, sailed also on the Frankfurt for the same destination. Bishop Simpson goes to visit the missions of the Northern Church.

THROUGH Rev. J. Shelton White, of the Louisiana Conference, we have received the sad information of the death of his father, Dr. James D. White, of Lebanon, Tennessee. Dr. White died at Lebanon, January 1, aged seventy-two. His last hours were eminently peaceful, and the hope of a glorious immortality unclouded. The bereaved have our sincere sympathy in the sorrow which has befallen them.

THE first number of the Y. M. C. A. Chronicle, organ of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, and published by P. J. Hart, was issued January 1, and is a handsome four-page sheet, filled with instructive and entertaining matter. We wish this new and excellent publication the greatest success.

BISHOP MARVIN left New Orleans on Saturday, the seventeenth instant. He was to have spent Sunday in Mobile, thence to Montgomery and homeward. The Bishop will be followed by the prayers and love of the Louisiana brethren, and his presence among them will be always most welcome.

THE Minutes of the Mississippi Conference will be ready at the earliest day possible, but they will cost per copy, including postage, not less than eighteen cents, instead of eight or ten, according to the statement of Bro. Stuart. I will have about one hundred copies published for those who may order them hereafter. Send in orders at once.

H. F. JOHNSON.

THE sin you hate, unless God helps you, you will embrace.

Note From a Veteran.

MY DEAR BRO. PARKER: I read your article in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of the eighth inst, entitled "Comfort in Prison—Word not Bound," and I write a new for the express purpose of thanking you for that article. Truely the Lord prompted you to write that blessed piece of comfort to the old soldiers of the cross, who, like myself, have been at last constrained to lay down their armor and retire from the contest in which they have been so long engaged, and which has been a source of blessedness to themselves as well as others. I assure you, my dear brother, I felt that every word of that article was addressed to me, and I could but marvel how one not in the same position could so perfectly photograph the feelings of the worn-out superannuate when compelled to retire from the active work of the ministry. I was truly blessed, even to tears, in reading your article—sweet tears of comfort in prison. God bless you for writing that article. I felt, while reading it, that I wished every superannuated preacher could have access to it, and I earnestly desire that all our papers should insert it for the general good.

I was placed on the superannuated list at our last Conference at Grenada, Mississippi, after nearly forty years of itinerant life in the Alabama and North Mississippi Conferences, and I am now patiently waiting for my change. Thank God, his promises are yea and amen in Christ, and I am happy. God bless all the preachers. Farewell!

Affectionately, your brother in Christ. GEO. SHAEFFER.

COLUMBUS, Miss., January 13, 1874.

Colored M. E. Church in America.

This church is attempting the establishment of an institution of learning at Louisville, with special reference to the education of its ministry. Property has already been bought, and the enterprise promises well. We find the following communication from Bishop Miles in the Index:

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please allow me to say something, through the columns of the Index, with regard to the education of our ministry?

And first, no man can do anything till he learns how. Some men may do good among the people and have no education; but it is one thing to preach, another to exhort, and another still to understand the Bible and the government of the church. Religion is a matron of knowledge, and the more educational light a man has the more useful he may be in society. Much is said about foreign missionaries in China and Mexico, and other foreign kingdoms, which is all right; they must be educated and have the gospel preached to them; for the commission is to go into all the world and preach to every creature. But we wish to know if charity does not begin at home? Here are four millions of colored people, once the slaves of these United States; by the fortunes of war they were set at liberty and made citizens of the United States. But their minds have been filled with political prejudices, through political preaching; hence they need a pure gospel preached to them.

The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, as a church, is wholly non-political, and we are trying to raise means to erect an institution of learning for the education of our ministers. We call on all to help us. We believe that we have a stronger claim on the charities of the whites of the United States than any other people in the world, having served them as slaves so long, and now serve them as laborers. Many have donated hundreds and thousands, and some hundreds of thousands of dollars for educational purposes; but we want to raise the sum of $50,000 for our school, and this should be considered a small sum to raise for so noble an object. Where are all the noble sons of America who are willing to help so good a cause? Will not the whole nation join in helping us? We solicit aid from white and colored alike. Come one and all; if you cannot help largely, help us much as you can; send to us from $1 up to five, ten, twenty, or as much as you feel free to give. We must raise $1,500 by the first of April, 1874, to make a payment on and get possession of the property already bought.

Preachers of the Kentucky and Tennessee Annual Conferences will please appoint a day, giving proper notice of it, when they will raise a special collection for this Kentucky and Tennessee Institution of learning; and the presiding elders are hereby required to give this matter special attention and encouragement.

Having been appointed by the two Conferences named to supervise this matter, I feel authorized to advise what should be done to raise the means to make the payment. If promptly met, I believe, with what we are receiving from other sources, we will be fully prepared to meet the demand.

Will other papers please do us the kindness to copy the above or call attention to the matter, as we believe very many white friends will cheerfully help us? Some have already sent us donations through the mail.

Yours, for a good cause,

W. H. MILES.

THE WAY to speak and write what shall not go out of fashion is to speak and write sincerely.—Emerson.

AN infant two months old is plaintiff in a law suit on trial in Kentucky.

AT THE Sunday school concert held at St. James church, Galveston, the first Sabbath of the year, we had the pleasure of listening to the account given by Mr. Samuel Pillsbury, of San Francisco, of the Sunday school work among the Chinese on the Pacific coast. He has been for some time the superintendent of the Chinese Sunday school connected with the First Congregational church in San Francisco. There are in that city some fifteen thousand Chinese children, or rather boys and young men, ranging in age from ten to twenty-five years. About nine hundred of them are regular attendants at the Sunday schools. Many are induced to attend by the fact that they are gratuitously instructed, and they expect that the knowledge they will secure of the English language will be of advantage in securing and carrying on business. While they are learning to speak and read and write the English language, they are also being instructed in the truths of the gospel. Some ten of these schools are in operation, and already there are a number of converts won from these representatives of a wonderful race. Bro. Pillsbury read a letter from one of these converts, addressed to the teachers of the school where he had been instructed, which evinced a clear knowledge of the plan of salvation, and which expressed the purpose of the writer to bear to his countrymen the knowledge of that religion which he had found precious to his own heart. As God brings the ends of the earth together by strange and often unexpected agencies, it is the duty of Christians of every name to meet them with the message of life.—Galveston Christian Advocate.

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—We know of no better commercial college than that of George Soule, whose advertisement appears in this issue of our paper. We believe Prof. Soule to be thoroughly acquainted with his calling, and conscientious in the discharge of his duty to his students.

GAS COOKING STOVES.—The recent reduction in the price of gas brings into prominent view, in this connection, the advertisement of P. H. Quinlan, No. 240 Camp street, who keeps on hand a large number of these economical stoves. Mr. Quinlan also attends to gas fitting, etc.

SECOND-HAND CLOTHING.—Mr. John Mullan, auctioneer and dealer in all kinds of ladies' and gentlemen's second-hand clothing, guns, pistols, watches and jewelry, invites attention to his establishment, No. 132 Camp street. See advertisement.

SOLICITOR OF PATENTS.—Persons interested in American or foreign patents will do well to observe the advertisement of H. N. Jenkins, Esq., No. 27 Commercial place, New Orleans, which appears in our columns to-day.

INSURANCE.—We call attention to the first annual statement of the American Fire Insurance Company. S. E. Loeb is the president and B. Meyer secretary. They show a net capital of $175,189.55.

DRESS AND CLOAKMAKER AND MILLINER.—Mrs. M. McAuley, 161 Canal street, has the reputation of doing faithful work, giving full satisfaction, and at reasonable rates.

LAPLACE'S Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm is used for affections of the throat and lungs. Sold by druggists generally, at $1 per bottle.

HARDWARE.—Messrs. Rice Bros. & Co., Nos. 89 and 91 Camp street, advertise in another column their very large and well-assorted stock of heavy and shelf hardware, tools, tinware, house-furnishing goods, stoves, etc. They are also agents for the celebrated Charter Oak cooking stove. They have a branch store at No. 565 Magazine street. There are no more enterprising and worthy merchants in our city than this old and well-known firm. They are thoroughly acquainted with the wants of the people, the latest improvements in household utensils, mechanics' tools and all articles of use and convenience in their line, and we are sure that purchasers will be well paid for calling at their establishment.

FIRE INSURANCE.—The advertisement of the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company appears in our columns to-day, among our new advertisements. The company we regard as safe and worthy of confidence. The branch here is under the management of the clever and obliging agent, William E. Fitzgerald, Esq., No. 2 Carondelet street.

COMMISSION AND WESTERN PRODUCE MERCHANT.—We call attention to the advertisement of John A. O'Brien, No. 62 Tchoupitoulas street, which will be found in this issue of our paper. Those wishing to consign or to purchase Western or other produce will do well to give him a call.

FIRE INSURANCE.—We call attention to the advertisement of the Workingmen's National Fire Insurance Company. Geo. H. Dyche is president, Spencer Field, Jr., vice president, and E. Harry Angamar secretary. Office, 29 Carondelet street.

COAL.—Mr. Washington Morton, 138 Gravier street, advertises elsewhere the Mount Carbon coal. We have been informed by all those who have tried this coal, with whom we have conversed on the subject, that it gives entire satisfaction.

GOOD BREAD AT THE TIMES BAKERY, No. 53 ANNUNCIATION STREET.—W. G. Smith, at the above place, advertises in our columns to supply families in any part of the city with the choicest bread, crackers and cakes at reasonable prices.

GOOD CISTERNS.—If you want good cisterns apply to the oldest cistern-maker in the city, corner of Franklin and Erato streets, Mr. Matthew Henrick, whose advertisement is to be found elsewhere.

BOOK-BINDER.—We call attention of all who have books, magazines, music or blank-books to bind to the advertisement of F. J. Kuhnholz. His establishment is at 112 Gravier street.

SEE ADVERTISEMENT of the crockery store of Joseph Wolf & Co., No. 633 Magazine street.

COLGATE & CO.'s new perfume for the handkerchief, "CASHMERE BOUQUET," will be appreciated by all who have enjoyed the delicate and peculiar fragrance of their toilet soap of the same name, which is so universally popular. je21y

THE great popularity of the famous Halford Leicestershire Table Sauce is owing, in part, to its adaptation to all soups, fish and meats, making each and all more delicious to the taste. This is really the prince of superior flavors. For sale by all grocers. Ja8 4t

THE FAVORITE HOME REMEDY.
—IT IS—
PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver diseases most prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR
OR MEDICINE

is eminently a Family Medicine; and by being kept ready for immediate resort will save many an hour of suffering, and many a dollar in time and doctors' bills.

After over forty years' trial it is still receiving the most unqualified testimonials to its virtues from persons of the highest character and responsibility. Eminent physicians commend it as the

MOST EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC

for Constipation, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, bad taste in the mouth, Bilious attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, despondency, gloom and forebodings of evil, all of which are the offspring of a diseased Liver.

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion it Has No Equal.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY and STRENGTHEN
At One and the Same Time.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is which purifies the blood and removes all corrupt humor and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a strengthening purgative and a purifying tonic.

DR. TUTT'S PILLS are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping or debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists. Principal Office, Nos. 18 and 20 Platt street, New York. oc2 1y5p

The Child's Corner.

CHILDREN'S EVENING HYMN.

The little birds now seek their nest;
The baby sleeps on mother's breast;
Thou givest all thy children rest,
God of the weary.

The sailor prayeth on the sea;
The little ones at mother's knee;
Now comes the penitent to thee,
God of the weary.

The orphan puts away his fears—
The troubled hopes for happier years;
Thou driest all the mourner's tears,
God of the weary.

Thou sendest rest to tired feet;
To little toilers, slumbers sweet;
To aching hearts, repose complete;
God of the weary.

In grief, perplexity or pain
None ever came to thee in vain;
Thou makest life a joy again,
God of the weary.

We sleep that we may wake renewed,
To serve thee, as thy children should,
With love and zeal and gratitude,
God of the weary.

Good Words.

The Tenth Commandment.

"Just guess what Susan Shaley has got in her barn!" said Bella Stevens, fanning herself with her pink gingham sunbonnet, and running into the house all in a fluster.

"Why, pigeons, I suppose; or—deary me, let me think—I don't believe I can guess."

"Pigeons! Now, Julie Stevens, you don't guess a bit right; I knew you could never guess—why it's two real, live kittens. I don't believe anybody ever had such ones before—cute little pink noses, and white feet and eyes!—oh, just blue"—and she fanned and fanned away with her sunbonnet, and walked up and down in the greatest fluster; sitting here and there and everywhere, and not being quiet a minute.

"Kittens! two of them? I don't believe she wants so many; may be she will give us one, and we can get Jamie to fix it in the coach for a horse, and all the dolls can go riding, and Minnie can hold it in her arms."

"She just won't give anybody one, and I pretty nearly cried about it, and I said: 'Susan Shaley, you are just as mean as ever you can be.' Oh, I wish I could get one! What in the world does Susan Shaley want with two, and here are you and I with none. I mean to go right straight to her mamma and beg her for it while Susan is at her grandmamma's, for I never, never shall be happy again until I get it"—and she nodded her little head with all the earnestness in the world, and fanned with her sunbonnet, and stamped her foot on the floor, and altogether was not a very good or mild-looking little girl, and it was fortunate she did not always appear to such disadvantage, for in such case she would not have been loved very much; but this morning something was wrong with her somewhere, as it was very easy to see.

"May be some other kitten would do," suggested Julie.

"No, I won't have none but Susan Shaley's, and I just mean to have it—now I will have it; you see if I don't, Julie Stevens."

"But," said Julie, "I have been thinking about what mamma told us yesterday; don't you know she said to wish for other people's things was coveting and breaking the tenth commandment, and—"

"Yes, but then I don't believe she meant cats and such things; it would be such fun to see kitty's little white feet playing with strings, and to see her rolling all about the floor, and she has just no nails at all to scratch with, because she is so little. I am going to tease somebody till I get her."

"Yes, but about the commandment? I most know mamma would say you ought not to try to get Susan's kitty against her will and make her cry."

"I cannot help it; I must have her, and Susan won't mind it much after it is over. She has a rabbit and three dolls, and don't need her half as much as I do, because, you see, I only have Eliza Jane—and her nose is broken—and Josephine, with not a bit of anything alive to play with."

"But if it is wrong to get it?"

"Of course, Julie Stevens, you know I would not get it if I thought it was wrong. The commandment don't mean cats, and mamma, never in the world, thought of them either."

"Well, I want a kitty, but I do not want it so very, very much as to covet Susan Shaley's."

Bella looked serious, and seemed to be thinking a great deal as she said: "I'm sure it is no harm only to want the kitty and get some one to give her to me. To be sure Susan would cry, but then I'll cry if I don't get her. The commandment don't say a scrap of a word about kittens or cats. It says: 'Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, nor his maid, nor his ox, nor his ass—'"

"Nor anything that is his," chimed in a soft little voice from up in the corner of the shop window, where five-year, old Minnie was nestled, hard at work making odd figures intended to form a sample.

"Sure enough!" exclaimed Bella, holding her sunbonnet suddenly still, and standing with her finger pressed to her lip for an instant, and then reaching up into the shop window to give Minnie a kiss—"sure enough; I'll not go to Susan Shaley's; I'll try very hard not to wish—I see, 'anything that is his' means cats!"—New York Observer.

OUR OWN BIBLE.—Do you know, dear children, the pleasure of having a Bible all your own? There are people who would give a great deal to have a Bible. We have lately heard a story of a little girl who contrived a singular way to procure one. She lived in a little village in the mountains of Abeyron, and there they have not the happiness to see missionaries, who bring Bibles to the inhabitants. She was told that at Nimes one could be bought for three francs.

This poor little girl had no money; but she had two rabbits of her own. She resolved to go on foot to Nimes, which is five miles from her home, and she carried her two rabbits with her. She went to a bookseller, and proposed to him to exchange her two rabbits for a Bible, to which he consented. Rejoiced with her bargain, she returned to her mountain home, happy to have in her possession the precious book she had desired so long, and she made a good use of it: she learnt a verse every day, and how often they came into her mind many days after! Applied by the Spirit of God, they were a comfort to herself and to others whom she visited, for she often told them some of the precious words of the Lord Jesus. We wish all of our young readers would learn a text of Scripture every day, and say it to dear papa and mamma the next morning at the breakfast table; often a text of his dear little ones might be brought to papa's mind in his busy cares in the course of the day, or into dear mamma's thoughts when engaged with her many household duties.

THE FAMILY is like a book—
The children are the leaves,
The parents are the cover that Protective beauty gives;
Love is the little golden clasp
That bindeth up the trust;
Oh, break it not, lest all the leaves
Shall scatter and be lost.

IS THAT THE WAY YOU PRAY?—The simple remark or question of a pure-hearted child has influenced for good many a bad man and woman. One touching instance is told in the Maryland Republican:

"The worst man in the village was Jack Ranney. He had a comfortable home, but it was not a happy one. As soon as the big gate opened his two children, Milly and Bob, ran into the house exclaiming, 'Father has come,' and into the corner they crouched, and there they staid until ordered to bed. There was no clapping of hands, no ruby lips turned up to receive father's evening kiss in Jack's home. No, his children stood in terror of him, for often, after his day's work was done, did he go home drunk, and then he was cross, and would strike the first one who came in his way.

"One day Jack was driving his cart, and the harness broke, and his cart was backed into a ditch. Jack sprang from his seat and began to beat his horses most unmercifully with his whip-handle, while oath after oath rolled from his tongue, calling on God to 'damn his soul.'

"A little boy had been rolling his hoop up and down the pavement, but when he heard the awful words he caught his hoop in his hand and stopped, saying, in a trembling voice:

"'Is that the way you pray, Mr. Ranney?'

"Jack turned in perfect astonishment, but said nothing.

"The words of the boy set him to thinking, and so troubled his conscience that in a little while he became a changed man. No swearing is heard now from his lips, and his home is no longer a home of drunkenness. Who will doubt that in his own way God will reward that little boy for his brave yet gentle and considerate words?"—Youth's Companion.

Farm, Garden and Household.

PLANTING STRAWBERRIES.—Mr. I. Shellswell, in the Cottage Gardener, has tried the following method with great success: The way in which I planted my bed is as follows: I did not cut any runners off the old beds, but allowed them to run into a mass. In the autumn I lined strips about nine inches wide and two feet apart through its length, and cut them in squares of nine inches. These I took up with a spade at three inches deep. In the bed prepared for them I had trenches dug two feet apart, and placed the squares of strawberry roots in them, at a distance of eighteen inches from each other. The roots were not injured in the least, and the crop was excellent. I had the trenches that were made in the old bed filled with one part well-rotted manure and two parts stiff loam, and the bed was soon covered with plants. Thus, by degrees, you can renew the old bed as well as form new ones. Certainly, with the old plan of planting single roots, we obtained finer specimens of fruit, but, unless fruit for show is required, I advise every one to try the above plan for quantity, and they will not be disappointed.

HONEY-DEW.—In a recent letter, addressed to an English horticultural journal, Dr. Hooker takes the ground that the formation of honey-dew may take place independently of any insect agency, although there seems little doubt but that, by the action of aphides, a more copious secretion is often obtained. Having carefully watched the formation of honey-dew upon the leaves of the lime, he discovered that during hot and sunny weather the upper surface of the leaves, including those on the extreme branches, became uniformly speckled with honey-dew, and yet a careful examination of the leaves so marked disclosed no aphides. Hence the conclusion that its formation is a function of the plant itself.

SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT.

A sallow or yellow color of skin, or yellow-brown spots on face and other parts of body; dullness and drowsiness, with frequent headache; dizziness, bitter or bad taste in mouth, dryness of throat and internal heat; palpitation; in many cases a dry, teasing cough, with sore throat; unsteady appetite, raising of food, choking sensation in throat; distress, heaviness, bloated or full feeling about stomach and sides, pain in sides, back or breast, and about shoulders; colic, pain and soreness through bowels, with heat; constipation, alternating with diarrhea; piles, flatulence, nervousness, coldness of extremities; rush of blood to head, with symptoms of apoplexy; numbness of limbs, especially at night; cold chills, alternating with hot flashes; kidney and urinary difficulties; dullness, low spirits, unsociability and gloomy forebodings. Only a few of above symptoms likely to be present at one time. All who use Dr. Pierce's Alt. Ext. or Golden Medical Discovery for Liver Complaint and its complications are loud in its praise.

A CURE OF LIVER DISEASE.

RUSK, TEXAS, May 10, 1873.

DR. R. V. PIERCE—Dear Sir: My wife last year at this time was confined to her bed with Chronic Liver Disease. I had one of the best doctors to see her, and he gave her up to die, when I came upon some of your medicine. I bought one bottle and commenced giving it. She then weighed eighty-two pounds; now she weighs one hundred and forty pounds, and is robust and hearty. She has taken eight bottles in all; so you see I am an advocate for your medicines. WM. SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1873.

Faculty.—REV. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law; REV. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science; G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages; T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science; REV. H. D. NORTHWORTHY, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $60; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $15 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—The Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

Board of Trustees.—Rev. Bishop J. C. KEENER, D. D., President, New Orleans.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.
The Spring session of this widely-known and popular institution begins on the Twenty-ninth of JANUARY next, and closes on the Seventeenth of June, which is Commencement day. In view of the present financial depression we now make this liberal offer:
FOR ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS, paid in advance, we will give, for one entire session of twenty weeks, to any student in the Collegiate, Scientific or Business course, his board at the Dyers House (now reduced to $10 per month), tuition, fuel, room-rent, washing, library and contingent fees. In the Preparatory Department the charges will be even less. Board at the Fulton House and in private families may be obtained at moderate though at somewhat more advanced rates. The advantages now offered here to those seeking thorough collegiate training and culture were never excelled in our previous history, as those best acquainted with the school will testify. FROM A RECENT ANALYSIS BY Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Yale College, the following table will show the chemical composition of YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN:

Albuminoids	12.45	Sugar	13.06
Gum	5.21	Starch	55.62
Fat	8.59	Cellulose	2.95
Ash	2.12

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, gluten, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. "These," says Youmans, "are the flesh-forming principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable in all requiring a highly nutritious and at the same time easily assimilated diet, and hence is used as an article of daily consumption in climates which occasion rapid waste of the system. "Almost all Asiatics, Africans and (aboriginal) Americans use it as their chief nourishment."—Louis Figuier, in his work on the Vegetable World.

In Hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN all the nutritive qualities of the grain are preserved. The grain is cut from the ear and placed in tin canisters with the rich juices (or milk) which exude from it, and is then sealed air-tight and the canister subjected to steam heat, which coagulates the albumen. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by the table that the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and the most nourishing article of food in the domain of nature placed within the reach of all.

READ THIS.

Thos. Broughton, with John D. Park, of Cincinnati, says: "W. C. Hamilton & Co.—I had had the Ague for two long years, and had tried several remedies of acknowledged or pretended merit without any good result. I finally tried your preparation—KRESS FEVER TONIC. One bottle completely broke up the malady, and I am now perfectly well. I can testify that your medicine does all you claim for it; and it is only due to you that this acknowledgment should be made, especially as so many worthless chill medicines are now offered."

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the sixteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales...	16,087
Lake	"	21
Arkansas	"	5,473
Mobile	"	2,247
Texas	"	438
Total		24,566

On Saturday the market was very quiet at the opening and continued inanimate during the morning, but the sales up to twelve M., nevertheless, reached nearly 2,000 bales, partly at previous rates, clean white cotton showing no falling off, and partly at a decline of ⅛@¼c., after which the disposition evinced by factors to make fair concessions stimulated the demand and the movement became quite animated, mostly on the basis of ¼@⅜c. decline, resulting in the sales of 9,500 bales. Low ordinary sold at 9⅜c., ordinary at 11@11⅛, strict ordinary as low as 11¼, good ordinary at 13¼, strict good ordinary, high style, at 14, strict good ordinary to low middling at 14¼, low middling at 14⅝, 14⅝@14⅞, strict low middling at 15⅛@15⅜, and middling, high style, at 16⅜c. On Monday the market opened with a moderate demand, but at irregular and lower prices, and the sales during the morning were about 2,000 bales, partly at previous rates and partly at figures indicating a falling off of ⅛@¼c., after which, under the concessions made by factors, predicated on a decline at New York of ⅛c. in spots and 1-16@⅛c. in futures, buyers came forward with more spirit, and took 9,800 bales which was in excess of general expectation. On Tuesday the market opened with a better feeling, and, notwithstanding a decline of 1-16d, at Liverpool, factors assumed renewed confidence, and buyers were no longer able to go on at the inside rates accepted for several days past. The demand, nevertheless, continued active throughout the day, resulting in sales of 11,700 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 31,150 bales, against 24,350 for the corresponding time last week and 23,750 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 688,492 bales, against 608,063 bales to the same date last year, and the increase is the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 236,755 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 53,515 to Great Britain, and of 43,124 to France, and a decrease of 56,378 to other foreign ports. News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—Mr. Waite is unanimously confirmed as chief justice.

The Senate was in executive session this afternoon for an hour and a quarter, engaged in the consideration of the nomination of Morrison R. Waite for chief justice of the Supreme Court. Senator Edmunds and the two Ohio senators, Sherman and Thurman, spoke in favor of confirmation, showing a concurrence of views as to Mr. Waite's integrity and his good legal attainments.

Senator Sumner alluded to the solemnity of the occasion, in connection with advising and consenting to the appointment of a chief justice, and said that owing to the importance of the subject it became them all to be duly impressed with the illness of the gentleman whose name was before them.

No remarks were made by any senator in opposition to confirmation. On the question: "Will the Senate advise and consent to the appointment?" the vote was unanimous.

ATLANTA, Jan. 22.—The State Grange adjourned to-night. They adopted a resolution recommending the creation of a State bureau of agriculture.

A direct trade company has been organized, with a capital stock of $100,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 26.—The steamship McGregor has arrived here, bringing Australian dates to December 20 and Sandwich Island dates to the fourteenth instant.

There is a growing feeling in Auckland in favor of the annexation of Fiji to England.

The health of King Lunalilo, of the Sandwich Islands, is reported to be much improved. The approaching election excites much interest.

LOWELL, Jan. 26.—An earthquake at Chelmsford, Massachusetts, shook the buildings and caused much alarm.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Cushing sails for Madrid on the seventh of February.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Jan. 22.—The Times publishes the substance of a note from Bismarck, who holds the French government accountable for the violence of the Ultramontane press in France.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 23.—The marriage of the Duke of Edinburg to the Grand Duchess Marie was solemnized at one o'clock this afternoon. The day was observed as a holiday, and since early morning, when the salutes were fired, the streets have been crowded with people. The festivities in celebration of the event will continue several days. The city is gayly decorated, and it will be illuminated to-night, Saturday and Sunday nights. On Monday a grand military review will take place in front of the Winter Palace. The troops participating will consist of forty-one battalions of infantry, thirty-seven squadrons of cavalry, and an artillery force of one hundred and forty guns. The weather is delightful and the sleighing splendid.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—Flags are displayed from all the public and many private buildings in honor of the marriage of the Duke of Edinburg. Windsor Castle, the residence of the Prince of Wales, at Sandringham, and other buildings occupied by the royal family, are profusely decorated with bunting. Throughout the whole country bells are ringing in honor of the nuptials, and marriage services are being celebrated in the English churches.

LONDON, Jan. 23, 6 A. M.—Madam Parepa Rosa died last night.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—Parliament has been dissolved by royal decree. Mr. Gladstone, in his address, says since the defeat of the Irish education bill the ministry had not sufficient power to carry out great legislative measures, hence the appeal to the people.

Premier Gladstone has issued an address to his constituents at Greenwich, asking for re-election, and announcing that the Queen had been pleased to accept the advice of her ministers to dissolve the present Parliament immediately, and summon a new one to meet on the fifth of March, 1874.

In his address Gladstone gives as a reason for this measure that since the defeat of the government upon the Irish higher education question, by the concurrent efforts of the leader of the opposition and the Catholic prelacy in Ireland, the government has not been possessed of sufficient authority to carry great legislative measures.

Its experience during the recess of Parliament has not indicated that any improvement in its position was probable. The chief of the opposition refused to accept office on the defeat of the government, and the cabinet, feeling that they have not the support which every ministry ought to enjoy, an appeal to the people is the proper remedy for such a state of things.

The advantage of a dissolution at the present moment is that estimates are so far advanced that the government is able to promise a surplus of £5,000,000, with which it intends to abolish the income tax and to relieve local taxation. Among matters likely to come before Parliament are a readjustment of the educational act, the improvement of local government, and of the land, game and liquor laws.

The address promises a large measure of relief from duties on articles entering into general consumption, and expresses a hope for speedy assimilation of country with borough franchise.

The Times of this morning, commenting on the address of Mr. Gladstone, announcing the dissolution of Parliament, says the document reflects the characteristic genius of its author. The Times also doubts the wisdom of the repeal of the income tax promised by the premier.

The Post says the address almost amounts to a coup d'etat.

The Standard is confident of a conservative majority in the elections, and severely condemns the suddenness of the announcement of the dissolution.

All the journals agree upon the popularity of the financial measures promised in the address.

MADRID, Jan. 24.—The government has issued an order closing the Alphonsist clubs in this city.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—An official dispatch received by the government to-day states that Livingstone, at one time in Sabrisa, was three hours in crossing the marshes, with the water above waist-deep; the sufferings of the whole party were terrible; ten died in consequence. The members of Cameron's expedition were suffering from fever and ophthalmia, but would await the arrival of the doctor's remains and bring them to Ujiji; from the latter place they would be conveyed to Zanzibar, where it is expected they will arrive next month.

A DISJOINTED HEARER.—It was formerly a custom among the Scottish clergy to make frequent allusions in their prayers to the Pope, whom they always characterized by the epithet Anti-christ. At the time, however, of the French Revolution, the "good old hatred" of popery gave way before a still more dreadful subject of antipathy and horror—the mingled infidelity (and Jacobinism) of the tremendous event; and it then became customary to pray for the altar and throne. Soon after this material change in the prayers had taken place, a poor woman said one day to the Rev. Mr. F., of Montrose: "Sir, I hae something to spier at ye; but ye munna tak it ill." "Na, na, Peggy," returned Mr. M., "I'll no tak it ill." "Then, dear me, minister," rejoined the old woman, "is you Annie Christie that ye prayed sae hug about dead, or is she better? for I ne'er hear ye speak about her noo."

A WRITER in the Baptist Weekly says: A very hard-hearted clapper in an old church tower professed the intensest distress because its bell was hopelessly cracked. Many people thought it a pitiable position, and wished the sad-hearted clapper a better bell. But just then the ghost of ancient Diogenes, the sage, floated in through the window, and whistled most angrily: "Master Clapper, cease your noise, and remember, in the first place, you cracked the bell; and, secondly, nobody would have known it had you not told them." I have observed often that those who bemoan divisions in a church are they who make them; and I also observed sometimes that they who make them are most ready to publish the fact; I have observed another fact, viz.: that all clappers are not of as good metal as the bells they crack.

CHILDISH AFFECTION.—A pathetic incident occurred during the floods at Binghamton. A Mrs. Fox, residing near the cemetery gate, heard in the morning a peculiar moaning in the direction of the cemetery. Going there she found a little child waist-deep in water, and weeping near a headstone which marked a lonely grave. Upon being questioned she said she lived a long way off. She had heard that the graves were covered by water, and feared her mother's would be washed away, so she went to keep her poor watch and ward beside it. She was kindly cared for and returned to her motherless home.

REV. J. T. DAVES.—This gentleman, a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, has arrived, with his family, in this city, and will take charge of the missionary labor of his society in this city. Mr. Daves is from Louisiana, and Mr. Hernandez, another preacher of the same church, and who preceded Mr. Daves, is a native Mexican, from Texas. They will work together in the same cause. Mr. Daves is stopping at the San Carlos, Nos. 34 and 35.—Two Republics, City of Mexico.

DO NOT JEWS WRITE POETRY?—The editor of the Jewish Messenger informs us that "during all the years of his editorship perhaps not more than a dozen original poems have been sent to him from contributors of the Jewish faith, and during the past year he did not receive a single poetical effusion for insertion." Happy Jewish Messenger! Oh, that Christian folk would hang their harps upon the willows after the same excellent Hebrew fashion!

ASSOCIATIONS are for the propagation of God's kingdom upon earth in goodness, in wisdom, in beauty. Weak men join their hands in long chains, which gives them power, and the electric current of God's love runs more rapidly along them all.—Bremer.

"BIDDY," said a lady, "step over and see how old Mrs. Jones is this morning." In a few minutes Biddy returned with the information that Mrs. Jones was seventy-two years, seven months and two days old that morning.

Observations in the South.

BY REV. DR. STEVENS.

In a late article we treated of the condition and prospects of the colored people of the South, giving with some emphasis facts in their favor, but reminding the reader that these facts needed qualification, and that we should speak with equal frankness of the counter-facts.

One of these is their indisposition to work with anything like Northern diligence and persistence. This is an undeniable evil among the freedmen: If it is not universal, yet it is general; of course you will find examples of thorough industry and frugality, especially where prudent and liberal employers direct their work, but such cases are not the rule; they are the exceptions, and so exceptional as really to be anomalous. The farther you go southward the more does this sans souci way of life prevail. The contingencies of sickness or old age are piously left to the care of Providence; to "live from hand to mouth" is the general economical philosophy of the freedman, and this is unfortunately too practicable a philosophy in the more Southern latitudes. An occasional "job" of work will yield him enough to live, with his simple wants, through days of idleness. Nothing demands more urgently the attention of the friends of the freedmen than this prevalent and growing evil. There can be no real advancement of the colored race without its correction. Work, regular and thorough, like that of Northern artisans and farmers, is indispensable not only for the recovery of the South, but especially for the future security of the whole black population. Already plans are discussed, in many Southern States, for the importation of foreign white laborers. If the colored laborers should finally be thus superseded, it will be chiefly their own fault. They will then sink into a pariah class, or be self-compelled to retreat, gradually, further southward and westward, till they are cast among the New Mexicans, Mexicans and Central Americans. Some of their best friends begin to fear such a fate for them. Some think they see already an unconscious tendency to such a migration.

Another great evil, growing, perhaps, out of the above fact, is the disposition of the freedmen to desert their old country homes for the great cities. This is obvious in all the cities of the South, especially those of the seaboard. They are becoming crowded with suburban and poverty-stricken blacks, far beyond their demands for labor. The adjacent country thus suffers by desertion, while the cities suffer by pauperism, and all the attendant evils of a superfluous, unemployed, or but partially employed, population. The white friends of the freedmen everywhere earnestly but ineffectually remonstrate against this impolitic course.

A lamentable evil among the colored people is the facility with which they allow themselves to be led by political demagogues, especially by the so-called "carpet-baggers." The fact that these men represent, in a certain way, Northern political sentiment, should not blind us to the egregious vices of their character and policy. The fact that they stand out, among the colored masses, in contrast with the old "masters," whose excessive "conservatism" might endanger the rights and improvement of the freedmen, should not disguise to us the appalling corruptions and financial ruin with which they are devastating whole States, and thereby forestalling, annihilating, the best prospects of their colored population. South Carolina is absolutely ruined; no statesman on earth, no angel in heaven, can suggest a solution of her financial problem; none seems possible but the great crime of "repudiation." And this means simply moral ruin added to financial ruin. It is paltry logic to say that South Carolina, as the old leader of disloyalty, deserves this ruin. What of the hosts of her black population in that case? She is substantially a commonwealth of freedmen; they are her dominant majority. Her ruin is their ruin. By their heedless concession to the "carpet-baggers" they and their children, for indefinite time, are submerged, with their far less numerous white neighbors, in a public wreck which is hardly paralleled in the history of civilized governments. We would not here touch upon political ground foreign to our sphere; our readers know well that our political sympathies are on the side of the colored race and of all men who legitimately labor for their welfare in the South. But we know what we affirm when we say that the "carpet-bag" politicians are unscrupulously ruining the cause which they pretend to uphold. Not a few of them are men who were furious secessionists till their cunning detected the coming fate of the Confederacy, when they changed their politics in time to secure the patronage of the government and the favor of the freedmen. The latter now have the control of several States at the ballot-box, and, in every one of such States their leaders have been driving them to destruction. Official and political corruption are rampant. The freedmen are cajoled; the leaders are enriched, and the States wrecked. Northern politicians should understand these facts; the government at Washington should ponder them gravely. The dominant party of the North can never wield a permanent influence in the South till it gets rid of the shameful prestige of the men who have for some years pretended to represent it among the freedmen, while ruining whole States and enriching themselves by the spoils.

Meanwhile there are scattered over these abused States true and incorruptible men—men who went thither with our armies, or soon after, led by Christian or philanthropic motives, to labor for the freedmen; but they are helpless against the political leaders and their cliques. Their moral integrity is their proscription. But let us hope that their day may yet come. It seems to be coming in Florida, at least. Could the corrupt cliques be exterminated, root and branch, the freedmen would have a new emancipation, only second in importance to their first.

We have proposed to say something further on the religious condition of the freedmen, but, as we wish to present these "observations" with all possible brevity and distinctness, we shall treat that subject separately hereafter.—Methodist.

The Dean of Canterbury on the Evangelical Alliance.

I am here as an Episcopalian. (Hear, hear.) I do not conceal my principles. ("Hear, hear," and applause.) Nor do I consider that I at all compromise those principles by being present at that communion with a great many others who were not so. But I must say that I never was present at anything that more impressed my spirit or more made me feel something like a sense of premillennial joy than at that communion. It was at the church of the venerable Dr. Adams—one of the most Christian gentlemen I ever met—that this gathering of all nations took place. It was that all of us might testify our love to the Redeemer and commemorate His death. That is a truth on which there is no difference among us. ("Hear, hear," and applause.) There may be many differences among us in all sorts of minor matters, but in that which is the cardinal point of faith there is no difference whatsoever, and I cannot imagine that the holy communion which symbolizes that one doctrine which is essential to the salvation of our souls should be made into a bone of discord. (Applause.) I believe there is no stronger profanation of the Lord's Supper than to turn it into a test of the communion to which you belong. I believe if there is one thing on which we might all of us unite, it is in showing forth our faith in the death of our blessed Lord, and we misuse the death of our Lord—that great proof of his love—when we turn it into an occasion for hate and discord, if it is turned into a test. It was so once in this country; but we have abolished the test acts, and we look back to that time with shame; and why should we maintain in our own minds that which we, as a nation, abandoned? The Lord's Supper should be the thing to draw us together, not a thing to keep us apart. (Hear, hear.) It was a moment of very great pleasure that there, as a member of the Episcopal Church of England, I should meet with men whom I love, and join personally, like my friends, Dr. Stoughton and Dr. Angus, with the representatives of all the different churches in this great feast of love. It is with very great sorrow that I have seen that the Episcopalian Church should find fault that there should be one member of their body—there were a great many more, however—present there. It is just as great an act of love for Dr. Stoughton and others to take the communion with me as it is for me to take the communion with them. ("Hear, hear," and loud applause. They are making just the same concession as I was making, doing what I was endeavoring to do—find some common ground on which we were all to meet as brethren. (Renewed applause.) Their communities have not found fault with them; they have not been exposed to obloquy and censure because they took part in it; and it is a painful thing that the community to which I myself belong should be so narrow in their views as that they should not see that there is something greater than any one particular community and church, and that is the universal church of Christ. (Loud applause.) In the Apostles' Creed we profess our belief in the catholic—that is, the universal—church. That idea was realized at this communion. It was no longer one particular church, no longer any special branch of the church. It was the whole of the church of Christ that there met together in order to profess their belief in the death of the Lord who died to save the souls not merely of one denomination or of another, but of all those who put their faith in him.—Speech in Exeter Hall—English Independent.

THE Congregationalist explains where the shoe pinches in the Episcopal Church, as it stands affected by the new movement of Bishop Cummins, in this wise:

"Bishop Cummins was canonically ordained. No Episcopalian can deny he is in the 'true apostolic succession' without overturning, by that denial, the genuineness and authenticity of the whole bench of American bishops. But once a bishop, Bishop Cummins is always a bishop—at least until, for cause, legally degraded. By consequence he has already made Mr. Cheney a bishop—as genuine as any of them; he and Bishop Cheney can make plenty more. This is fearful to contemplate. But it is a necessary—while dreadfully awkward—consequence of the facts in the case applied to the fiction of 'the apostolic succession.'"

Presbyterian University.

The movement, says the Southwestern Presbyterian, to establish a Presbyterian university for the Southwest is now fairly inaugurated. The subject has been deliberately considered by the various synods; and they have acted without haste, but promptly and unanimously. The first result of their concurrent action is the meeting of directors just held at Memphis. It is an indication of the interest felt in the subject that, with the exception of Hon. Tom. Hamilton, of Alabama, every director was present at the meeting. Important public duties prevented Mr. Hamilton's attendance.

The proceedings of the board show that they have a very clear idea of the steps to be taken to insure success; they are marked by energy and decision, and at the same time by a wise caution; we have no doubt that they will commend themselves to the confidence of the church. They furnish us an excellent idea of the practical wisdom of the directory, and are a pledge that, in the very important matter of laying the foundations of this great enterprise, we may freely confide in the administration to which the synods have committed it.

The public estimate of the value of this movement is significantly shown by the different applications, by highly respected parties, for its location among them. The Synod of Kentucky may possibly also become a candidate, as appears by the interest taken in our scheme. The synod has secured, we suppose, $150,000 for an endowment of her own scheme. If she decides to join the Southwestern synods, a very handsome proportion of the required endowment would be already secured. This would be a matter of some importance, though not of the greatest, for unless we are greatly mistaken there will be no difficulty in raising, even in the impoverished condition of our Southwestern States, all the funds needed to endow the University; and it would, no doubt, be best for its prosperity that the endowment should come from the region which is to furnish the future patronage to the institution.

So far the smiles of Providence have rested on the initial steps of the enterprise. It has been developed step by step, increasing in popularity and strength as it goes. The prospects are of the most encouraging character. May the guiding pillar of cloud and fire precede it still.

A Card.

At a meeting of Methodist ministers, held on board the steamer Ouachita Belle, January 17, 1874, it was unanimously

Resolved, That we, the undersigned members of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, do hereby tender to Captain F. A. Blanks, of the steamer Ouachita Belle, our grateful acknowledgments for kind services bestowed on us, and commend him and the officers of his beautiful steamer for their urbanity and attention to the traveling public.

Resolved, That one copy of this resolution be furnished Captain Blanks, and that another be forwarded to the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Not Sold.

The following appears in the editorial columns of the Independent this week:

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT,
No. 3 Park Place, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1874.

There is no truth whatever in the reports published in the daily papers that the Independent has been sold. No change whatever has occurred in its proprietorship or editorial management, and there is no prospect of any. It is true, however, that several very flattering and unsolicited proposals to purchase the paper have recently been made to us, from highly respectable parties; but they have all been respectfully declined.

MISSIONARY REINFORCEMENTS FOR MEXICO.—On Saturday, January 10, says the New York Christian Advocate, Miss Hastings, missionary of the New York Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, sailed for Mexico in the Cleopatra, from Pier No. 3, North river. Mr. William B. Skidmore, Rev. Mr. Terry and several of the officers and managers of the New York Branch were on the steamer to take leave of Miss Hastings and wish her a prosperous voyage. It is understood that she will be met at Havana by Bishop and Mrs. Simpson, who were to sail from Cedar Keys, Florida, and by Rev. Dr. Cooper and Miss Susan M. Warner, missionaries of the Cincinnati Branch, who were to sail from New Orleans, and with the rest of the party proceed to Mexico via Vera Cruz.

THE VENERABLE David Hubbard, a native of Virginia, aged eighty-two years, and a veteran of the war of 1812, being badly wounded at the battle of New Orleans and taken prisoner by the British, died in Pointe Coupee, Louisiana, on the twentieth instant, at the residence of his son, Major D. C. Hubbard.

Books and Periodicals.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MAGAZINE, Visitor and Little People for February are promptly to hand and all first-rate. The American Agriculturist for January is, as usual, splendidly illustrated. The first page contains a likeness of the publisher, Orange Judd. Brainard's Musical World for the month is filled with music and musical literature. Grunewald, the music dealer, on Canal street, sends us a piece of music, entitled Flirtation. La Creme de la Creme is about the best of the musical periodicals of the country. Published by J. L. Peters, New York. To-Day is the title of an illustrated publication edited by Dio Lewis. We have received the monthly part for January. To-Day Printing and Publishing Company, Philadelphia. The American Artisan is an illustrated journal of popular science, and is one of the most valuable periodicals in America. It is now issued as a monthly, at $2 per annum. Brown & Allen, publishers, New York. Philip Phillips' International Singing Annual is a beautifully printed little volume of sixty-four pages, filled with fresh music, and songs and hymns of great merit. A. S. Barnes & Co., publishers, New York and Chicago. Morton's Monthly Home and School for January is a good number of this always excellent journal.

—THE NEW YEAR OF THE LIVING AGE.—The number of Littell's Living Age for the week ending January 3 begins a new volume (the one hundred and twentieth) of that sterling periodical, and the present is therefore an excellent time for the beginning of new subscriptions. Among the contents of the present number are an admirable article from the British Quarterly on the Sources of Pleasure in Landscape; The Parisians, by Lord Lytton; Some Entertaining Letters of Charles Lamb, with Reminiscences of Himself Awakened Thereby, by Mary Cowden Clarke; Sukie's Boy, by the author of the "Huguenot Family;" Odds and Ends from Dr. Robert Chambers' Scrap-Book; Slum Jewelry; Madam de Stael and Her Times, by the author of "Mirabeau;" Curious Wills, etc., which, with shorter articles and poetry, make up a most attractive week's feast for the beginning of the new year.

APPLETON'S RAILWAY AND STEAM NAVIGATION GUIDE for 1874 contains a vast amount of useful information, and will prove of invaluable service to travelers. The Southern Methodist Home Altar for January has a good table of contents. Published by Rev. William Baker, McMinnville, Tennessee, at $1.25 per annum. The Minutes of the Holston Conference, edited by J. R. Payne, assistant secretary, are handsomely printed, and very complete in method and fullness. The Texas Farm and Home for January has been received. Published by Charles E. Brown & Co., Calvert, Texas.

THE SABBATH is the title of a new work containing the most popular psalm and hymn tunes in general, making a most complete collection of sacred music. There is a metrical as well as an alphabetical index. All the old and cherished tunes are here, and many new ones of decided merit. In the usual tune-book form, substantially bound, clear and beautiful type, four hundred and sixteen pages. By C. Everest, Lee & Walker, publishers, Philadelphia.

OLD AND NEW for January has: Wall Street and the Crisis, The Boston Tea Party, and John Stuart Mill, besides other articles of interest.

OUR GERMAN WORK IN RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.—It gives us much pleasure, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, to record the prosperity which attends our mission to the Germans in this city. A church has been organized for some months, and now numbers nearly forty members. The Sabbath school is flourishing; and last week, on the rainiest evening of the week, the German children gathered at Clay Street to receive a lot of beautiful and useful presents, which were distributed to them by Rev. E. N. S. Biogg, our superintendent of German missions. Rev. Frederick Bickel, the pastor of our German church, has worked hard and faithfully, and now rejoices in the fruit of his labors. But we have something further to tell: A lot most eligibly located has been bought, on which we are now laboring to build a house of worship for our German brethren. Subscriptions for this are now being taken by Bros. Biogg and Bickel, and their success so far is highly encouraging. We commend the enterprise most earnestly to all our people in Richmond, and to our members throughout the Conference. Give what you can, reader, and help on a good work. The city members can contribute to their pastors; those at a distance can send to Rev. Frederick Bickel, pastor of the German church.

IT IS PATHETIC, says the Christian at Work, to read in the will of Prof. Agassiz that, after a life devoted to science, for the benefit of the world, he possessed only his library (which he bequeathes to the Cambridge Museum) and a mortgaged house, which he bequeathes to his wife. This he touchingly tells us in explanation of the omission of any legacy to his daughters. Surely Harvard College, which has so widely profited from his benefactions, will look to it that his family are not left unprovided for by the sad bereavement which they, and the whole country as well, have just sustained.

THE SWIFT SHIPS.

BY TARPLEY STARR.

The days come in, and the days go out,
Like silent ships on a silent main,
But the ship that's gone,
With its fleet sails on,
And never comes back to the port again.

They cross each other at dead of night,
They cross like dreams and make no sign,
Nor jostle, nor jar,
As they clear the bar,
Where the sands of time make the crossing line.

Each night one comes and one goes out;
But never we hear the stretch or the strain
As they heave the weight
Of their noiseless freight,
And as quietly put to sea again.

Some morning we hurry off down to the beach
To see what last night's visit hath been;
And there is some waif,
All precious and safe!
A treasure just dropped from the ship that's been in.

Some morning we come to the best-loved cove,
But our flowers and shells lie scattered about!
And lo! in the sand
Is the print of a hand,
And we know that another ship is gone out.

Our dearest, our best! these smuggling crafts—
How they bear them off—from you and from me!
And nothing comes back
But the brine of their track,
And the dull night-roar of the seething sea.

One morning we'll stand all ready and packed,
Awaiting a sail on this same old shore;
But we know it's the last
Of the fleet, all past—
That the ships will come into the port no more.

Individual Responsibility.

MR. EDITOR: While Bishop Pierce and others are bending their energies to suppress operatic choirs and other "aristocratic" abominations that have crept into our church and are destroying its vitality, permit me to direct the attention of some of our mighty men to "democratic" vices which are none the less efficacious for evil (if not more so) than the follies our good Bishop is laboring to suppress.

The vice that I would present for consideration this time is widespread cramps the efforts of our ministers, retards our missions, and exerts an evil influence generally over the laity. It is the desire or effort, often successful, to level or equalize the responsibility of church members—in losing sight of the individual responsibility of its members, both by the members themselves and by their pastors. I speak now specially of this vice in its relation to church finances—missions, support of the ministry, Sabbath schools, etc.—and to make my meaning clear will give an illustration. A station or circuit, comprising say two hundred members, agree to pay the pastor $2,000 per annum. How will they raise the amount? By contributing as the Lord hath blessed their labors? Or will not the response of each one be: "I am willing to give my share"—i. e., the pro rata, as one of two hundred members—"when called on by the stewards for my contribution?" Or, if he give more than that pro rata, does he not speak of the addition as "more than his share?" So it is in every department of the church, in the city or in the country, wherever money is required. The vice has grown. It has become strong, until I doubt if there is in all the Methodist Episcopal Church South a single member free from its thrall—a single member who gives as he is able to give. And just so far as he falls short of that ability, just so far does he lose sight of his individual responsibility, and just so far is he guilty of a breach of trust in the eye of God. It is vain for us to close our eyes to the truth, and coax ourselves into believing or pretending to believe that we do right, or at least no positive wrong, when we base our donations on a mathematical calculation such as was used to illustrate this article. It is a wrong—a grievous sin—for which we must one day give an account. Did not Christ commend the action of the poor widow? She gave more than the rich. They gave out of their abundance; she gave her all—all she was able to give.

Our estimate of our ability to give must be a liberal one, not in our favor, but in favor of God's cause, or we will be surprised some day to find God's estimate so widely different from ours. He unto whom five talents had been committed was commended for having gained five others; but he who, from love of self and self-indulgence, failed to make a proper use of what was intrusted to him, received a punishment of great severity, richly deserved. When our day of reckoning comes—and it will come "as a thief in the night"—I think we shall find that in the many times we have tried to "economize" it had been better had we reduced many other expenditures before we trenched on what our vows and our duty required us to contribute to the gospel; that it had been better for us had we spent less money on costly apparel and fared less sumptuously, and given more to clothe the naked, feed the hungry and relieve the sick; that it had been better for us had we paid our pastors more, aided their widows and orphans more, and lent a helping hand and given more largely and cheerfully unto those whom Christ had bidden: "Go into all the world."

Should the love of money take the place of the love of God or his creatures? Should no feeling of gratitude prompt us to greater generosity? I wrote generosity too quickly; it should have been fidelity. No man is generous because he pays his debts, but only honest; and to the gospel we are all indebted, for what cannot be estimated in dollars and cents, but which does require us to contribute dollars and cents to aid in maintaining the church in her warfare against the world and sin. We owe the ministry, we owe the missions, we owe every other gospel cause, in just proportion to our ability to give, and God will hold us individually responsible according to our individual ability.

Will "the hard times" be an excuse for us? Listen! "Will a man rob God? Yet have ye robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. * * * And all nations shall call you blessed; for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts." LAYMAN.

FAYETTE, January 12, 1874.

Letter from Summerfield, Ala.

MR. EDITOR: When, at the close of the late session of the Alabama Conference, Bishop Marvin announced my name in connection with Summerfield station, a good brother said to me: "You will find Summerfield a pleasant and healthy place to live, and will have good schools for your children; but you will not find it as in the days of R. A. Baker, B. J. Harrison and their cotemporaries." That is very true. Summerfield was a princely station in those days. But still the mantle of those patterns of piety and Christian generosity rests on the church; and though her numerical and financial strength is not what it once was, her people know how to appreciate the gospel and take care of their pastor and his family. A more cordial reception we have not met anywhere. Indeed, such was the ample provision made for our comfort that I think it deserves a notice in your excellent paper, that others may profit by the noble example, and be provoked to "do likewise." Our indefatigable presiding elder, Bro. Briggs, having assurance that all things were in readiness in Summerfield, had gone down to Selma to look after the comfort of the brethren there, where we met him and our warm-hearted Bro. Canning, with conveyances awaiting us. We were soon seated in a comfortable rockaway, behind two fiery steeds—such as Balaam used for a saddle-nag, with a sable driver, who was fully master of the situation. Two hours' drive brought us to the gate of the parsonage, where we were met by Dr. Mitchell and that truly "elect lady," Sister Mitchell, who introduced us to Sisters Golson, Strider and others who were awaiting our arrival. Everything was in apple-pie order. Every piece of furniture in house, kitchen, dining-room and study, with beds, bed-clothing, carpet, etc., had gone through a thorough process of renovation, and new material supplied where the old had worn out. The bureaus and mantles were decorated with flowers in a variety beyond what I supposed the season afforded, the fragrance of which threw a charm around our new home that nothing else could impart. We were soon invited to preside at the table, which was laden with sumptuous fare—good enough for the family of a prince.

But the more substantial benefits are yet to be told. Our larder was supplied with flour, hams, bacon, lard, potatoes, sugar, coffee, and on down to nutmegs and spices; which showed that a thoughtful head as well as a liberal hand had been concerned in this preparation. A huge pile of wood in the yard, with about a cord nicely cut and stored, gave evidence that our good people intended that we should be warmed as well as fed. The roast beef, nicely-dressed fowls, cakes, pies, fruits, roasted coffee, etc., carefully stored in the pantry, proved that these thoughtful Christians appreciated the fact that the pastor's wife would need a few days' rest before entering on the more arduous duties of housekeeping.

Mr. Editor, how happy were we that evening as we sat around our cheerful, blazing fire, with so many comforts, compared with that dreary day in January when we arrived at the parsonage of —— station. The roof was covered with snow, the eaves pendant with long icicles, the doors closed, not a fagot of fuel or a morsel to eat on the place. Not a soul was to be seen or a voice heard. Everything without was cold and cheerless—all within silent and somber as the grave. Wife and babe were compelled to wait on the snow-covered ground until I could perform a circuit through the snow in pursuit of the keys, and sufficient fuel to warm them. But for a well-filled lunch-basket that we brought with us, we might have gone to bed that night supperless. And that was in the parsonage of the wealthiest congregation that I have ever served.

It is not so much the result of a parsimonious spirit in the church that our preachers and their families enjoy so few comforts, as the want of thoughtfulness. "My people doth not consider;" and as the result of this inconsideration the cry from the empty larders of the priesthood has gone up to God, and he has cursed the people with barren fields and leanness of soul, saying: "Ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." There are those who have no money to give, yet they have something they could spare that would contribute to the comfort and support of the preacher's family. Let them give it as unto the Lord, and he will bless them in it. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Our first Quarterly Conference has already passed, and the stewards have gone to work in good earnest to provide liberal things for their pastor. We held the usual watch meeting on the last night of the year. The sermon was an excellent one—in the peculiarly interesting style of Dr. J. B. Cottrell. The new year was ushered in by devout prayer, with the renewal of our covenant. The exercises were closed by singing the hymn commencing:

"Come, let us anew
Our journey pursue,"

and the benediction. We confidently expect a prosperous year.

Bro. McVey, the president of Centenary Female College, and Bro. Massey, the principal of the Male Academy, are doing faithful work for the church. I know of no safer hands to whom parents may commit the moral and intellectual training of their children. Long has Centenary been sending forth her streams of light in the solid piety and refinement of her cultivated sons and daughters. While proper attention is given to those embellishments and graces which prepare our children for the amenities of polite society, the great aim of Centenary is to give her pupils that thorough cultivation of mind and heart by which they will not only appear, but shall really be qualified for the positions to which life's duties may call them.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., Jan. 3, 1874.

Modern Spiritualism.

MR. EDITOR: We see in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of June 19 that modern spiritualism has had a convention, and has organized itself into a working force; that it has its literature in the form of papers, tracts and books, and that it has an extensive circulation; that it is now in all the principal towns and cities, and is spreading all over the country. And here the question naturally arises in the minds of thinking men and women: What is modern spiritualism? After giving this question some thought, with all the light we have on the subject, we have come to the conclusion that modern spiritualism is modern witchcraft. We have arrived at this conclusion by comparing ancient witchcraft and modern spiritualism together. On comparison we trace the family likeness to the conclusion that they are twin sisters, and have the same father. Here the question may be asked: What is witchcraft? We answer: Witchcraft is the deceptive practices of witches and wizards to deceive the people and cheat them out of their money. But who is a witch? We answer: A witch is a woman who practices sorcery to charm the people. Well, but who is a wizard? We answer: A wizard is a man, a magician, a conjurer, a sorcerer. Jannes and Jambres, that withstood Moses, were wizards or magicians. Simon Magus, who used sorcery, and thereby bewitched all the people of Samaria, was a wizard. We read of these wizards and witches in every age of the world as being very wicked, directly opposed to God, and his government and people, and as being very barbarous and cruel in putting to death the true prophets of the Lord, and causing his people to become idolaters by worshiping Baal, an idol god.—See Second Kings ix, 22. Because of the gross wickedness of these witches and wizards, God decreed that they all should be put to death in the land of Israel. These wizards and witches in those days, by their lying wonders and doctrines of devils, bewitched the people so as to make them believe that they were supernatural beings by their false pretensions of working miracles. This they have professed to do in all ages of the world. But this is all fiction—a lie, a fabrication of falsehood, to deceive the people. None but God can work a miracle. The devil has great power to deceive the people, but he has not power to work a miracle. If God had allowed him this power he would have used it long before this time; he would have used it in the case of Elijah, the Tishbite, the prophet of the Lord, and the prophets of Baal. He would have used it in the case of Moses, the servant of God, and Jannes and Jambres, the Egyptian magicians. In both these important cases this matter was tested. Neither the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal nor the magicians of Egypt could work a miracle. No man or woman can work a miracle, unless God grants them the power to do it; and he never has nor never will grant this power to the devil or wicked men and women.

Here it may be asked: Did not God grant the witch of Endor this power when she raised Samuel? We answer that God raised Samuel, and not the witch of Endor, by her witchcraft; because it is stated that "when the woman saw Samuel she cried with a loud voice." She was greatly alarmed at the sight, not expecting such a thing at the time she saw Samuel, for it is not stated that she as yet had made any effort to raise Samuel from the dead. He came forth unexpected by her, and caused her to cry out with a loud voice. Therefore we conclude that God raised Samuel from the dead, and not the witch of Endor. However, if the witch of Endor had been divinely inspired she would have known King Saul when he came in disguise, and Samuel, too, when she saw him. She did not work a miracle. Nothing less than the power of God can work such a miracle as this. Satan worketh in the children of disobedience, but neither he nor they can work a miracle; none but God can do this. The devil and his children have tried for some six thousand years to make the people believe that they can work miracles, and are trying to make them believe it now; but they, with all their infernal agency and diabolical skill, have never been and never will be able to work one miracle.

We will now show that there is a similarity existing between modern spiritualism, so called, and ancient witchcraft. 1. Ancient witchcraft was opposed to God. So, likewise, is modern spiritualism, as one of their resolutions, unanimously adopted by their convention, shows. This resolution opposes the recognition of God's name in the Constitution of the United States of America.

2. Ancient witchcraft was opposed to God's people. So, likewise, is modern spiritualism. Modern spiritualism is not only opposed to Christ's people, but to Jesus Christ himself, which is proved by their speeches in their convention, and their refusing to adopt a resolution proposing the recognition of the name of Christ. We are informed by good authority that "a bitter antagonism to the Lord Jesus Christ characterized the speeches." "Many of the ideas paraded were better suited to infidel clubs and candidates for Botany Bay than for the people of a city in a Christian land. They talked with an audacity of wickedness proportionate to their weakness and ignorance." One of the clan announced that "no religion, from that of Confucius to that of Christ, sufficed for him. The blood of Christ had no power to keep him. Only an angel mother and a sainted daughter could work such a miracle."

3. Ancient witchcraft was opposed to God's law. Modern spiritualism is not only opposed to God's law, but also to all law, human and divine. This their speeches, a preamble and resolution, show. Hear the definition given by one of their chief speakers, a notorious woman of modern spiritualism: "The spirit of spiritualism is freedom." It is said "this speeches made were all rampant with the idea of liberty, which seemed to mean unrestrained license." Now hear the preamble and resolution adopted by them:

"Whereas, We believe that capital punishment is an evil, a relic of barbarism, is dangerous to society, is only legal murder, and fraught with a thousand other objections; therefore,

"Resolved, That we most heartily oppose its continuance as a law of the land."

Now this preamble and resolution show that this convention of spiritualists was opposed to God, the Bible and the Constitution of the United States—opposed to God because he instituted and ordained that this law of capital punishment should be enforced in all cases of witchcraft; and because he did this, this modern convention of spiritualists, in the preamble and resolution, virtually charges God with barbarism and legal murder. Opposed to the Bible because this law of capital punishment stands on record as the statute law of God, and was enforced against witchcraft in the days of the Jews. Opposed to the Constitution of the United States of America, because this despisable law of capital punishment is recorded there as the statute law of the land, and has been enforced against witchcraft in some of the Northern States; and what has been done may be done again. Hence their intense anxiety for capital punishment to cease to be a law of the land, lest it be put in force against them as an organization of wizards and witches. Don't you believe, Mr. Editor, that if all the witches and wizards that King Saul had put to death had been living, and had been members of that convention, they would all have voted for this preamble and resolution? I think they would.

4. Ancient witchcraft was composed of a body of ignorant, wicked, corrupt and idolatrous men and women. So, likewise, is modern spiritualism. "It has assumed the form of a religion, which attracts to its singular communion skeptics, infidels, sensualists, and the unstable and ignorant of every creed."

5. Ancient witchcraft pretended to work miracles, and by their lying wonders and doctrines of devils they deluded the people and made idolaters of them. So, likewise, does modern spiritualism. It professes to work miracles in its "phenomena of table rappings, writing mediums, planchette and the seances." By this kind of fiction they charm and delude many of the credulous and ignorant, and lead them astray into vice and all kinds of wickedness. "Left to work out its full and matured harvest of results, it would bring about a state of society as imbrated and as degraded as that of Sodom and Gomorrah, and make of our already sufficiently corrupt society a complete hell."

JAMES SHANKS.

Anno Domini.

It was a noble thought, nay, it seemed like an inspiration of an humble Roman abbot, of Scythian birth, who, in the middle of the sixth century, changed the mode of reckoning the confused chronology of the world by dating all history backward and forward from the birth of Christ. The idea of "the little monk," Dionysius Exiguus—so called either from his small stature or from his humility—was speedily adopted by the scholars, divines and authorities of Christendom, and in less than a century was almost universally adopted. Thus the old method of marking time by Jewish, Greek and Roman reckonings passed away. Hence the Christian era is known among chronologists as the Dionysian era. The error of the learned monk was in placing the birth of our Lord four years too late. But his grand conception not only relieved chronology of many perplexing entanglements of cycles, periods, eras, each having its own center, but it gave a tangible form to the truth that Jesus Christ is himself the turning-point of this world's destinies. It indicates that Christianity had already become the ruling religion of Europe, and that Christ was so exalted among the nations that there was none to dispute his dominion over all time and history. The adoption of that new era shows that then his name was above every name, and that it was written deeper than the most enduring monumental inscriptions upon brass or marble, in the records of every rolling year.

We have become so accustomed to the phrase, "the year of our Lord," that it scarcely awakens a question as to its origin, date and meaning. Only the worst atheism the world has ever known has once tried to abolish it. But it would not stay abolished, even in revolutionary France. It soon came back again with resistless power. And so long as this fact remains it will tell the world that the government has been laid upon the shoulder of the Child of Bethlehem. There seems to be also a providential propriety in the near connection of Christmas with the end of the old year and the beginning of the new year. The Advent binds the years together by their indissoluble relations to him who is the central personage of all human history, and who, as the Lord of all the centuries, controls their course. To use the eloquent words of Jean Paul Richter: "He who was the holiest among the mighty, and the mightiest among the holy, has lifted with his pierced hand empires off their hinges, has turned the stream of centuries out of its channel, and still governs the ages.—Christian Intelligencer.

Obituaries.

DIED, on the first of January, 1874, at the residence of John Moseley, in Dallas county, Bro. J. W. PURIFOY.

Bro. Purifoy had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church South for a number of years—an humble follower of Jesus, one whose faith in God was too strong to be shaken by a gainsaying world. During his last illness, while suffering intensely, he was often heard to say: "Bless the Lord, O my soul." A short time before his death he said he wanted to live a few more years to take care of his little motherless children. He then raised his eyes toward heaven and exclaimed: "Thy will be done." We feel grateful because we have evidences to believe that he has gone "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." A FRIEND.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At the first Quarterly Conference for Tallahatta circuit, Selma district, Alabama Conference, on motion a committee of three was appointed to prepare and forward to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, for publication, a tribute of respect to the memory of JOHN R. COX, a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and for many years a faithful steward of Tallahatta church. The committee submit the following report:

Whereas, It hath pleased almighty God to remove from this world our beloved brother and co-laborer in our Master's vineyard; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore, we nevertheless humbly submit to that dispensation of the divine wisdom and providence which has deprived this conference of one of its most efficient members, the church of one of its strongest pillars, the community of one in every way worthy of its highest respect and fullest confidence, gifted with morals that were pure, a spirit that was amiable, manners affable, a heart noble and generous, and a life blameless.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the family, so sadly bereaved by his death, and tender to them our condolence and prayers, commending them to the merciful compassion of him who hath appointed our bounds that we cannot pass. May he mightily sustain and graciously comfort them in the hour of their sorrow.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of the deceased and spread upon the minutes of this conference.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The committee appointed to prepare a tribute of respect to the memory of JOHN DILLON beg to present the following:

Death has again invaded our school, and our number for the last two Sabbaths is one less than heretofore. John Dillon, a member of Bible Class No. 2, is with us no more in bodily presence. His death was sudden, and the circumstances that led to it most tragical. By it we are again admonished that in the midst of life we are in death. On the day preceding the sad accident that proved fatal to him he was with us in his class, and attended all the services of the sanctuary, as usual. He was present at the preaching of the word in the morning; and when, in the afternoon prayer meeting of the young men, we bowed with him in prayer, and listened to the simple and earnest petition which he never failed to offer when called on in that social religious gathering, little did he or we suspect that his end was so near. But it is cause of rejoicing with us that though the messenger came so suddenly, he was in readiness. As he drew near his end the feelings of his soul manifested themselves in his earnest wish for religious communion with some of his friends and associates in the Sunday school and prayer meeting. Denied this craved privilege, he yet had with him the Friend that sticketh closer than a brother.

Mr. Dillon died far from home—from father and mother, and the friends of his childhood. Though years had passed since he had met the fond greetings of father and mother, yet in his last moments they were not forgotten, and he expressed a wish that, if possible, his mortal remains might be forwarded to them as his last and only token of affectionate remembrance.

The following resolutions are offered as expressive of our estimate of the deceased:

Resolved, That the tranquil, happy death of Mr. Dillon impresses us afresh with the value of Christian truth, and that it stimulates us anew to walk in the ways pointed out to us in the Sunday school; and while we are saddened at his sudden departure, we doubt not that he rests "under the shade of the trees" on the shore beyond where, by following his Christian example, we hope ultimately to meet the lost ones of cherished memory, with Christ as our great Teacher, and a happy eternity for the period of our tuition.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Dillon our school has lost one of its most ardent friends, and one of its most attentive, devoted pupils.

Resolved, That we tender to the parents of the deceased our sympathy in the affliction which has fallen upon them, and that the secretary be requested to forward to them a copy of the foregoing memorial and resolutions, and also to spread the same on the minutes of the school.

W. D. BROWN,
B. GOODMAN,
J. H. ROBERTSON, Committee.

(NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We cannot learn from the above obituary and resolutions what Sunday school is referred to, nor where the deceased died.)

RICHARD COOPER was born in the city of Savannah, Georgia, and died of consumption, at his residence in Brandon, Mississippi, on the fourth of January, 1874, in the fifty-sixth year of his age.

In his youth he came to Mississippi and spent the greater part of his life in the counties of Rankin and Smith. Without money and without the patronage of the rich, and with but little education, he resolved to qualify himself for the practice of the law. He improved his limited education by school-teaching, and read such elementary books as he could command, until by perseverance and industry he was qualified and received a license to practice in all the courts in the State. He was elected several times district attorney, in a district where the political party to which he belonged was in the minority. In that office he sustained himself well, and made quite a reputation for talent, though he had to meet in professional conflict the ablest and most gifted lawyers in the State, as his district embraced at that time the city of Jackson, whose bar was distinguished for ability and learning. In 1865 he was elected from Rankin county a member of the Constitutional Convention of Mississippi, and his course in that body, as it had ever been, was marked by conservatism.

He was grand master of the Grand Lodge of Mississippi, and was known throughout the State as a bright and zealous Mason.

He was kind-hearted and liberal, generous and forgiving. He seemed to think "the world was his home, and mankind his brotherhood." No man was more tolerant of the opinions of others, and no man had more charity for the errors of his fellow-man than he. Hence, after he ceased to be district attorney, he was sought for by defendants in criminal cases, who could easily excite his sympathies and feelings in their behalf, and most eloquently and ably would he defend the poor and persecuted, whether he received his fee or not.

In December, 1872, he was stricken down by disease, and was confined to his room most of the time until his death. Occasionally he was able to leave his home. Last summer he became convinced of sin, and the necessity of seeking forgiveness through the mediation of Jesus Christ. Bro. George F. Thompson visited him. He desired to be baptized and received into the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which was done by Bro. Thompson. The occasion was solemn and impressive; after which, with tears flowing down his cheeks, he said he felt that he had performed a duty he had long neglected. Bro. Thompson and others visited him afterward, and to all he said he had no fears of death. Dr. Kline, of the Presbyterian church, visited him the day before he died, to whom he said he "loved Jesus, who was his friend." On the day he died he told his wife, while she was sitting by him weeping, not to grieve for him, but to put her trust in God. He spoke calmly and quietly to all about his spiritual condition, and left the assurance upon the minds of all of his acceptance with God. He was fully aware of his physical condition, and said he prayed for strength and grace to bear his sufferings, which were great, with becoming patience. He retained his senses to the last, and recognized his friends who came to see him. At half-past six P. M. he breathed his last without a struggle. His remains were brought to the Methodist church, where Rev. Dr. Kline, of the Presbyterian church, read our burial service, with singing, and prayer, and made some well-timed and appropriate remarks (our pastor being absent.) Though the day was exceedingly inclement, many followed the remains to their last resting-place. May God comfort and protect his bereaved family. A FRIEND.

THE FOUNTAIN AND THE CISTERN.—Note the sharp contrast in the two objects of choice—God and the cistern. The fountain is created by God; the cistern, with slow and toilsome effort, hewed out by man.

Christ has wrought out a perfect righteousness. We have only to appropriate to ourselves his work as freely as the traveler stoops to the wayside fountain. On the everarching rock of the great fountain is graven the broad invitation: "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." Multitudes of thirsty wayfarers pass by this open fountain, and go about a long and weary circuit, perhaps of years, to establish a righteousness of their own. And when they have skirted the whole amphitheater of the mountain of Legalism, hewing out by prayer and penance, one broken cistern after another, are brought back to the forsaken fountain, and obtain in a moment what they have vainly sought for years—a full salvation.

The supply of the fountain is inexhaustible—that of the cistern limited. When the pilgrim has dipped up bucket after bucket from this mountain stream, it is still full to the rim—the bottom of the cistern is quickly reached.

ON ONE of the pages of the town records of Lanesboro, Massachusetts, in use a hundred years ago, there appears a large blot of ink. The town clerk of that period, evidently grieved at the unfortunate disfigurement, makes a long marginal note explaining how the page came to be blotted, and he sets forth at full length that he hung his ink-horn to a beam in the kitchen, where, owing to the coldness of the weather, the ink was frozen and the horn burst, and not only spoilt the page, but scattered ink upon his clothing and his face, making a mess generally. All the details of the disaster are written out, and no one can doubt after reading them that the worthy official, who prided himself on keeping his books clean and neat, was very much mortified by the accident, and wanted coming generations to understand that it was not through any fault or carelessness of his.

"THERE," said Jones, as he wrathfully pushed away the pie which his landlady had just served him, "that stuff isn't fit for a pig to eat, and I ain't going to eat it!"

BY THE SEA.

Slowly, steadily, under the moon,
Swings the tide, in its old-time way;
Never too late, and never too soon—
Aod the evening and morning make the day.

Slowly, steadily, over the sands,
And over the rocks, to fall and flow,
Aod this wave has toocbed a dead man's haods,
And that one has seen a face we know.

They have borne the good ship on her way,
Or buried her deep from love and light;
And yet, as they sink at our feet to-day,
Ah, who shall interpret their message aright?

For their separate voices of grief and cheer
Are blooding at last in one solemn tone;
And only this song of the waves I hear:
"Forever aod ever His will is done!"

Slowly, steadily, to and fro,
Swings our life in its weary way;
Now at its ebb, and now at its flow—
And the evening and morning make the day.

Sorrow and happiness, peace and strife,
Fear and rejoicing, its moments know—
How, from the discords of such a life,
Can the clear music of heaven flow?

Yet to the ear of God it swells,
And to the blessed round the throne,
Sweeter than chimes of Sabbath bells—
"Forever and ever His will is done!"

A Sermon by Hyacinthe.

BY REV. LEONARD WOOLSEY BACON.

I can hardly give you a better idea of the pace at which the "Catholic Reformatioa," as they call it, is going forward in this part of Switzerland than by an account of my last Sunday morning's churehgoing. It was at Chene, a large village three miles to the east of Geneva, accessible by horse car, or, as tho phrase goes in Europe, "by American railway." And the occasion of the service was this: Chene is a Catholic village, and the cure of it was sammoned last week by the cantonal authorities to take the recently prescribed oath of fidelity to the laws. Inasmuch as one of the laws is that which has just bcea denounced by the Pope as null and veid (not to repeat other adjectives still more emphatic)—the "law for the orgaaization of Catholic worship," which gives each Catholic parish the right to elect its own pastor—naturally and consistently enough the cure declined. The constancy with which the total Romanist clergy of this canton have declined, without one defection, is greatly to the praise of their discipline, even if you are willing to concede it no higher honor. The laity, however, are not so obedient. No sooner had the priest signified his refusal to continue his functions under the new law than some of the leading Catholics of the village, without waiting for an election, resolved to invite Father Hyacinthe to say mass in the church on the very next Sunday, and the Catholic mayor of the commune himself presented the address.

I got there a few minutes before church-time. Never did a sleepy little Swiss village look wider awake than Chene did that Sunday morning. There were heads at all windows looking to see who would go to church; for, according to the priest and the Pope both, to go to church that day was equivalent to going to perditioa. The neighbors came down to the street doors, and talked it over in their queer caps and bodices. And crowds of little street boys approached within a safe distance of the church door, and listened to the discussions going on among the groups of peasants in blouses. I owed the priest something for his maledictioa, for it secured me a choice of seats. Soon the church began to fill up, however, with people of every imaginable class, down to the roughest shock-headed peasant; and soon after Father Hyacinthe moved up the aisle from the sacristy to the altar, bearing the chalice and the paten, the blouses from oatside began to dribble in, until the aisles were choked.

I have told you before of the translation and publication of the liturgy in French. It is the hope of the new clergy that soon the people will learn to join orally, with hearty responses, in the service. Bnt at present the only audible participation is by the priest aud his assistant. Not knowing French, yon would hardly have recognized anything to distinguish this service from an ordinary Romish mass. Bat this being finished, the celebraat laid off the vestments, stiff and splendid with embroidery, and in a plain white robe, with scarf crossed upon the breast, was conducted through the crowded aisle to the pulpit, which stands in the middle of one side of the church, under a sounding-board.

The sermon was not brilliant—as the preacher remarked afterward, he only talked. But what sort of a talk Hyacinthe would make in explaining his work for the first time to a church full of villagers is just what you would like to know.

"My brethren," he began, in a quiet, colloquial tone, "you know in what circumstances I am here this morning. This church was abandoned. Its worship had ceased. Yonder tabernacle-lamp, the symbol of perpetual adoration, had been extinguished. Your magistrates and the Parish Council thought it not best that the village should remain smitten with interdict, deprived of all the offices of religion; and they have invited me to celebrate the reformed Catholic worship. The lamp burns once more—may it never fail again. The mysteries of the holy sacrifice are renewed at your altars. In the congregation of the righteous is heard the voice of joy and praise.

"It is charged against us that we are doing a work of division, of destruction and of hatred in the Catholic Church. On the contrary, the work of destruction and division has been done already by those who have changed the doctrine of the church through new and false dogmas—by those assembled Bishops who revolutionized the constitution of the church by abdicating all their own functions into the hands of the Pope, and so left the church without an episcopate. It is these who are doing the work of hate—pursuing us with maledictions and anathemas. Our work is one of reconstruction, to build up the church again upon its ancient foundations, so long buried out of sight by superincumbent rubbish. It seeks not to divide, but to reunite those Christians in the East and in the West long alienated from the Catholic communion. It answers hate with love, and insult and cursing with benedictions. This is the Catholic Reformation.

"Now there are two opposite complaints made against this movement. From one side I am told: 'You are going too far. You are laying your hand on things which are of great importance—the worship of the church, the order and discipline of its clergy, and its relation to the State.' From the other side I have the complaint: 'You are not doing your whole duty. You are not purifying the dogmas of the church.' Now these two criticisms answer each other aud vindicate us. The doctrine of the church—the old dogma as you have just heard it from the altar in the creed of Nice—is invariable. Renounce this, and you are not Reformed Catholics, for you are not Catholics at all. I do not speak of the superfetations of new doctrine that have been added to the old—of dogmas that are not dogmas. These ought to be cleared away. And so soon as we shall have among us a Swiss bishop to call together the synod of Swiss Catholic clergy and churches, it will be one of their first duties to separate between the genuine, primitive dogma of the church and these modern inventions and corruptions.

"The reform which we have begun is not of the doctrine of the church; but of its corrupted discipline. And the first two points which we approach are those which have a most close and painful relation to the morals of the family and of society. 1. Obligatory confession. Not that the ear of the pastor and his heart will not be constantly open to the willing confidences of his flock, and his mouth ready with godly counsels, but that henceforth the priest shall not be an inquisitor, professionally trained to the work of extracting the secrets of families or governments; of extorting from the hands of the parent the direction of his family. He shall not be suffered (as too often happens) to contaminate the mind of youth with corrupting questions." (There was a solemn silence among the congregation as these things were said; and one or two men in blouses got up and left the church, making a little noise at the door as they went.) 2. Enforced celibacy of the clergy. The attempt had been made, the preacher said, to shut his mouth on this subject by pointing to his own marriage, and imputing to him anworthy motives. He refused to be silenced by any such attack on the most honorable act of his life. He had nothing to say against that voluntary celibacy of which he had so often spoken in praise, and in which some of the best and happiest years of his life had been spent. So long as celibacy was free, willing, joyous, it was a life well pleasing to God by as much as it permitted more complete self-sacrifice and devotion. When it ceased to be voluntary it grew into a galling yoke, hurtful to the man himself, and to the society in the midst of which he lived. Among the Catholic churches of the East, under the distinct sanction of the Pope, the celibacy of the clergy was a matter of free choice. There the unmarried priests were of the monastic orders, gathered in convents; but the confessors and pastors, to whom the people loved to go for sympathy and counsel, were husbands and fathers like themselves. And then followed a picture of the married pastor—the model husband, father and citizen. 3. The election of pastors by the people. This change, like the preceding, is no novelty; it is simply a return to the old freedom of the church—the inauguration into its old place of dignity and authority of what St. Cyprian, the famous Bishop of Carthage, calls "the majesty of the Christian people." 4. "And the final act of reformation, which has this day been begun among you, how shall I define it? Let me call it the liberating of the church in its relations with God. Why should not the Christian people be allowed to worship God in their own mother tongue? It is said that the Latin and the Greek are noble languages—these modern tongues are vulgar. Nay, these three grand languages of Switzerland—the German, the Italian and the French—let no man dare deny that these, too, are noble. What God has cleansed that let not man call common! Down with this wanton barrier, and let every man speak to God, in the worship of the church, in the language which his mother taught him! The liturgy of the church is that by which man speaks to God. The Bible is that by which God speaks to man. An open liturgy in every man's hand; an open Bible, in his own tongue, in every man's house—that he may judge for himself whether the words taught him are in accordance with those of Christ and his apostles—these are the means which we propose for reopening the long-blockaded intercourse between man and God."

This was the gist of the sermon. It was listened to with profound attention and respect; and after it was concluded the people stood gazing around the church door and at all neighboring windows to see the reformer as he drove off in his carriage. That day three weeks comes the election of new cures in Chene and in the other great villages of Carouge and Lancy, in the neighborhood. The new cures will, of course, be of the "Reformed" school.

Elsewhere in French Switzerland the work goes on at a like pace. In the Bernese Jura, out of twenty-eight Catholic parishes, fifteen or sixteen are already reorganized, with reformed pastors of their own choice, and four others are just about to be. There is no lack of candidates—men in good standing in the priesthood; and it is expected that all the parishes will soon be supplied. The new priests have been uniformly received, of course, with abuse and insult on the part of the Ultramontane devotees, but with cordial welcome from the best part of the people. Their churches are full of worshipers, and one of the most violently calumniated, the cure of the village of Porrentruy, is said to have a class of catechumens numbering seventy-five children.

A fortnight ago Father Hyacinthe accepted an invitation to Neufchatel, and to the great Catholic village of Chaux-de-Fonds. The congregations to hear him were immense, and the leading men in the Catholic churches themselves signified their sympathy with his work, and sought advice about securing a change of administration in their parishes.—Christian Union.

PETIT SACONNEX, GENEVA, Dec. 10, 1873.

The Mother of Agassiz.

Although it was raining, our friends took us to the residence of this venerable lady in the family of her son. Although nearly fourscore, her healthful person was erect, tall and dignified, while her animated and warm address placed us instantly at ease. On learning that two American gentlemen and a lady had called, she felt at once convinced that they were friends of her son Louis. As soon as we explained to her our intimacy with him—that he had been often a guest in our families—that we had the pleasure of knowing his American wife; and when we added a friendly notice of her son's domestic happiness, and of his high standing and success in his adopted country, her strong frame was agitated, her voice trembled with emotion, and the flowing tears told the story of a mother's heart, not yet chilled by age.

A beautiful group of lovely grandchildren was gathered arouud to see and hear the strangers from a far-distant land, beyond the great ocean. When we inquired of Madam Agassiz her entire number of grandchildren, she replied fifteen; and when she was informed that my whole number exceeded hers, she was both amused and surprised, and smiles of sympathy succeeded to tears; for she had considered me—from my being still an active traveler—a younger man than I am. She is the widow of a Protestant clergyman, who was the father of Agassiz. She has a vigorous mind, speaks with great spirit, and is a mother worthy of such a son. She was grieved when she heard that our stay was very brief, and would hardly be denied that we should become guests at her house, or, at least, that the senior of the party should accept her hospitality. The next morning she came, walking alone, a long distance in the rain, to bid us farewell, and parted evidently with deep emotion, and not concealed; for we had brought the image of her favorite son near to her mental vision again. She brought for Mrs. Silliman a little bouquet of pansies, and bid as tell her son her pensees were all for him.—Prof. Silliman.

THE DECISIVE MOMENT.—God says: "Repent."

The sinner answers: "I mean to."

"Believe."

"Yes, I intend to."

"Prepare to meet thy God."

"Such is my purpose."

"Turn ye, for why will you die?"

"I intend to turn before the hour of death."

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

"Yes, I believe that is the best way, and I intend to be zealous for God some time."

"Now is the accepted time."

"No, not now."

"To-day is the day of salvation."

"No, not to-day; I must attend to other concerns to-day."

"Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

"But to-morrow will do as well, or next month, or next year."

"To-day, if ye hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

"Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season I will call for thee."

Thus does God invite, beseech and command, and thus do men hesitate, temporize and delay till all is lost.

Here is the fatal error. Men perish because they will not have salvation to-day. They are doomed and damned because they defer that which they dare not reject.

They postpone, they wait, they neglect. Alas! "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Reader, you want salvation, you intend to have it. I have one question for you to consider, and that is: When?

PRAYER AND ITS EFFECT.—Dr. Hamilton narrates the following as symbolic of the effect of prayer: "Among the forms of insect life there is a little creature known to naturalists which can gather around itself a sufficiency of atmospheric air, and, so clothed upon, it descends into the bottom of the pool, and you may see the little diver moving about dry and at his ease, protected by his crystal vesture, though the water all round and above be stagnant and bitter. Prayer is such a protector—a transparent vestare, the world sees it not; a real defense; it keeps out the world. By means of it the believer can gather so much of heavenly atmosphere around him, and with it descend into the putrid depths of this contaminating world, that for a season no evil will touch him; and he knows when to ascend for a new supply. Communion with God kept Daniel pure in Babylon."

THE first brick house built in Boston, which was also most probably the first one in Massachusetts, was built in 1638, by a Mr. Coddington. In 1700 Boston contained about one thousand houses and ten thousand people.

THE whole number of horses in the United States is estimated at nearly nine million, representing the value of $700,000,000 or $800,000,000.

THE following sentence of only thirty-four letters contains all the letters in the alphabet: "John quickly extemporized five tow bags."

A LITTLE GIRL was once asked the following question: "What is faith?" She replied: "Doing God's will and asking no questions."

Scientific.

XENOPHANES, who flourished between 540 and 500 B. C., is the first of whom any notice is left who distinctly noted those curious phenomena in the crust of the earth's surface indicative of an early disturbed state of the globe, which have grown up into the modern science of geology. The passage occurs in his review of the opinions of the Greek philosophers, and he says that "shells and the prints of fishes and marine animals were found in the rocks of Syracuse, Malta and Paros; and this was evidently the result of a revolution of the earth's surface, when everything was swathed in mud, and the living creatures of the sea left the impressions of their bodies in the soft beds, which afterward became dry."

AN UNHEALTHY HOUSE.—A dark house is always an unhealthy house, always an ill-aired house, always a dirty house. Want of light stops growth, and promotes scrofula, rickets, etc., among children. People lose their health in a dark house, and, if they get ill, they cannot get well again in it. Three, out of many negligences and ignorances in managing the health of houses generally, I will here mention as specimens. First, that the female head in charge of any building does not think it necessary to visit every hole and corner of it every day. Second, that it is not considered essential to air, to sun and clean rooms, while uninhabited. Third, that one window is considered enough to air a room.—Florence Nightingale.

DR. RANSOME, in his investigations into the subject of organic matter in the breath, comes to the following conclusion: The total amount of organic matter passing out of the lungs in the space of twenty-four hours, the subject being in a state of health, is about three grains. In disease the organic matter varies considerably; in health it is tolerably constant in quantity. On the other hand, the quantity of free ammonia in the breath is very variable, even in healthy subjects. One of the most interesting results given by Dr. Ransome is the fact that a large quantity of organic nitrogenous matter is thrown off by the lungs in kidney diseases, especially in Bright's disease. A deficiency of organic matter was observed in cases of catarrh, measles and diphtheria.

FOR TESTING the strength of building materials a machine has recently been devised, which is said to accomplish the purpose easily and with perfect success. It is a platform scale set in a table, and so arranged with hand-wheel and gearing as to produce a pressure upon the platform. This pressure is transmitted in the usual manner, by levers on knife edges, to the scale beam. By an ingenious contrivance the poise upon the scale beam, instead of being moved by hand as the pressure is applied, is made to travel by a clock movement, stopping automatically when reaching the point on the beam which represents the pressure upon the platform, thus indicating truly the highest pressure attained. This method is a great improvement, manifestly, on that hitherto in vogue.

ROWLAND HILL once gave some curious traits of the wretched ignorance of a population of nailers in a central district of England with which he was acquainted. A clergyman, who exerted himself to effect an improvement, took particular care to get their children baptized. One day, having come to baptize a newly-born infant, whom he understood to be a boy, he asked what name he should give the child. The father was quite at a loss—had no predilections on the subject. "Shall it be a Scripture name?" "Yes." "Well, what Scripture name?" The man agreed, at the minister's suggestion, that Benjamin would do. As he was retiring afterward he heard a great shouting, and, turning back, met the father, who exclaimed: "Sir, it wanna do—it mann be done again—the bairn's a wench!"

BISHOP GEORGE would never have his portrait taken. "If I were to," he said, "it would be engraved and hung in some good brother's parlor, and by and by the good brother would fail in business or die, and his effects would be put up for public sale, and the voluble auctioneer would come across me in a pile of household trumpery, and, as he held me suspended by thumb and finger, he would cry: 'Now, gentlemen, here's your chance! your only chance! perhaps your last chance! to buy a Bishop! How much am I bid for a Bishop? Twelve and a half cents for a Bishop! only a York shilling for a Methodist Bishop! Do I hear any more? Going! going! gone! Only twelve and a half cents—dog cheap—for a Methodist Bishop!'"

MR. PRINCE, who had often heard Jonathan Edwards preach, and observed the remarkable conviction which attended his ministry, describes, in his "Christian History," his manner of preaching. "He was a preacher," says he, "of a low and moderate voice, a natural delivery, and without any agitation of body, or anything else in the manner to attract attention, except his habitual and great solemnity, looking and speaking as in the presence of God, and with a weighty sense of the matter delivered."

A MAN who had missed his way fortunately overtook a boy going with a pot of tar to mark his master's sheep. He asked him the road to Banff, but was directed by so many turnings, right and left, that he agreed to take the boy behind him on his horse. Finding the boy pert and docile, he gave him some wholesome advice, adding occasionally: "Mark me well, my boy." "Yes, sir, I do." He repeated the injunction so often that the boy at last cried out: "I canna mark ye ony mair, as the tar has geen oot."

Religious Intelligence.

THERE are 20,000 Baptists in the State of Maine. The number is less by 400 than last year.

NINE HUNDRED and ninety-three missionaries were employed last year by the American Presbyterian Home Mission Board, at average salaries of $275.

DURING the forty-seven years of its history the total receipts of the American Home Missionary Society have been $6,500,000, and it has added 220,585 members to the churches.

THE Episcopalian seems to have fully committed itself to the Cummias movement, so that the Reformed Episcopal Church is sure of an organ, without the trouble and expense of founding one.

THE oldest church edifice in Boston is Christ church. It was built in 1723, one hundred and fifty years ago, and is standing on its original ground. Its anniversary was celebrated December 28.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH RENTALS.—The annual letting of pews in Henry Ward Beecher's church took place on Tuesday, the sixth instant, bringing in $59,430, or about $129 more than the previous year.

OLD CATHOLIC THEOLOGY.—Six students are now attending the theological lectures of the faculty at Bonn, which is now a faculty of Old Catholic theology, as all the professors have joined that body.

THE Universalists in this country have nine hundred and fifty churches, five colleges, eight seminaries and two theological schools. The Interior thinks this a vast amount of energy to expend, since all will be saved any way.

THE Central Presbyterian says of the missionaries of the Presbyterian Church (South) in Brazil: "We have letters from Campinas, dated November 18, at which time the mission families were in usual health, and busily engaged in their various duties. The college building is progressing rapidly, and both schools are flourishing."

NEW POPE.—It is reported that the College of Cardinals have been asked by the Pope to name their choice for his successor, and that they have selected by a considerable majority the Archbishop of Perugia, Cardinal Pecci, and it is stated that he will undoubtedly be the next Pope. He is called an Ultramontane, but is of a conciliatory spirit.

THE Cumberland Presbyterians make a fine showing of progress in Missouri. From one presbytery, McGee, organized in 1820, with western Illinois, the whole of Kansas and Missouri included in its bounds, and with only four preachers in all that territory, they now have in this State 3 synods, 12 presbyteries, and about 18,000 members in communion. There are 160 ordained ministers, 48 licentiates and 44 candidates. The value of the church property is $260,000, divided among the three synods as follows: Missouri Synod, $102,000; McAdow Synod, $93,460; Ozark Synod, $65,000. Contributions by the church for all purposes, during one year, $65,000.

A BERLIN telegram to the London Daily Telegraph says: "The government has absolutely resolved to abstain from any interference with the inner ecclesiastical organization of the dioceses during their struggle with the Romish Church, and to confine its action to rigorously repelling any encroachments of the Bishops upon State rights. Existing prescriptions respecting the administration of dioceses when bishopries are vacant will serve for cases in which prelates shall be turned out by the government. These dioceses left without a head will be administered by a general vicar, who will, in his turn, be deposed should he not comply with the letter of the statutes. The government is quite aware that these measures will superinduce an inconceivable confusion in diocesan administration; but it hopes thereby to compel the clergy to compliance with the law. The new form of oath of allegiance to be subscribed to by the future-appointed Bishops is framed in terms binding the subscriber to absolute submission to the State, and it is officially assumed that the Vatican will not permit episcopal candidates to take it. This assumption will be tested by the approaching filling up of the Falda vacancy. The Rhenish and Westphalian Bishops are canvassing for the imperial Parliament, and they will certainly be elected. The government, however, is entirely indifferent with regard to this manœuver."

ROMAN CATHOLIC.—An encyclical letter of the Pope, dated November 21, appears in the latest foreign papers. In it Pius the Ninth, as usual, deplores the melancholy condition of the church, discusses church affairs in Switzerland and Germany; calls Bishop Reinkens "a pseudo bishop," a certain notorious apostate from the Catholic faith," and excommunicates him and all who took part "in his election and sacrilegious consecration." The Pope adds: "From the facts, to which we have referred in brief rather than at large, you are well assured, venerable brethren, how grave and full of danger is the condition of Catholics in those countries of Europe which we have mentioned. Neither are matters more favorable or the times more peaceful in America, where some countries are so hostile to Catholics that their governments seem rather to deny in deeds than to profess the Catholic faith. Some of you may perhaps be surprised, venerable brethren, that the war which is carried on at this time against the Catholic Church extends so far and wide. But whosoever is acquainted with the character, the aims and the purposes of the sects—be they Free Masons or by whatever name they are known—and compares them with the character and extent of the strife, which throughout nearly the whole world is waged against the church, cannot hesitate to assign the cause of our present calamities to the craft and conspiracy of the same sects. From them is made up the synagogue of satan, which is marshaling its forces an preparing to engage hand to han against the church of Christ."

THE ZENANA MISSIONS.—Mrs Tracy writes from Futteghur, India an interesting account of the success attending the zenana work. She says: "I think zenana work is the most interesting and encouraging of all departments of labor. We seem to get nearer to the people, to find out more of their inner life, than in any other way. We sit down on their charpoys (bedsteads) close beside them, and we learn to know each member of the family. It is not like preaching to them, nor even the relation of teacher and scholar, but it is more like that of one friend visiting another. They tell us of their troubles, and this furnishes us with the best of openings for talking to them of him who is the burden-bearer of his people. Many times have I heard them exclaim: 'That is just what we want; I have offered many prayers to our gods, but they never gave me any comfort.' You can well imagine how hope rises in our hearts when we hear such expressions; but, alas! too often do we find, on a second visit, that our words have been forgotten; the seed had fallen on stony ground, and though, 'forthwith they sprang up, because they had no deepness of earth,' yet 'when the sun was up they were scorched, and because they had no root they withered away.' Or, it may be, they were more like the wayside hearers—the seed never really took root, but, hoping to win our favor, and, it may be, thinking to gain something for themselves by so doing, they seem to give our words a heart-welcome. Yet we have much encouragement in the very fact that they are willing to receive our visits and listen to us at all."

A "MISSIONARY EVENT" of great significance and importance has just taken place in Japan. Two elders of the native churches in Yeddo and Yokohama recently set out on a tour through the province of Kadzusa, which lies between the Gulf of Yeddo and the Pacific ocean. At many places they preached to the people, explaining the Christian faith and doctrines, and expounding the Scriptures to audiences of from one dozen to four hundred persons. In all their course they were unhindered either by the people, priests or officials. These elders' names were Ogawa and Okuno. They avoided the large towns, where they knew the people to be unusually bigoted, and exercised prudence always; but did not shun to preach the whole truth as they knew it in the gospels. In many places they were invited and urged to come again. In one village they found a man who had once obtained a tract containing the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and a brief outline of Christian doctrine. This man had read and studied the tract, and had for a long time called upon the name of the true God, and had kept up daily prayer to God through Christ for several years. He was overjoyed at hearing these two fellow-countrymen of his preaching fully the truth, of which he longed to know much more. The preaching tour of the two elders lasted three weeks, and on their return the native brethren called on them to recount what they had done; after which they kept a jubilee of praise to God and prayer for greater blessings, that God's word might have free course throughout all Japan. It greatly encouraged the young men now in the native church, who look forward to the time when they shall go out as preachers and evangelists in their native land. At least a dozen young native Christians have signified their intentions of becoming preachers, and the missionaries of Yokohama are already discussing the question of how best to organize and maintain a theological training school for the native missionary in Japan.—Independent.

A SINGULAR and we trust an auspicious event occurred on Sunday September 28, in the village of S Giovanni del Dosso, in the provin of Mantua, Italy. By some means the Roman Catholic people of that village had become convinced that the people had formerly the right to elect their own priests, and that that right ought to be restored to them; and they had determined not to wait for its restoration, but to take it into their own hands. Accordingly they assembled at the church and proceeded to the election. The vote was unanimous for the priest Giovanni Lonardi, a man "who, by his gentle disposition, his moral life and his thoroughly religious views, had acquired the love and esteem of all the parishioners." Out of a population of 1,500 there were 207 ballots cast. After the election a notification was sent to the mayor, accompanied by a written justification of the course taken, which is thus summarized in the English Independent: "There are, they affirmed, according to the law of the land, two acts concerned in the election of a parish priest—the one civil, the other religious. The former concerns the people over whom the priest is to be placed, and the other the episcopal authority. We ask, said they, for a return to the discipline of the primitive church, and that all should render to Cæsar what belongs to Cæsar and to God what belongs to God. In conclusion they confidently recommended their cause to the synodic; but assured him that of one thing they were determined—either Don G. Lonardi should be their priest or they would have none." The case will, no doubt, have political complications. The Roman Catholic hierarchy will by no means consent to such an assumption of power on the part of congregations; and, if the example of this little church should be widely followed, the government may be called to decide whether it will stand by the hierarchy or the people. At all events, it is cheering to see, from this and other tokens, that Cavour's grand idea of a free Church in a free State is beginning to make its way among the Italian people. If our voice could reach Father Lonardi, we would congratulate him upon his unanimous call, and would assure him that, according to our lights, the practice of his parish is very good Congregationalism.—Independent.

Something to be Careful About.

It is in connection with justification by grace, and "not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us," that Paul urges carefulness about good works. "That they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works." Possibly the abuse of the doctrine of justification by faith was apprehended, and that, while dwelling joyously on salvation by grace, there was anticipation of negligence touching the active side of the Christian life. No doubt this perversion is more prevalent than is generally imagined, and is the cause of that indifference to religious work which many Christians exhibit. The fact may not always be clear to themselves. Uppermost in their own thoughts are the preoccupations of business, want of gifts and opportunities, and an exaggerated estimate of the little they are doing. Some have arrived at a state of habitual inaction, and are seldom much exercised about their relations and duties to the world without. If they were impressed with the idea that, in order to be justified and to be saved they must hunt up work in the line of religion and charity, they would be seeking and calling for employment, instead of avoiding it.

Perhaps no believer formulates this error; he would shrink from the statement of it even to himself, and yet he does not work because salvation is by grace through faith. Whatever may be the case in the doctrinal symbols and confessions of the churches, and in the preaching and writing of the day, there is a practical antinomianism which largely obtains, and is fatal to personal industry and effort. Carefulness to maintain good works is therefore urged in connection with justification and heirship through grace, that the abuse might be anticipated and properly guarded. The warning is against drifting into an indolent and slack discipleship, and to save from a fatal distortion the most vital of all gospel teachings. When we consider the love and zeal which conversion is supposed to implant, it would seem unnecessary to exhort them who have believed in God to be careful to maintain good works. And yet this is the class to whom the message is sent. We might suppose that faith would lead to works, and that a regenerated soul would be forward to do something for the Redeemer. How can they who have felt a Savior's love help working? Against this presumption, or a priori conclusion, we have only to reflect how almost useless and inert most professors of religion are, and how little real work for Christ is done by thousands who seem to enjoy spiritual comfort; and are persuaded of their acceptance with God.

From the emphasis of the occasional mention it would seem that a working Christian, or a working church, is rather the exception. This man is a working Christian, this church is noted for its working membership. Such commendation is high, and attracts attention because it is not often deserved. What we should look for in every believer is occasionally realized in a few. The love which can hardly be absent in any genuine Christian, does not in all cases exhibit an active consecration, nor bring forth this peculiar fruit. There is abundant reason for carefulness therefore. [illegible]ould be affirmed constantly in the ears of the young converts. It is this that they are to mind especially. To this end is their first love to be directed, and in this channel is their ardor to be guided. And for those of longer experience, without this carefulness an indolent and selfish type of religion will be developed, or, what is likely in many instances, there will be loss of grace and final shipwreck. We may not harshly condemn those whom the Lord shall judge, but we fear that there are many who are deceiving themselves. They have believed in God, but their faith has become dead; and because of negligence in maintaining good works, they have lost the life and power of their earlier experience. They have not been careful on this point, whatever attention they have given to others, and the result is a wretchedly meager attainment in usefulness, and a fearfully lean condition of soul.

No man is likely to maintain good works without carefulness. This must be his study, the object of his meditations, thoughts and plans, and the burden of prayer. There will be many influences to hinder, and temptations innumerable to laziness. The flesh will oppose—business, health and want of favoring conditions; and conscience, with all the other opiates, will not allow us to forget that, after all, it is "not of works, lest any man should boast." For the maintenance of good works carefulness is absolutely needed. Without conviction of the necessity of work, and the implied vigilance to improve the time and the opportunity, the religious character will become a misshapen and fruitless abortion. It is the capital fault of many, perhaps the most of believers, that they are not careful to maintain good works. Herein they are spasmodic, indifferent, or, at least, without plan or purpose. They do not seek work, they do not count it a mercy to have it, they do not volunteer for the outposts, nor push their way where Christ is beckoning them to enter.

We do not here indicate what Christians are to do, but rather would we press the command: "That they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works." With so much sin and suffering around them, with churches to sustain, Sunday schools to support and missions to spread everywhere, there can be no lack of opportunity. The main thing is to feel our personal accountability, to realize the peril of idleness to our own souls, and to be careful to make good works the subject of prayerful thought and earnest study. He who is careful in this will rarely be at a loss for something to do, but he will rather wonder that any should fail to see the fields, white to the harvest, which stretch away from his own threshold to the remotest provinces of the earth. Careless believer, awake! You are careful and troubled about many things—about the fortune you are aiming to make, about your food, raiment and position in the world, and somewhat careful, it may be, about your soul. But have you passed over this inspired word: "That they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works?"

Note from Bishop Keener.

STEAMER FRANKFURT,
Mississippi River, Jan. 18, 1874.

On board; steam up. I have for traveling companions Bishop Simpson and lady, and Mr. McCreary, of Philadelphia. The prospect of getting off on yesterday morning was very dim; but I have all my life only stepped into open doors, and so the Lord opened the way—General Grant, the Governor and two consuls being called into requisition. The gun has just fired. The Lord be with all at home!

All the appointments on this vessel are admirable. It is thoroughly clean in the cabin and about decks, and presents a marked contrast to the Tabasco, which I now recall, with its narrow quarters and steaming messes of codfish and sweet oil, with onions and garlic for flavor. We are now, while I write, plowing our way down the river, with but little disturbance from the engines.

We shall be, they say, two and a half days getting to Havana, and there we expect to meet the English mail line from St. Thomas to Vera Cruz, which leaves Havana for that port not earlier than the twenty-second of each month and not later than the twenty-fourth. I was informed yesterday that there will certainly be a line of steamers between New Orleans and Vera Cruz in a few weeks. This would make the trip to Mexico a matter of four days. Then Mexico will be only the next circuit outside of Calcasieu. Indeed one at sea is very much like Bro. Parvin in the midst of the big Calcasieu prairie, with a guide whose knowledge had run out. It is easier now to go to China than to make the round of the Manny mission, and when the streams and bayous are well up the danger by water is not much greater. The Lord has narrowed the world amazingly since the days of Mr. Wesley, and one trip of Dr. Coke to America and back was fully equal to a passage round the world in these days of steam and railroads. The greatest strain on the laborer in foreign fields is the absence of his own kin and people. He is thrown on his own resources and his Savior. Faith then becomes a necessity to comfort. What communion he ought to have with his God, and no doubt does have! faith for himself and faith for those that sent him.

I forgot to say that just before leaving I received a letter from Bro. Daves, dated at Vera Cruz. He had a somewhat rough passage; though to one born far up on land any uneasiness of the sea seems stormy. Then he had a French opera troupe, which crowded the steamer from Havana to Vera Cruz. But he was well, and just about to take the cars, at three in the morning, for the City of Mexico. Evidently things in general were overwhelming his pen when he wrote, and he was getting ready for much newspaper utterance.

Friends will please not expect answers to letters, which probably came to hand just on the instant of my starting. When I return, which will be in six weeks, they shall have attention. Yours truly, K.

Letter from Mexico.

VERA CRUZ, December 29, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: We reached this port about noon yesterday (Sunday,) all in health and good spirits. It was by dint of constant effort only that even a preacher could know that it was the holy Sabbath. There seemed to be a special desire and united effort on the part of every one to make you forget it. It is Christmas week, and the town is in holiday garb. Stores of all sorts and sizes, booths and sidewalk shops, presented in strongest emphasis their several attractions. Throngs pass up and down, coming and going, buying here, gambling there, drinking, smoking, etc., presenting a strange scene to the beholder. In gloomy silence, looking down upon this seething mass of wickedness, stands the rock-built, hoary-looking cathedral. Comment is not necessary.

I had heard and read much of Vera Cruz, but had formed a very imperfect idea of its appearance. To one with only American ideas of architecture, cities, etc., it is difficult to convey, however perfect the description, anything like a correct notion of the reality. The town is old. It does not carry its age particularly well, for it looks old. It is inclosed by a low stone wall, and is as large now as it was one hundred and fifty years ago. I suppose it is literally true that the youngest house in the town proper is a century and a half old. You see houses on every side full of years, if not of honors. Some old, old churches and convents, in many instances with broken walls, and partly crushed-in roofs, that look hoary with antiquity. The streets are narrow. So also the sidewalks. They are cleaned regularly every few hours by the chain-gang, assisted by a numerous colony of buzzards. One would think that all the carion crows of the republic of Mexico had settled permanently in Vera Cruz. So far as their particular article of diet is concerned, they are watchful, faithful city scavengers. I suppose they are protected by law. No one disturbs them in their daily toil. The sewers, unlike our cities, are in the center of the streets. Here the filth and offal accumulates. When a choice bit is found a troop of these birds collect around it, and fight and fuss over it, en Americano, fearless of men or animals. The dogs have even learned to respect this city officer. The domes and high towers of cathedrals, and high points on ordinary houses, afford them sleeping apartments. These places are literally blackened with their occupants.

To change to a more agreeable subject. I wish I could paint for you the glories of a tropical morning. I never before realized what was meant by balminess and softness of atmosphere. The light comes quickly—almost with a rush—yet comes shod in velvet. Only now and then the rumble of a Mexican cart is heard. Nothing like drays, floats or carriages are to be seen. Hence the sweet and varying melody of tropical birds floats into your apartments on the delicious morning air. I had sensations this morning, on throwing open my window, that are indescribable. Our apartments, "Hotel Dillagencias," look out toward the gulf. Faint and mellow was the sound of its awakening. More like the measured breathing of an infant, with eyes half open, than as a harbinger of a giant in his strength. The plaza is just across the street and immediately under our window. Beautiful circling walks, stone-paved and smooth, run to the center. Fountains, with suggestive marble figures, mermaids, etc., were busy sending forth their jets. Rich, heavy green shrubbery and grasses, interspersed with odorous flowers, lined the walks. Tropical trees, fresh and beautiful, with strange-looking singing birds, furnish a dense central shade, with the sunlight struggling through here and there. Altogether making up a picture, to me, as strange as beautiful.

But I must not dwell here. It would be pleasant to me, and doubtless gratifying to personal friends, for my letter to contain particulars. These, in part, must be relegated to private correspondence.

I will now go back to the beginning. We took passage on the good ship Juniata, running from New Orleans to Philadelphia, via Havana. She left your wharf at eight o'clock on Friday morning, the nineteenth instant. We had a pleasant run down the river, passed over the bar and out into the "deep, heaving sea" some time before night. I took notes of river scenery, incidents, etc., intending to write you at length from Havana. Our stay there, however, was brief. I must now reduce to a paragraph the substance of a long letter. Our surroundings on shipboard were very pleasant. Captain Catherine, in addition to being an experienced, able seaman, is very much of a gentleman. The unpleasant brusqueness so often found in public officers has no place in him. Kind and considerate, every effort was made to render his guests comfortable.

One of the most significant articles of furniture in the cabin of an ocean steamer is a large, half-round, open-faced, frank-looking tin vessel, suspended by hooks, to each berth. The green landsman will give them a long, steady stare, and involuntarily place his hand a little above the center of gravity. They are significant and impressively prophetic. More, they are tenderly inviting and an inspiration to sea-sickness. We had but few passengers. Very soon a good state of feeling existed. A sea voyage breaks down the conventionalities of polite society, in a measure, and the vestibule—an authorized introduction—to an acquaintance is not needed. Among the passengers was Mr. Chun Laisun, of Shanghai, China. Although in the peculiar Chinese garb, queue, etc., I found him to be a cultivated Christian gentleman. He speaks English with wonderful fluency. He was educated in the United States, graduating at Hamilton College in his twenty-first year. He returned and remained in China twenty-five years. He was sent back to the United States in September, 1872, in charge of one hundred and twenty Chinese youths—the superintendent of "The Chinese Educational Mission." An appropriation of $1,500,000 to this mission has been made by his government. It is conducted by one chief commissioner, one deputy commissioner, one interpreter and two Chinese professors. Mr. Chun Laisun expressed the opinion that it was the beginning of better days, religiously, for China. He spoke kindly, almost affectionately, of our missionaries in China—knows them personally; also their predecessors. He seemed to think that a great work could be done, and seemed surprised that we did not have a larger number of men there. I have spoken thus at length of this gentleman and his enterprise, as bearing somewhat upon our missionary work.

Also among the passengers was Mr. F. W. Warner, of New York, en route for Mexico. Mr. Warner is the New York agent of foreign trade of the New American Sewing Machine Company. I found in this gentleman an agreeable companion. He was as anxious to learn Spanish as myself, so we were mutually aided in our studies. He has an agency well established in Havana, and proposes one in Vera Cruz, and also in Mexico. He will succeed. A union of Western muscle and Yankee enterprise, as in this case, will accomplish wonders.

We dropped anchor, under Moro Castle, about eight o'clock on Sunday evening—out from New Orleans sixty hours. The weather was pleasant, though rough enough to produce a great deal of sea-sickness. Old Neptune's sacrificial cups were frequently and freely patronized—not by your correspondent, however. I desired to tell you something of sea sights—flying fish, Portuguese men-of-war, white-capped, foaming billows, sunrise and sunset scenes—but must refrain now. Nor can I stop to tell you of Moro Castle, of Havana, its narrow streets and narrower sidewalks, of its strange-looking houses and people, of its official flummery, foolishness and vexatious delays. All this—more than enough for a long letter—we must pass by. The harbor is splendid—water deep and space large. Just in front of the customhouse, at anchor, rests, innocent and harmless-looking, El Toruado, the captor of the Virginius. She is a fine-looking ship. Vessels of many nations find anchorage here. Beautiful little passenger boats glide here and there, going under sail and oar. It costs fifty cents for each passenger to get from his vessel to shore, and then, if he has anything with guides and officials, just about all he has; or, as they say in America, these fellows seize his pile and take it. Bishop Keener's letters prepared me for this one thing: that a Spaniard never charges, or seems to expect anything, and yet there are no people who expect more. Our guide charged nothing, yet $5 (gold) for half a day's work did not more than satisfy him.

We were in port but a little while, on Monday morning, when the royal mail steamer Elder, bound for Vera Cruz, came to anchor near us. At an early hour we were transferred to the Elder. To pass over many things of interest, the Elder weighed anchor about noon on Tuesday, the twenty-third instant. She is a large ship, with passenger capacity for two hundred and fifty. In addition to the ordinary travel, which is limited, was added this trip Madam Amee's French opera troupe. This crowd did not increase the pleasure of the trip particularly. The fare from Havana to Vera Cruz is $40 gold. From New Orleans to Havana $35 currency. The distance between the latter places is about six hundred miles, and between the former eight hundred miles. The run from Havana to Vera Cruz was long and tedious—from Tuesday noon until Sunday noon, five full days. The weather was very unfavorable—could not have been much worse. A three days' "norther," quite common to this coast, brought out all the resources of old ocean. The waves, mountain high, white-capped and angry, would dash against the sides of the ship, and break away again, mingling with kindred waves with a moan, as if ashamed of their own impotence. Then, gathering renewed vigor, came back with increased impetuosity to the attack, and with a mocking laugh of triumph break over guard and deck, sweeping all before it. I have read much of prose and poetry, and heard men talk of the grandeur and sublimity of the ocean. I have seen language exhausted in descriptions of a storm at sea—of its raging fierceness, of its merciless anger. But to see is to know. Who can appreciate a fine painting, in which the genius of man culminates, or sublime and picturesque sceneery, in which seemingly the resources of the infinite are exhausted, through the dry medium of description? The grandeur and glory, weight, power and dominion of the Almighty is here manifest in all its fulness. I never tired looking out upon the waters—the changing, yet ever the same high-rolling waves. There was no monotony to me. Each wave was a sweet-measured poem, and yet the very incarnation of fierce anger, carrying in its white caps the demon of destruction. Notwithstanding all this storm and rough sea, I was strangely exempted from the customary tribute so inexorably demanded by old Neptune. In other words, I was not sea-sick. Mrs. Daves and Master Walter, however, did full duty in this line. The result, in one particular, was that I became an adept in baby-nursing, as the entire charge of baby Joel was on my hands. I feel that I can now take my degree with honor and retire from the business.

Well, the longest stories have a finale. We were preserved and safely delivered. I never before realized the solidity of terra firma so fully. It is true I stepped out of the transfer boat, on a foreign shore, surrounded by strange-looking, curious people. Still, as I handed my wife and children to land, an involuntary offering of thanksgiving went up from my heart to the great Father for his goodness and preserving care.

To-morrow morning we expect to leave, by rail, for Mexico. From there I will write you again. Allow me to send greetings to our many personal friends, and to the church at large. Affectionately, JOEL T. DAVES.

EDITORIAL ACCESSION.—Since the session of the Texas Conference, in December, the name of J. B. Walker, D. D., appears as associate editor of the Galveston Christian Advocate. With I. G. John and Dr. Walker for editors this paper is most fortunate. Dr. Walker is no tyro in journalistic writing, as our readers have good reason to know. He is ready, versatile; and always deals in practical and living themes. We wish our able confreres of Galveston abundant success. Their paper is always eagerly welcomed to our office and fireside. Its pages are always fresh and instructive, and should be read by every Methodist in Texas.

THE Michigan Christian Advocate is the name of a new paper published at Adrian, Michigan, in the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It is a four-page paper, issued monthly. O. Whitmore, publisher.

Vanderbilt University.

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF TRUST.

The board of trust of Vanderbilt University met in the First Methodist church, Memphis, on Wednesday morning, January 14, and continued in session three days, during which much important business received attention.

The board heard the report of the president, on the University grounds, buildings projected, progress of the work, schools to be organized, chairs to be filled, apparatus, library, etc.

The board fixed the second Wednesday in January as the day of opening the University, when three departments are to be inaugurated—the biblical department, the department of literature, science and philosophy, and the law department.

The following organization; reported by the committee appointed at the last meeting of the board, was adopted, viz.:

I.—BIBLICAL DEPARTMENT.

1. Systematic theology.
2. Hermeneutics—especially the critico-exegetical study of the Greek Testament.
3. Ecclesiastical history and church government.
4. Pastoral theology and homiletics.

II.—DEPARTMENT OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

1. School of English language and literature.
2. Latin language and literature.
3. Greek language and literature.
4. Modern languages and literature.
5. Oriental languages and literature.
6. Mathematics, pure and mixed.
7. Physics and astronomy.
8. Chemistry, theoretical and practical.
9. Natural history.
10. Applied mathematics and engineering.
11. Mental and moral philosophy.

III.—LAW DEPARTMENT.

This department is to consist of a dean and six professors. The executive committee received directions to take measures for the furtherance of this interest, and report to the next meeting of the board.

IV.—MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

This department will be organized with a dean and ten professors.

V.—NORMAL SCHOOL.

This department will be organized, but not until the department of literature, science and philosophy has been in operation a few years.

The board resolved to elect at this time two professors in the first, and three in the second department, their services being needed for the further and complete organization of the University, for gathering apparatus and library, and for the interior arrangement of the building, laboratory, etc. Action in filling other chairs was postponed until the next meeting of the board.

The election of professors took place on the third day of the session, with the following result, viz.:

Thomas O. Summers, D. D., LL. D., to the chair of systematic theology.

A. M. Shipp, D. D., to the chair of hermeneutics, etc.

L. C. Garland, LL. D., to the chair of physics and astronomy.

J. C. Wills, D. D., to the chair of mathematics.

N. T. Lupton, A. M., to the chair of chemistry.—Western Methodist.

THE SOUTHERN PUBLISHING HOUSE CLAIM.—At the Methodist Episcopal Preachers' Meeting on Monday morning last, at No. 122 Fayette street, Rev. Mr. Abbey, agent of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Publishing House, Nashville, Tennessee, was introduced, and after a brief speech solicited the ministers present to interest themselves in behalf of claims, amounting to nearly $500,000, which said agent is prosecuting against the general government for damages done to said Publishing House during the late civil war. Bishop Ames, being present, made a short address, expressing a willingness to lend his influence in bringing these claims before Congress for proper investigation, and, if sustained by the proper facts, he hoped justice would be done to a sister church. The Bishop and a large number of ministers appended their names to a petition, asking Congress to make an investigation of the aforesaid claims.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

WE FIND the following reference to a beloved minister, formerly a resident of Louisiana, in the St. Louis Christian Advocate of January 21. Bro. Chapman will have the prayers and sympathy of his friends and brethren of the South in his afflictions.

Rev. M. B. Chapman, of St. Joseph, and a member of the Missouri Conference, has been in this city several days, at St. Luke's Hospital, where his leg was amputated last week by Dr. Hodgen. It will be gratifying to the many friends of this faithful young minister to know that he is doing well, and the doctor thinks he is in a fair way to recover permanently. The leg was amputated just above the ankle, and will not permanently impair his usefulness.

MATTERS AT SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA.—Dr. Fitzgerald writes to the Pacific Methodist, January 16, as follows:

The present term of our college opens well. Last week one hundred and seventy-four names were enrolled. This is the largest beginning yet made. The professors seem full of energy. The students seem healthy, hopeful and happy.

We have had ten accessions to the church since Conference. Three of these were students and members of our Sunday school. There seems to be a growing religious interest among our young people.

Prof. Roberts, our new teacher of modern languages, will be at his post this week.

THERE never was a mask so gay but some tears were shed behind it.

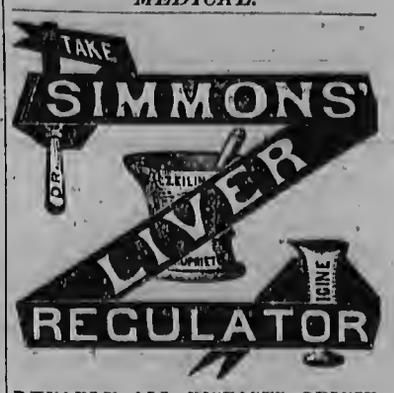
MEDICAL.



NEARLY ALL DISEASES ORIGINATE from Indigestion and Torpidity of the Liver, and relief is always anxiously sought after. If the Liver is Regulated in its action health is almost invariably secured. Want of action in the Liver causes Headache, Constipation, Jaundice, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough, Chills, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Depression of Spirits, or the Blues, and a hundred other symptoms, for which SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR is the best remedy that has ever been discovered. It acts mildly, effectually, and, being a simple vegetable compound, can do no injury in any quantities that it may be taken. It is harmless in every way; it has been used for 10 years, and hundreds of the good and great from all parts of the country will vouch for its being the purest and best.

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR

OR MEDICINE

Is harmless,
Is no drastic, violent medicine,
Is sure to cure if taken regularly,
Is no intoxicating beverage,
Is a faultless family medicine,
Is the cheapest medicine in the world,
Is given with safety and the happiest results to the most delicate infant,
Does not interfere with business,
Does not disarrange the system,
Takes the place of Quinine and Bitters of every kind,
Contains the simplest and best remedies.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder-humor). He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of boils.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful cries to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Raw and Inflamed,

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

THE MEDICAL DISCOVERY

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful. As no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly,

DONALD KENNEDY.

Price, $1.50 per bottle. For sale by all druggists.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY and STRENGTHEN

At One and the Same Time.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is which purifies the blood and removes all corrupt humor and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or taste-state whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a strengthening purgative and a purifying tonic.

DR. TUTT'S PILLS are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping or debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

IMPORTANT

ANNOUNCEMENT.

In 1871 I invented and secured letters-patent for an Improvement in Wash-Boilers, a simple arrangement by which steam was applied to the washing of clothing. I have heretofore sold this under the name of

STEAM WASHER,

OR

Woman's Friend,

for such it is in fact. I have advertised it in nearly every Religious Newspaper in the United States and Canada, also in the leading secular papers, using page and double-page advertisements. The readers of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE may remember seeing my Card in the various papers of the country during the past year. Extracts from letters received from my customers, also from the press, in another column, will indicate how it has been received by the people and press throughout the country.

FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND have been sold already. It is sufficient for my purpose to say that I am satisfied that nothing heretofore advertised ever rendered so general satisfaction. Yet THIS, my first invention, was not quite perfect. And for the last two years I have applied myself to the study of constructing and perfecting a and as the result of my efforts I feel every assurance that I have been entirely successful. My patented in 1873, is absolutely faultless; so much so that I never knew a single person, who has seen it work, fail to be delighted with it. It has rendered, thus far,

NEW STEAM WASHER

NEW STEAM WASHER,

Perfect and Universal Satisfaction, and such must be the result, for it works like a WONDER, never failing to do all claimed for it.

In conclusion let me say that should any one say that he has seen a STEAM WASHER, ask him if he has seen the new of 1873, now being advertised so extensively in whole-page and double-page advertisements. If he answers in the negative, request him to suspend judgment until a sample can be procured and fully tested. I will send one as just half the retail price—and I fully warrant it. After a person buys a sample he can get them of me at cost.

STEAM WASHER

A SAMPLE FOR $5,

$60 Profit Can be Made on a Single Dozen, and I have known Agents to take orders for

A DOZEN IN AN HOUR.

There is no way to make money faster. Send for a sample, and secure your territory. Make money while you can.

A CARD!

Please read this "CARD" carefully. If you do not wish to become interested yourself, have you not some friend you can refer me to who would likely be benefited by my proposals?

READER:

Please calculate the cost of my two-page advertisement in the

"CHRISTIAN UNION."

It consists of 1,480 lines. At regular rates it amounted to $1,750

EACH INSERTION!

I repeated this "Card" November 19, because my first insertion (October 8) paid me

500 PER CENT.

During the last eighteen months I have inserted my advertisement, occupying one to two pages, in

Hundreds of First-Class Papers, all of which paid well for the outlay; but the Christian Union ("the largest circulation of any religious paper in the world") pays me better than any. I mention this fact, for all can see how extensively I advertise my Invention; and taking into consideration the fact that I sell it

ENTIRELY ON ITS MERITS,

all must concede that it sells well, for no article will sell well enough to pay for so expensive advertising

WITHOUT REAL MERITS.

If I can get a sample introduced into a neighborhood, it often sells

AN HUNDRED MORE.

Such a splendid chance to make money selling this invention may never occur again.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING!

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

It Saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-Day.

IT WILL DO THE WASHING OF THE FAMILY

WHILE YOU ARE

EATING BREAKFAST AND DOING UP DISHES.

STEAM HAS LONG BEEN KNOWN AS THE MOST POWERFUL AGENT IN removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Papermakers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the filthiest pickings from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying steam directly to the clothing which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

It is Truly a Labor and Clothes-Saving Invention.

READ THE FOLLOWING

CIRCULAR AND TESTIMONIALS.

I respectfully ask you to read this circular carefully, and candidly consider what I now propose to you as a matter of business. Before making known to you my confidential terms, permit me to state that the matter of washing clothes is one of no small consideration. It is something which concerns every family and every individual. It is but recently since Hand-Washing was in common use. Latterly, however, the inventive genius of the country has been directed to the invention and construction of various devices of machinery by which much of the labor, drudgery, loss of time and wear of material might be obviated. Ponderous as well as intricate Washing Machines have been constructed, many of which are decided improvements over the old method of washing, and these machines have been very valuable with all. People will continue to have Washing Machines; but, let me ask you, If the STEAM WASHER can be constructed for a few dollars (much less than an ordinary Washing Machine), and enable all to wash by steam, without labor, loss of time, without wearing of clothing, etc., $ it not reasonable to suppose that it will supersede, in a great measure, all Washing Machines now in common use? It is new, and every family needs it and will buy it. I wish to secure a few good men to sell rights for me, and in order to secure as many as I need immediately I offer extra inducements. My price for territory is $9 for 1500 inhabitants; but if you will buy a single county, and agree to sell rights for me, I will allow you to deduct sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. as your commission; consequently your county would cost you but $75, instead of $225, should it contain but 25,000 inhabitants; more or less in the same proportion.

And to those buying rights I will sell Washers at nearly cost; and to those not buying rights I will sell Washers at $60 per dozen; and, bear in mind, I will sell to no one, except a single dozen, until he first buys the right to a county. Any thinner can make the Washers as well as they can be made here, and save the cost of transportation. Remember that by purchasing the right of a single county, you shall have the privilege of selling any county or State for me, and upon application I will forward the deed to you by express for any territory which you have sold for me; providing that the said territory is not already sold when I receive your order. I will make all the deeds, so that there can be no confusion or mistakes. The amount you will have to pay me is simply $3 per 1,000 inhabitants in any county or State. I shall make these very liberal offers for a short time only, after which I shall sell at my regular price—$9 per 1,000.

Many of my patrons have requested me to suggest to them the best method of selling the WOMAN'S FRIEND in order to make the most money in the shortest time possible. In reply I would say that there are many methods which might be suggested, all of which seem to work well, but the most prominent of which I will suggest. In the first place, send for a sample and carefully test it. You will learn by a single trial how to wash with it most successfully. All you have to do now is to exhibit to others. I will suggest that you make an engagement to wash at a certain place at an appointed hour; arrange to have as many present as possible. You will be astonished at the intense excitement it will produce; after the water and steam have rushed through the tubes and foamed over the clothing, rushing back through the clothing to the lower bottom, to be suddenly returned again in the same manner—say for thirty minutes; you take out the clothing, rinse and wring out, and find the clothing perfectly clean. You will find all perfectly delighted with it.

You can take orders from nine to ten present, to be filled afterward, at $10 each. A single trial in this manner will satisfy you that the WOMAN'S FRIEND is a success, and will sell. Still another way, which is sure to succeed nine times in ten: After you have secured a sample, and know just what it will do, you can approach almost any one who has any inclination at all to engage in any business of this kind, and readily stipulate with him to take a Washer, or even buy a county, if it will perform all claimed for it. You will succeed ninety-nine times in a hundred in making the Washer perform to his satisfaction. You should in that case lose no time in ordering a new deed for your county, to be sent by express C. O. D., if not convenient to advance the money. You should meantime continue to take orders, and by the time your deed would come to hand you might have a gross sold. You should likewise arrange with a responsible tinner to make the Washers. The price will vary, according to style and finish. I have known some agents to sell as many as twenty Washers in a day. After you have introduced it more or less in your county, you can take another county, and rest assured that wherever you can get a single Washer in the neighborhood it will sell many more. Consequently, after you have sold a few hundred in a county, you can sell the right of your county for much more than at the start. You can calculate what your gains will be by buying a single county; but this is not a tenth part of what you ought to make, for while you are traveling you will meet with many men who want to make money, to whom you can sell rights. There is no business you can engage in which offers such splendid inducements. Besides, it is a safe business—no loss—and pleasant, because it renders perfect satisfaction. I cannot see how I can propose better terms. Should I allow my patrons to make their own terms, I scarcely believe they could make better terms for themselves and make more money.

On the receipt of FIVE DOLLARS I will ship you a complete Washer, as a sample, together with a Certificate of Agency, with full instructions how to conduct the business; and upon the receipt of the Washer you may have time to test it, and if you find it not as represented I will refund your money. The Washer retails at $10. After I send you a sample I will hold your county a reasonable time for you to decide whether you wish to purchase or not. I will furnish blank deeds, also blank contracts for taking orders, and will do all I can to enable you to succeed in the business. Let me hear from you soon, or your choice of territory may be sold to some one else.

ADDRESS,

J. C. TILTON, PITTSBURG, PA.

DIRECTIONS.

1. Soak the clothes over night in warm suds—in the usual manner.
2. Put in the bottom of the washer a quarter bar of good soap, or enough to make a good suds, sliced up thin; then fasten down the false bottom—see that the center valve is in the proper position; put in water enough to cover the cup over the valve, say about an inch; lay the clothes down smoothly, with the soiled parts well soaped, in the washer—not rolled up, but spread out, so the water can circulate freely—and carefully pack the clothes down; see that the fire is sufficiently hot to generate steam; when the water boils it will begin to flow up the tubes on the outside, at the ends of the Washer, and through the holes into the Washer again; after a steady circulation has been going on in this manner for thirty or forty minutes the washing will be completed. Rinse well and wring out same as in usual way. Colored clothes must not be mixed with white. Use soft water for boiling always. If hard, use soda, lye, or make it soft in any other way.

If it is desired to bleach with the Washer, this may be done by adding a tablespoonful of borax of commerce to a washer full of clothing.

ST. MARY'S, Auglaize Co., Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Having used your Steam Washer for over four months, we are prepared to recommend it to the public as far the cheapest and easiest method of washing that we have ever met with. We have tested it thoroughly, washing very dirty clothing in it, and know it will do all that you claim for it. We have never had to rub a single article on the wash-board that has been washed in the Steam Washer since we have had it; hence there is a great expense saved in the wearing of clothing. We could not do without it.

REV. J. JACKSON AND WIFE.

COMFORT, Kendall Co., Tex., Feb. 10, 1872.

J. C. TILTON, ESQ.—Dear Sir: The sample Washer which I ordered arrived in due time. All who have seen it in operation are well pleased with it. It will do all that you claim for it. You will please send, C. O. D., deeds for the additional counties ordered, and oblige, very respectfully,

JOSEPH B. HADDEN.

FEBRUARY 10, 1872.

MR. J. C. TILTON—Dear Sir: The Washer came to hand; accept my thanks for your promptitude. I am glad to acknowledge it all you recommend. Several have come to see it used; all acknowledge it a perfect success. I write to order a deed to Simpson county, North Carolina. Please send C. O. D. Direct to

ELDER B. JACKSON,
Fayetteville, N. C.

HENDERSON, Kentucky.

DEAR SIR: The Washer came duly to hand. Accept my thanks for your promptitude. I am glad to acknowledge it all you recommended. I have spoken of it to numbers who desire me to order one for them. Several have come to see it tried; all acknowledge it a perfect success. I write to order a deed to Henderson county, Kentucky. I would send the money now, but fear some one else has the right by this time. Send C. O. D.

REV. B. T. TAYLOR.

SHAMOKIN, Northumberland Co., Pa., May 21, 1872.

MR. J. C. TILTON—Sir: I received the Steam Washer on the nineteenth instant. Thanks to you for your promptness. My wife has tried it, and it gives full satisfaction. I make haste to order a deed for my county, Northumberland is my first choice; next Montour; third, Columbia. I send you $10, and balance C. O. D. in thirty days. Please send me a list of any other adjoining counties not sold.

Respectfully yours, MOORE FURMAN.

FRENCH CAMP, Choctaw, Miss., May 14, 1873.

MR. J. C. TILTON—Dear Sir: Please find $125, P. O. money orders, $90 of which take in payment for twenty-four Steam Washers, twelve copper bottoms. For the remainder send me the deed to Choctaw and Winston counties. Balance C. O. D. Order express agent to hold deed thirty days. I live out in the country, thirty-four miles from any express office.

S. W. ASTON.

WALTON, KY., May 13, 1873.

J. C. TILTON, ESQ.—Dear Sir: I send you this day, per Adams' Express, money to pay for one dozen Steam Washers—$54 for Washers and $10 to pay part on the deed to Boone and Gallatin counties. I expect to order largely from you, and also expect to sell many county rights. The Washers are taking well here. I did not get to do much after receiving the sample until this week, but I am pushing ahead now, and I think I will meet with good success. Hurrah for the Steam Washer! You will hear from me again shortly. J. W. CONNER.

The above are a few extracts from letters received. I can publish hundreds of letters from parties who have the STEAM WASHER and speak in its praise. I have thus far declined doing so. I know full well how Certificates are looked upon. I have sold the STEAM WASHER upon its own merits. Thousands have used it, and it has given universal satisfaction throughout the country. I ask none to rely on what I say, or the commentaries of others, but let the Washer stand on its own merits. I would not ask any one to engage in the business of selling Washers or rights unless he has thoroughly tested its work; and to enable all to do so, I send a sample Washer upon the receipt of $5 (about half the retail price) and guarantee that, if not found as represented, I will refund the money. So there is little risk to begin with. I have advertised extensively in first-class papers. I refer you to the American Agriculturist, May, 1873, New York Tribune, Harper's Weekly, Cincinnati Times, Toledo Blade, etc. I also refer you to my double-page advertisement in the Christian Union, October 8, 1873, the largest circulation of any religious paper in the world (costing nearly $2,000 each insertion.) Also the New York Independent, October 30, 1873, and all the leading papers of the religious press. I shall likewise continue to advertise, using double-column and double-pages. The largest advertisements in this or any other country. Of course my former patrons who have bought territory, as well as those who may hereafter engage in the business, will be benefited proportionally. I am convinced that the STEAM WASHER will be used in every family.

A Few Extracts from the Press.

Our readers will be grateful for the room given to the advertisement this week of the famous Steam Washer of Mr. Tilton. We are prepared to recommend this invention as all the advertiser and manufacturer claims for it, and every family should order one at once. It saves woman's toil and thus saves her life. It more than pays for itself in a very short time by the saving of fabrics, that by the old process of washing were worn out more than by actual service. The washing has been hitherto a greater wear and tear upon garments than the wearing itself. The new Steam Washer secures a clear gain to all who use it. The advertiser, Mr. Tilton, is a thoroughly reliable gentleman, and will perform all he promises.—Methodist Recorder, Pittsburg, Pa.

200,000 SOLD.

This does not probably represent one-fifth of the real number of Tilton's Washing Machines that have been sold. The press everywhere gives testimony that Mr. Tilton's Woman's Friend is the best made or yet invented. Said a neighbor the other day: "There is no doubt about it. Tilton's machine takes away the drudgery of washing, and makes clean work with the clothes. I pity the family that is without it." There are over seven millions of families in the United States to be supplied with this great blessing—over seven millions that need and want this machine. Mr. Tilton makes offers to those who are in earnest, who are not lazy, and who are willing to take hold with him, and who have a small capital, to aid him in supplying these seven million families with his Woman's Friend. His offers are simple and plain, and very liberal and without risk. Our cities, our villages, our country headquarters are full of men who need work. To all these Mr. Tilton offers plenty of work and good pay, and we earnestly urge all to write or go to Mr. Tilton, find out his terms, and begin business at once. See his big advertisement in another place. Mr. Tilton is honest and reliable, and the statements in his advertisement can be relied on.—Christian Standard, Cincinnati, Ohio.

TO THE INVENTIVE GENIUS

of this age is due the progress of our present high state of civilization as much as to all other forces combined. All industrial pursuits were prosecuted in a primitive form and manner. Muscles were the reliance for mechanical labors pursued, and a man's or woman's value was based upon the strength of these. Brain force has changed all this in the multiplication of substitutes for muscle force, and such is the extent of ingenuity in this department that it is now estimated that more work can now be accomplished by one-tenth of the population of the earth in one year than could have been done by the whole world in the same time two hundred years ago. Every class of industry has felt the influence of genius. Agriculture, manufactures and commerce have been stimulated into wonderful activity by it. Nor has the household been overlooked, nor the labors of women neglected. The sewing machine is an example of what ingenuity has done for woman. It has multiplied her power a hundred-fold with the needle. The washing of wearing apparel and other textile fabrics by mechanism has been a problem that has employed the skill of the country, and without success, until J. C. Tilton, of Pittsburg, struck a principle of manipulation that is destined to supersede all other machines, and do away with all washboards. Howe has made his name immortal through the needle, and Tilton, in like manner, will perpetuate his through an instrument no less important. Tilton's machine is simple, and may be managed by a child twelve years old. Mr. Tilton's advertisement is but a modest exhibition of the operation and rapidity of this unique instrument for the family. It is one of those productions that carries itself into every family by its own merits, which captivates and elicits the admiration of every person who examines it. Mr. J. C. Tilton is a perfectly reliable man, and will do just what he promises in his advertisement.—Religious Telescope, Dayton, Ohio.

Read the editorial published in the Pittsburg Advance. (Write the editor and send for a copy.)

"We would not knowingly lend ourselves to practice on our readers a deception; but after having thoroughly tested TILTON'S STEAM WASHER the wife says: 'Too much cannot be said in its praise. It not only requires a less quantity of soap than the old method, but it is a wonderful saving of hard, slavish labor over the wash-tub—the clothes, when coming out of the boiler, with only a little rinsing, thoroughly washed and fit to hang on the line.' She further says: 'I would not dispose of mine for five times its cost, if I could not procure another; or, knowing its merits as I do, were there no other way, I would deprive myself of some article of apparel, or the family of some necessary to procure one.'

"These statements are made after repeated trials of one of these Washers, and their truthfulness may be relied on.

"The principle on which the STEAM WASHER is gotten up will commend itself, as soon as understood, to every thinking mind. It is so very simple that the wonder is that it has not been discovered before. We rejoice for the relief which this invention will afford those who have to perform that essential part of domestic labor—washing."

AGENTS WANTED TO ENGAGE IN A permanent, lucrative and respectable business. None but energetic and responsible persons need apply.
A. COYLE,
oc23 6m 419 North Sixth street, St. Louis, Mo.

FROM A RECENT ANALYSIS BY Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Yale College, the following table will show the chemical composition of YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN:

Albuminoids	12.45	Sugar	13.06
Gum	5.21	Starch	53.82
Fat	8.59	Cellulose	2.96
Ash	2.12

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, gluten, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. These, says Youmans, "are the flesh-forming principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable to all requiring a highly nutritious and at the same time easily assimilated diet, and hence is used as an article of daily consumption in climates which occasion rapid waste of the system. "Almost all Asiatics, Africans and (aboriginal) Americans use it as their chief nourishment."—Louis Figuier, in his work on the Vegetable World.

In Hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN all the nutritive qualities of the grain are preserved. The grain is cut from the ear and sealed in tin canisters with the rich juices (or milk) which exude from it, and is then sealed air-tight and the canister subjected to steam heat, which coagulates the albumen. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by this that all the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and the most nourishing article of food in the domain of nature placed within the reach of all.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

Soule's

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
The Commercial Athenæum of the South, corner Camp and Common streets (Story Building.) Mercantile and Banking offices are connected with this institution, daily lectures given, and all branches of a business education practically, scientifically and philosophically taught. An English Department for boys, twelve to eighteen years of age, is a special feature of this institution. French and Spanish are also taught.
GEO. SOULE, Principal.
N. B.—Soule's Philosophic Commercial and Exchange Calculator, 880 octavo pages, the great arithmetical work of the age, is for sale at the College office. ja22 1y

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.
The Spring session of this widely-known and popular institution begins on the Twenty-ninth of JANUARY next, and closes on the Seventeenth of June, which is Commencement day. In view of the present financial depression we now make this liberal offer:
FOR NINE HUNDRED DOLLARS, paid in advance, we will give, for one entire session of twenty weeks, to any student in the Collegiate, Scientific or Business course, his board at the Byars House (now reduced to $40 per month,) tuition, fuel, room-rent, washing, library and contingent fees. In the Preparatory Department the charges will be even less. Board at the Fulton House and in private families may be obtained at moderate though at somewhat more advanced rates. The advantages now offered here to those seeking thorough collegiate training and culture were never excelled in our previous history, as those best acquainted with the school will testify. If you desire more information write to

On Saturday the demand was good throughout the day, but mostly from buyers who claimed further concessions of ⅛c., which factors were unwilling to admit, although ready to make some concession in response to the decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool and 1-16@5-32c. in futures at New York. The sales during the morning were, nevertheless, to a fair extent, after which the movement exhibited more animation, resulting in a business of 5,050 bales. Low ordinary sold at 9@9⅛c., ordinary at 11c., strict ordinary at 12c., strict ordinary to good ordinary at 12⅛c., good ordinary at 13⅛c., strict good ordinary at 13⅞@14c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 14⅛c., low middling at 14⅝@14¾c., strict low middling at 15⅛@15⅜c., for fully fair, 8c. for prime, 8¼c. for strictly prime, 8⅝@8¾c. for choice, 11@11c. for yellow clarified, and 10¾@10¾c. for white clarified. MOLASSES.—The receipts on Saturday and Monday were confined to 1,011 bbls. and 353 half bbls., which were mostly sold at 45c. for cistern bottom, 50c. for good fermenting, 60c. for prime do., 52@57c. for fair not fermenting, 63c. for prime, and 66c. for strictly prime.

CORN.—On Tuesday 4,35) sacks sold at 77@78c. for white, 78c. for red mixed, and 80c. for yellow.

OATS.—On Tuesday 1,150 sacks sold at 56@57c., a small lot of choice commanding 58c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Tuesday 150 sacks, on the landing, brought $1.05 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—Mess has been offering at $16.25@16.50 ₱ bbl., with sales on Saturday and Monday continued to 150 bbls. mess, in four lots, at $16.25@16.50 ₱ bbl; 13 bbls. prime mess sold at $13.50, and 20 bbls. at $14 ₱ bbl. Mess is retailing at $16.75 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Saturday 150 casks sold, in lots, at 9¼@9¾c. for clear rib sides, and 9¾@9⅞c. for clear sides. On Monday 225 casks sold at 8⅝@8¾c. for shoulders, 9¾c. for clear rib sides, and 9¾@10c. for clear sides.

LARD.—On Tuesday 16 tierces kettle-rendered sold at 9c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 111@111¼ (against 111¾ at New York,) and closed at 111¼@111½ (against 111¾ at New York.)

Nothing has been reported in silver. Owing to the light supplies it is quoted at 108¾@109½ for American half dollars, and at the disproportionably high rates, compared with gold, of 108@110 for Mexican dollars.

The district stewards' meeting will be held at Arcadia, February 14 and 15. We would recommend and earnestly request that the stewards for each charge collect at least one-third of the preachers' salaries by the first quarterly meeting. It will be remembered that the preachers received but little over half their salaries up to Conference. The planters have now sold their cotton. Do not wait until the money has passed out of the country.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—James L. Smith, a detective officer from New Orleans, having made affidavit that, on information and belief, official documents belonging to the State of Louisiana, which had been stolen, were in the possession of the Hon. R. H. Marr, counsel for Gov. McEnery, procured a search warrant, and, assisted by two district officers, visited the residence of Mr. Marr this morning, but after a diligent search failed to find the papers.

GALVESTON, Jan. 28.—A News special from Austin states that in the caucus last night the friends of Mr. Reagan agreed to support Gen. Maxey, Reagan withdrawing in his favor.

In the joint session to-day the first ballot was: Maxey, 59; Throckmorton, 40; Randall, 13; Reagan, 1; Dan DeLary, 1. Gen. S. B. Maxey, getting more than one-half, was declared duly elected United States senator.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 28.—Ex-Chief Justice Thompson, of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, fell dead in the court-room this morning.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 30.—The annual convention of the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry will be held next Wednesday. Dudley W. Adams, president of the National Grange, has already arrived. The principal business of the convention will be the revision of the ritual and the perfecting of the organization of the grange. President Adams states there are between eleven and twelve thousand granges in this country, with nearly a million members. The session of the convention will probably be private.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 30.—The millers of this city lately sent sixty-three barrels of flour to the sufferers by grasshoppers in the southwestern counties. To-day they sent a hundred and ten barrels more. The suffering is very severe. The Legislature has appropriated $5,000 to the sufferers, and will probably loan them $25,000 on two and four years' time, without interest. The Eastern stockholders of the St. Paul and Sioux City railroad have contributed $1,500.

NEW YORK, Jan. 31.—It has been ascertained that in addition to the $50,000 in bonds, Alexander D. Hamilton, absconding treasurer of Jersey City, has also stolen $23,000 cash belonging to the tax account.

A dispatch from Havana, via Key West, says that the officials are depressed on account of war news from Spain.

Santander being the principal provision distributing point for Cuba, there was a general expectation that the captain general would declare the island in a state of siege and a heavy conscription of the creoles would follow. Two hundred thousand men were reported as necessary.

There are reports of an engagement near Puerto Principe, in which the Spaniards, under Balbella, were driven into the town of Gomez.

The troops at Manzanillo were disaffected because they remained five months without pay, and then received it in paper.

Prominent Cubans believe that if Don Carlos succeeds he will sell Cuba to the United States.

There is a strong Carlist element in Havana.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 1.—As a train on the Iron Mountain railroad, which left here at 9.45 this morning, came in sight of Gadshill station, 120 miles below this city, at 4.30 this evening, it was signaled to stop; the switch was turned and the train run in on the side track. As the train stopped Conductor Alford stepped off to ascertain what was the matter, when he was confronted by a man wearing a mask, a pistol placed to his head and he was marched off. The engineer, fireman, mail agent, express messenger and other train men were then seized by five masked and heavily-armed men, and placed under guard.

The robbers then went through the entire train, and took from the passengers about $2,000 and a large amount of jewelry. They also took from the Adams Express about $1,000, and rifled the mails. The robbers then left in a southerly direction, and after the release of the train-men the train started south.

WASHINGTON, February 3.—Major Howell, who for some time has had charge of the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi river, has made his report to General Humphreys regarding the Fort St. Philip ship canal. His report has been submitted to a board of engineer officers of the army, who have returned it with a favorable indorsement.

The plan which requires jetties at the natural mouth of the river is not approved.

The report will show that the canal will furnish permanent deep water from the outlet from the Mississippi, and enable commerce to avoid towing at exorbitant exactions and irregularities. The report which will be adopted, regarding the supplies of coal, is the majority report, and is indorsed by four of the seven engineers to whom the report of Major Howell was submitted.

Major Howell's estimate of the cost was $7,000,000; but the board, to cover contingencies, put it at $10,000,000.

FOREIGN.

PANAMA, Jan. 22.—There is every-where a prospect for peace for Central America, except in relation to the affairs of Honduras. In that unfortunate republic Senor Arias, the provisional president, is shut up in Comayagua, and Senor Leira, who was declared president by Gonzales, has established a government at Tegerlelgalpa. There has been no fighting since the attack on Ampata.

Public opinion in Peru grows stronger every day in favor of the separation of Church and State, and of abolishing compulsory religious teaching.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—Herr Brenner, the German explorer of Africa, in a letter to Dr. Pittman, of Gotha, dated Zanzibar, says Livingstone died on the fifteenth of August. This date differs from the previous report, but all doubt on the subject has been set at rest.

A large and important meeting was held at St. James Hotel last night, the object of which was to express the sympathy of Englishmen for the German government in its struggle with the Ultramontane party. Letters supporting the purpose of the meeting were received from the Archbishops of York and Canterbury, and two hundred and thirty-seven members of Parliament, and speeches were made by Messrs. Newdegate, Peel, Chambers and others. The meeting lasted over four hours.

QUEBEC, Feb. 2.—A sharp shock of an earthquake was distinctly felt at Farther Point yesterday afternoon. It shook the stores and everything movable in the houses of the villagers.

It was also felt about ten miles below this city, and appears to have come from the southward.

The thermometer was twenty degrees below zero in this city this morning.

BERLIN, Feb. 3.—A dispatch from Posen says that Archbishop Ledoschowski was arrested to-day, by order of the German authorities, and sent to Frankfort to undergo imprisonment.

How We Are United.

Little daughter—"I wish the rivers would rise."

Father—"Why, what have you to do with the river's rising?"

L. D.—"A great deal, father; for then the boats will run."

F.—"And what have you to do with the boat's running, my child, eh?"

L. D.—"They would bring the cotton down, father."

F.—(Looking over spectacles)—"And what have you to do, darling, with cotton bales?"

L. D.—"Why, if the cotton was down you will be able to sell it, you know, dear father," smilingly.

F.—"And what then?"

L. D.—"You would have plenty of money."

F.—"Well?"

L. D.—(Laying her hand on his shoulder, and looking up in his face)—"Then you could pay mother that $20 gold piece you borrowed from her, you know, father."

F.—"And what then, child?"

L. D.—"Then mother could pay Aunt Sarah the $10 she owes her."

F.—"Aye, indeed; and what then?"

L. D.—"And Aunt Sarah would pay Sister Jane the $1 she promised to give her New Years, but didn't, because she didn't have any cotton—any money, I mean, father."

F.—"Well, and what else?" (He lays down the newspaper and looks at her captionsly, with a half smile.)

L. D.—"Sister Jane would pay Brother John his fifty cents back, and he said when he got it he would give me the half dime he owes me, and two dimes to buy marbles; and this is what I want the river to rise for, and the big boats to run! And I owe nurse the other dime, and I must pay my debts!"

Pa looked at ma. "There it is," he said. "We are all, big and little, like a row of bricks. Touch one, and away we all go, even down to our little Carrie here. She has, as a child, as great an interest in the rise of the river as I have. We are all, old and young, waiting for money to buy marbles."

A good lesson for debtor and creditor, too, and well enforced.

THE Litchfield Sentinel says: The vane of the Congregational steeple is gone, and nobody knows when it is going to rain or where the wind is. And this brings to mind a little colloquy between Parson Elliot and Lawyer Andrews, some time ago. They were talking about which way the wind was. Andrews said: "We go by the courthouse vane." "And we," replied the parson, "go by the church vane." "Well," said the lawyer, "in the matter of wind that is the best authority;" and each went his way.

THE kaolin deposits of South Carolina and Georgia promise to become of great importance. This substance is largely used in the manufacture of porcelain, paper, paints and paper-hangings. About two thousand tons are annually imported from England into New York alone. New Jersey and Ohio potteries use sixty thousand tons of it yearly. English kaolin is worth $30 and American only $20 per ton.

AN EDITOR and his wife were walking out in the bright moonlight one evening. Like all editors' wives, she was of an exceedingly poetic nature, and said to her mate: "Notice that moon! How bright and calm and beautiful!" "Couldn't think of noticing it," returned the editor, "for anything less than the usual rates—a dollar and fifty cents for twelve lines."

"THE strongest propensity in a woman's nature," says a surly editor, "is a desire to know what is going on, and the next is to boss the job."

Petroleum.

Probably no one article has caused insurance men so much uneasiness, or subjected them to such great loss, as the "non-explosive kind," sold so extensively both in Europe and the United States, as by far the most popular cheap illuminator now known. It is presumable that they, as a class, should feel more or less interested in the production, handling, manufacture and use of petroleum; we shall therefore endeavor to gratify this curiosity, in a measure at least, in the following brief sketch upon this important subject.

Petroleum has been known from the earliest ages, and all so-called discoveries are mere repetitions of various efforts made by different individuals to bring the qualities of this natural substance to the notice of the public. The Seneca Indians knew of the oil deposits of Pennsylvania, and were accustomed to use petroleum for various purposes, both before and after the country was first occupied by the whites. On one occasion in particular, after the French had established military posts throughout that territory, a large amount of oil, which had been forced to the surface by the pressure of gas from below, was collected in shallow pits along Oil creek, a little above its confluence with the Allegheny river; and, after inviting the commanding officer of the nearest military post, the Indians prepared for a grand religious celebration. In the midst of the proceedings of the festivities, after nightfall, when there was no moon, the designated elders of the tribe proceeded to the oil-pits with great solemnity, and set fire to the crude petroleum that had been carefully collected for this purpose. The forked flames shot high into the heavens, with lurid glare that illuminated the deep valley for a long distance with a wild, weird and fantastic splendor that left a lasting impression upon the minds of all who beheld it. The French officer has left us a vivid description of the proceedings of the savages on that extraordinary occasion. The oil was also used to mix the war-paints with which the aborigines were accustomed to ornament their persons. This doing-up process in oil doubtless added materially to the extraordinary effect produced by these original American artists, who probably were accustomed to bull and bear the crude market for a dangerous purpose.

The early settlers along Oil creek found many shallow pits which had evidently been dug by the aborigines for the purpose of collecting oil, and continued to obtain all that they required by the same simple process practiced by the Indians before them. This consisted of skimming the oil from the surface of the water by skimmers, or by laying a woolen blanket upon the pool. This blanket would absorb the oil before it would absorb any water whatever, and by watching until the blanket began to sink the collector could tell when to remove it and ring out the oil. Several barrels a year were obtained in this manner for many years in succession. A gentleman named Kerr had also obtained more or less oil from a salt well on the banks of the Allegheny river above Pittsburg, which he sold for medicinal purposes throughout the country by traveling agents. This oil was put in bottles, and wrapped in a neatly-printed bill of directions, after the then approved patent medicine pattern, with an engraving of a derrick and a salt well in operation as a vignette.

At a late period a quantity of this natural oil was sent to Prof. Silliman for analysis. The professor analyzed the oil, discovered the easiest method for refining it, and demonstrated the fact that it possessed qualities of usefulness, but did not seem to think the discovery of any pecuniary advantage. Of course a stock company was organized, and the fortunate professor made president of the company (to give it prestige, of course;) but the affairs of the company did not prosper under his management. A young lawyer by the name of Bissel, living in New York, became interested in the scheme early in its inception, and it was owing entirely to his energy, perseverance and intuitive perceptions that the petroleum business has been developed to the enormous proportions which it has attained. One day, while waiting for a Broadway stage, Bissel chanced to see one of Kerr's engraved labels lying in the show window of a store. In an instant the thought occurred to him that the proper way to develop his oil property was by means of boring artesian wells for the express purpose. He therefore went diligently to work to perfect plans for this purpose; but he met unforeseen obstacles at every turn, many of which were the result of the excessive learning of the Hartford stockholders. But finally Bissel's ideas prevailed, and the company dispatched Drake to Titusville, as its agent, to carry out the instructions prescribed by the New York disciple of Blackstone.

Drake at once proceeded to Titusville, and after a good deal of unnecessary delay, in consequence of his want of enterprise, a well was finally sunk, which proved to be a success. The fact having been established that oil could be obtained by drilling for it, a host of adventurers hurried to the front to engage in this new-found productive industry at once. In the course of a week after the discovery was made three other rigs were put up in the immediate vicinity of Drake's operations by different parties who had managed to secure territory on the Watson Flats, as near the first well as possible. Others who had a more comprehensive idea of the importance of the discovery, and of the probable extent of productive territory, started out at once to obtain leases or to purchase land that might in a short time prove to be of great value. Bissel, who had been sharp enough to keep an eye on the movements of his agent, made haste to reach Titusville as soon as he heard the news from the front; and when there he made the most of his time to secure favorable leases, in every direction, miles away from the first well, but generally near the shallow pits that had been dug by the Indians for the purpose of obtaining oil at various places in the Oil Creek valley. His forethought and sagacity on this occasion secured him a princely fortune; while the original company and its short-sighted agent both went into bankruptcy within a few months after the new discovery was made.

A few persons have been fortunate enough to get wells that would flow from five hundred to three thousand barrels a day. These flowing wells act upon the same principle as geysers; except that in the case of oil wells the power which acts upon the oil is the expansive force of a natural hydro-carbon gas, that is always found in larger or smaller quantities in all oil wells. This pressure of the gas forces the oil out of the well-tube at intervals, as the pressure is not sufficient to keep up a continual flow of oil except in rare cases in new territory. When oil was first transported in tanks, gas would be given off to such an extent as to make explosions frequent and dangerous. This first led to the use of iron tanks instead of wood, but it was soon found that iron could not resist the expansive force of this natural explosive compound, so domes were placed upon the tanks. This proved a valuable accessory, but it was soon found that something more was necessary, and a peculiarly constructed safety-valve was patented and put in use, since which no explosions of tank-cars have taken place.

There can be no doubt whatever that the thousands of accidents which have occurred in all parts of the country are owing to the ignorance of the average person who uses oil as to its properties and peculiarities. When oil is properly refined it gives off little or no gas; but oil is not always properly refined. Oil gives off gas much more readily when it is being agitated than when at rest. While oil will give off gas at all temperatures, it gives it off much more readily when heated than when kept cold. Lamps should always, therefore, be kept in as cold a place as possible. Lamp-burners should never fit too tight or too loose; if too tight, they heat the oil and generate gas; if too loose, they are liable to leak and thereby become dangerous. But, however well the burner may fit, the person who uses petroleum, of such quality as is usually sold, cannot be too careful in handling or caring for these useful articles, which are generally set aside with the least possible attention. Care should always be taken in getting a wick that fits the burner, for if too loose the gas escapes and never reaches the flame; if too tight, it becomes vexatious. It is much better, whenever a person can afford to purchase a good lamp, to get the Sherman Student Lamp. In this simple device every possible danger of the explosion of gas is avoided, while the burner gives a clear light fully equal to gas. This lamp is easily cleaned and cared for, is safe, and is a decided comfort to the fireside, and will soon become a favorite wherever it may be introduced.

It should be borne in mind that the oil never explodes; it is always the gas which is given off by the oil. When people understand this, they can then prepare against the danger. One simple method is to permit all gas that has accumulated during the day to escape before lighting the lamp in the evening. This can easily be done by loosening the burner for a few moments. The gas, being lighter than the air, will escape at once. A little intelligent caution on the part of the public would do much to relieve the anxiety of insurance men in consequence of the almost universal consumption of the "non-explosive kind."—*N. W. NEW TABERNACLE, BROOKLYN.—It has been announced that the new building erected for Dr. Talmage's congregation, on the site of the former edifice, will be dedicated on Sunday, February 22. Its dimensions are 150 feet by 112, and it will accommodate 4,000 persons. The front has a large central gable, with a deeply-recessed six-light window (22 feet by 40 feet) above the gallery floor, with a double-storied colonnade on each side, terminating on ends with angular porches about 50 feet high. A covered portico with stone flooring is thereby secured, about 140 feet long, with door openings equal to an outlet of 75 feet from ground floor. Eight staircases, communicating with galleries, are so constructed as to be outside, and independent of the main building, and so as not to conflict with the delivery from the lower floor. The best possible conditions are thus secured for the speedy egress of the congregation. The heating, lighting and ventilating arrangements have also been very carefully developed. The building is of stone and brick, with no external wood-work, excepting the doors, all window tracery, etc., being of stone. The seats and internal finishings are black walnut.—N. Y. Observer.

Letter from San Marcos, Texas.

MR. EDITOR: I will now comply with the request made by you when we parted in Selma, Alabama. I have been here one month, and have seen much of this lovely country. It is grand beyond description.

I have read several letters in which there were attempts made to describe this beautiful country; but the half was not told. Many of the people of the old States, like myself, were not satisfied with hearing, but came to see for themselves. I have met many of my Alabama friends, who, with others, have given me such a hearty welcome that I already begin to feel very much at home.

I am now living in the town of San Marcos. My work is the San Marcos circuit, which lies between the San Marcos and the Guadalupe rivers. I have made one round, and I am pleased with my appointment. The people are very kind to me in supplying my temporal wants. I have no fears about something to eat in this heaven-favored valley. As far as I have been able to ascertain, Methodism has the ascendancy, and will doubtless keep it. We have many Methodists of the old class here. Our churches, as a general thing, are very poor buildings; but we are improving very much in this direction. We have here in the town of San Marcos a beautiful brick church, which would be an ornament to a much larger place. The Quarterly Conference of my circuit last Saturday appointed a church-building committee. So I hope to have a new house of worship on my circuit before the year closes.

We expect railroads through our country before a great while. They are much needed. This accounts for our inferior churches and dwelling-houses. Our people, as a general thing, are intelligent. There never was a greater mistake made than to suppose this to be a heathen country. Our people will compare favorably with those of any State.

Many of my friends of the Alabama Conference asked me to write to them and tell them how I liked my new home. I will just simply say that I am pleased with the people and country; so much so that I expect to spend my days here, let them be many or few.

I remain, your brother in Christ,
J. W. VEST.

A Scene in Madagascar.

Sir Bartle Frere, soon after returning from Zanzibar, called at the office of the London Missionary Society and made the following remarkable statement:

"When sailing along the northern coast of Madagascar on a Sunday morning, and as they were not far from the shore, he saw a native town. He went on shore in a boat, feeling an anxiety to see what a native Malagasy town was like. He took along with him a native interpreter. They found all the streets deserted. Sir Bartle Frere inquired of the interpreter the reason for this, and was told: 'The people are praying, sir.' He was then conducted to a large shed, where two thousand people were devoutly attending the worship of God. He listened attentively, and never saw nor heard a service conducted with such devoutness and propriety. At the close of the service some went away, the others remaining. Through the agency of the interpreter he was told that the people were next about to hold a communion service. Sir Bartle Frere sat down with them at the table of our Lord, when the worshipers produced a beautiful silver communion service, all wrought by native silversmiths. "Never in all Christendom,' added Sir Bartle Frere, 'had I seen a communion service conducted with such propriety.'"

This station to which Sir Bartle Frere referred was fully three hundred miles away from the nearest European missionary station; and when it was asked how the people there came to the possession of the truth, he was told that it had been conveyed thither in 1816 by two native slaves, who were sold at the capital, and who had previously been under missionary influence. Wherever their missionaries had penetrated they had formed small bodies of believers; and to those men who came home from distant climes, and sometimes said they had never seen a native Christian, all he could say was: 'More shame for them.'—*N. Missionary Efforts in Mexico—M. E. Church.

We have been permitted, says the Methodist, to gather the following interesting account of the work of Methodist missions in Mexico from a letter of Rev. Dr. Butler to a friend in this city. The letter is dated City of Mexico, November 18. The doctor writes that he has just returned from a visit to Pachuca, the capital of the State of Hidalgo, sixty miles from the City of Mexico, and continues:

By the aid of a converted Mexican doctor, named Turrero (who has suffered the loss of nearly half his practice for becoming a Protestant,) we have collected a regular congregation of eighty persons, nearly half of them women. To these Dr. Turrero regularly ministers, on Sundays twice, and also on two evenings in the week. We began with a mere handful, in a small place) in a garden outside the city. Three months since this place became too small to hold the numbers who wished to attend; so, after considerable effort, we found, inside the city, a small room in a back street that was so much larger than the place where we were that we secured it and moved our people into it. The result is, our congregation has more than doubled in number; so that the place is now filled until it can hold no more. Yesterday the little room was crowded, and several stood around the door outside. Six or eight of the congregation were Spanish, the rest were Aztecs and Toltecs. Some of the women looked wild—with heads of hair that looked as if they had never been combed, and dressed in seanty attire; but their eyes were strained at the preacher as he told them the wonderful news of how the Father, Son and Holy Ghost loved them. The men I will not attempt to describe. As a poor mother would have to go out with her crying child, or some one else must leave, others would crowd in for the vacated seat, and say, before they took it (it not used to the service,) making a profound bow to the congregation: "Buenos dias, senores!" For even the poor are courteous here. It was accepted, as a matter of course, and did not seem to disturb the good preacher, though he came in for a share of the salutation always.

All that had learned to read and I was surprised at the number who could do so) had their Bibles open before them, and when the minister made references to texts of Scripture they read with him. I never saw a more attentive congregation.

In respect to gathering a congregation this country is the very reverse of India. There the Brahmans won't enter our places of worship until they are converted, but will listen to us as we preach in the open air; while in this land we dare not take the streets, but the Romanists will come into our halls or churches and sit down and listen respectfully to what we have to say to them. This is an immense advantage, and our first duty is to provide such places, and then use every effort to interest and instruct those who come, so as to become regular attendants on worship.

You have, no doubt, heard that we have secured the Inquisition building in the City of Puebla, the ecclesiastical headquarters of this country, and henceforth God's holy word is to be preached in it.

We have, in addition to the congregation at Pachuca, another at Real Del Monte, three miles distant, about twenty in number, and four miles from Real Del Monte another little one is being gathered, so that that neighborhood seems to be peculiarly disposed to unite with Protestant worship. A little chapel at the capital would thus have a great influence on the city and on these surrounding places.

Dr. Butler makes a strong appeal for means to provide for larger quarters for the Pachuca congregation.

Most Salable.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say through the columns of the ADVOCATE, to those purchasing books for sale during the coming sixty days, that in my judgment, as well as experience, the most salable books are Parks on Apostasy, Golden Censer, Path of Life, The Way Made Plain, Baptismal Demonstrations, by R. Abbey. For the above list I have always found ready sale—none left on my hands. I have sold a few copies of Baptist Pretensions to Antiquity and Theophilus Walton. I give the above for the information of such as may desire to know the most salable.

Yours in Christian love,

NEW ORLEANS, January 26, 1874.

ON Saturday last, January 31, it is reported that one Thomas King attempted to blow up the Louisiana Legislature. He entered the Senate chamber while that body was in session, bringing a keg of powder with him, and was about to apply a match when his purpose was discovered.

BY THE FIRE.

Dead eyes are gazing on her from the pictures on the wall,
Dead voices in the wailing winds that sweep the upland's call,
Dead feet seem pattering round her as the rain-drops lash the pane,
Till she stretches hands of greeting, dumb hands that yearn in vain.

Like one in fairy legend, like one in dreamland lost,
At every turn by dead men's steps her onward way is crossed,
The very flowers whisper of who plucked them long ago,
The very birds have echoes in their trillings soft and low.

The chords she touches breathe for her the music of the past,
On every page the shadow of old memories is cast,
The "brooding sense of something" gone falls solemn all around,
Making the common paths of life her hushed heart's holy ground.

On the table ground of middle life, the dull and dreary band,
Where shadowless as sunless lies the stretch of beaten sand,
She stands alone and listens, all behind her veiled in mist,
In front dim hills beyond the vale, their summits promise-kissed.

Sob on, oh wind! sigh on, oh rain! sweet faces form and die,
There where, amid the caverned coals, the fairy fancies lie,
For in sleeping as in waking, till she crosses the dark stream,
The sunshine of her lonely heart from the peopled past must gleam. All the Year Round.

A Man of One Book.

MR. EDITOR: Correct experience is the practical demonstration of truth. Unity of experiences, therefore, constitutes ground of belief. Upon this we may stand with strong assurance. In the light of this assurance we ought to be guided. By this guidance we shall find the Bible, and the Bible only, the grand source of all truth.

Taking the experience and declaration of the past ages into the account, we shall learn much to correct the present. Here we introduce Mr. John Wesley's experience. He says: "I want to know one thing; the way to heaven—how to land safe on that happy shore. God himself has condescended to teach the way; for this very end he came from heaven. He hath written it down in a book. Oh, give me that book! At any price give me the book of God! I have it; here is knowledge enough for me. Let me be homo unius libri"—a man of one book. Well might he thus exclaim, for he had learned to estimate the book of God by contrasting the sad and insufficient instruction afforded from the many pulpits of that day with the blessed volume. As the godly experience of the ministry of that day grew weak and cloudy, so their scriptural utterances grew faint and equivocal. Amid this universal gloom and deadness Wesley was aroused to a sense of danger and duty by carefully reading "the book of God." Having experienced the saving power of the truth of God, he felt himself impelled "to spread scriptural holiness over the lands."

The learned Bishop Watson, who wrote the famous "Apology for the Bible" against the sophistical and unfair attack of Thomas Paine, uses the following strong language: "I reduced the study of divinity into as narrow a compass as possible, for I determined to study nothing but my Bible; being much unconcerned about the opinions of councils, fathers, churches, bishops, and other men as little inspired as myself." And again he says: "Holding the New Testament in my hand, I used to say: 'En sacrum codicem!' There is the fountain of truth. Why do you follow the streams derived from it by the sophistry, or polluted by the passions of man?" In a pre-eminent sense the learned Bishop was a man of one book, for he says: "I determined to study nothing but my Bible."

Going still further back in the history of experience, we see the same to be true in the beginning and success of the Waldensean Church. As Mosheim informs us, Peter Waldus, A. D. 1160, employed Stephanus de Evisa to translate the four gospels, with other books of holy Scripture, from the Latin into the French language, so that he and others could read the Scriptures for themselves. See the grand and glorious result!

But now, taking a view of the Bible from its manifest appreciation of inspiration, we see that in the Old Testament scripture is incorporated into scripture by quotation. In the New, Jesus Christ and the apostles quoted frequently from nearly all parts of the Old Testament, but never once from the Apocrypha or any other publication, excepting Paul, in Acts xvii, 28, and Titus i, 12. From all which we learn:

1. That in order to success in winning souls for Christ the inspired word must be honored; for it is written: "Your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." It matters not how beautiful, rhetorical, logical, geological, historical or astronomical the preacher may be, he will be powerless in the accomplishment of spiritual good unless he wields the sword of the Spirit.

2. That by carefully surveying the past, and particularly by a rigid and prayerful examination of "the book of God," we can determine the positions and tendencies of the present times; for wherever the people had rather hear the wisdom of men than the pure word of God, from the pulpit or elsewhere, there is proof that their faith does not stand in the power of God; and unless awakened and saved by divine truth, faithfully preached and earnestly believed, will at last be lost. Change of the Term of the Pastorate.

MR. EDITOR: The next General Conference will doubtless have this subject before them for discussion. Its advantages and disadvantages will be canvassed. That there are benefits derived from the four years' rule no one doubts, but they are few and of minor importance. The first is the financial. It costs the church less when the preachers move less, but men of large families are seldom moved to any very great distance. The demands of the work usually cause the long and expensive moves for the preachers, and not the two or four years' rule. There may be other reasons, but, if so, we do not see our sister churches avail themselves of their benefits where there is no law to prevent. According to my observation not one preacher in ten remains four years, and not one in five with general satisfaction to all parties. I have never conversed with an intelligent minister or laymen of other churches who did not admit the superior advantage of our itinerate system. There are many and some formidable reasons why our rule should be changed back to the two years. The people uniformly do more for the new preacher than they did for the old one—the parsonage cleaned up, new furniture, etc.

The church and community will go out en masse to hear a new preacher, and they will listen with more attention and interest to his preaching. His manner and preaching meet the demands of many his predecessor could not reach. The same pleasurable scenes are enjoyed by the former pastor in his new field, and many are reached by his manner and preaching not reached before. The change has blessed and benefited both preachers and both charges. If I am not mistaken, two years was the apostolic limit, and St. Paul wanted his voice changed even on the two years' rule. There is not one preacher in fifty who can interest the mass of his congregation for one year. There are many preachers as men who, by their pastoral work and constant labors, endear themselves to their congregations, but not as preachers. Private members of the church, men and women, do the same thing. And when the church is fortunate enough to get such rare qualifications, he ought to be changed every year, so that his great talents may be widely extended, and his example and influence generally felt.

It is argued by some that our strongholds should be garrisoned by strong men. We have not space to argue the question who are strong and who are weak in the ministry, but we do know the Bishops make this mistake in keeping certain men at those points who have talents to reach only certain classes, which classes, to my certain knowledge, they seldom if ever see in their churches, and never find them at their altars.

We want men everywhere to preach to the masses of the people; and by reaching the masses we reach most effectually the higher and the lower classes. A preacher may be educated in all the colleges of earth and heaven, speak the tongues of men and angels, and then be only as sounding "brass." He may have all knowledge, and yet be "nothing." I will state a few facts. We have had places where the pastorate was perpetual. In one of these localities I was urged by leading laymen, as a member of the General Conference, to break it up. They affirmed to me that they believed if the preachers had been changed every one or two years their membership would have been doubled. They said their ministers were good men, and they loved them, and to petition for their removal would wound them.

One of the strange features in the long pastorate is this: that I have not known a preacher on a poor circuit or station, however much good he might be doing, or however much harm might grow out of his removal, that ever complained at the injustice done him or the church when the Bishop moved him. Why is the great injustice only done when the preacher is moved from a higher to a lower place? The four years' rule is working evil, and only evil. A whole church may desire a change, and so express themselves to the Bishop through the legal and proper channel—the presiding elder—and in four cases out of five the preacher will blame the elder. I have watched carefully the workings of the four years' rule, and I do not know a single instance where any permanent good has resulted from it. We earnestly hope the next General Conference will change it.

STOCK-RAISING IN THE VALLEY OF RED RIVER—WILL IT PAY?

MR. EDITOR: It may be well for us to explain what we mean by raising stock, as our views as to what such a business requires are entirely at variance with the ideas prevalent in the South on that subject. We do not mean that the farmer is to get together as many pennyroyal sheep or scrub cattle or mustang ponies as he can, and turn them into the woods or upon the waste fields to support and take care of themselves, with the exceptional care of salting and counting them once every two or three months. Nor do we mean the Texas style of grazing in the wilds of an uninhabited or sparsely-settled country, without regard to the character or improvement of the breed. It would be a misfortune to any country that such stock-raising should long succeed, as it is a sure index that civilization has never existed there, or has been trampled out. We mean, then, by the business of raising stock, that the stock shall be supported by the pastures, meadows and fields of the farm, without depending upon that broken reed to all stock-raising in the South—the range; that the farmer shall prepare for them sheds and houses to protect them from storms and rains and cold in winter, and shade-trees in their pastures to protect them from the sun in summer. In addition to all this, that he shall have lots to protect the dams and their young in folding-time, inclosures to protect them at night from dogs and wolves and marauders, and a shepherd to give them his constant care. When thus prepared, the next care would be the breed. If the stock to be raised were sheep, for instance, which, if raised principally for mutton, and incidentally for wool, would require less capital and make the quickest returns, he could at a very moderate cost procure two hundred and fifty or five hundred ewes, half or quarter bloods, and purchase the requisite number of rams of pure blood (Southdown or Leicester would be the best for mutton and combing wool and our luxuriant pastures,) and in a few years the old one-quarter bloods could be replaced by the one-half bloods, and the one-half bloods by three-quarter bloods, and so on.

But the all-important question is yet unanswered: Will it pay? We believe the following estimate might be safely relied on: Five hundred ewes will produce seven hundred lambs and three thousand pounds of wool. These lambs, at nine months, will be fit for the butcher, and worth in the spring market $5 each; the wool would be worth at least $1,400; making an aggregate of $4,900. Three hundred and fifty tons of hay, with fifty acres of Bermuda pasture, would be amply sufficient to support this flock. Forty acres for Hungarian grass in spring, and pea vines in the fall, and twenty-five for a Bermuda meadow, would be sufficient land to produce the hay. To this quantity of land there may be added forty acres for corn, and ten for potatoes and other crops. These crops can all be planted, cultivated and gathered by machinery, and four good mules and four good yoke of oxen would be sufficient to do all the plowing and hauling, requiring three hands to attend them. We may allow six extra hands for two months for harvesting, etc., and yet the labor and its support would not reach a cost of $700. To this must be added the wages of the shepherd, and perhaps that of a hand to help him, and yet the expense would not exceed $1,500.

But there is still another item of profit, which has never been estimated at its true value—the manure which the stock would furnish. Without it there can be no such thing as successful farming, and with it in abundance, with deep, thorough plowing, no ordinary blunder can produce a failure. Each year the field would become more productive, and the rearing and having abundant teams an almost unavoidable and inexpensive incident. Freed from the endless drudgery inseparable from raising cotton or sugar under the present regime, the farmer would have ample time to commence his preparations in the fall, and by spring have his land thoroughly prepared for planting. If he then desired to plant five, ten or twenty acres in cane or cotton, according to his means, it would only cost him the hire of an extra hand and the employment of a spare team for one or two months to thoroughly plow, fertilize and plant the whole; and a crop thus planted would be more than half made. But this is not all. A crop thus planted and worked would produce from two to three bales per acre, or from three to four hogsheads of sugar. Its gathering, instead of being the long and dreary drudgery of the present, would be made, like the vintage of other countries, the time of sport and amusement. But there is an advantage incident to this husbandry of more value than money. With time to think of something else than the everlasting sameness of cotton and corn, some of the hundreds of agricultural works and periodicals would creep in, to make glad the leisure moments of its charming variety, and even farmers would begin to learn that agriculture was as much a science as astronomy, and the marvels of vegetation as great as the growth and decay of a planet, or the fiery volcanoes of the sun; that in the magical laboratory of vegetation the offensive material of the barnyard, like the offensive coal-tar in the hands of the chemist, may be made to yield its colors, of yellow and green, and purple and gold, and administer to the thousand wants of life. The peach, the pear, the apple, the plum, the fig, the pomegranate, would soon have their allotted places, and the now dreary and desolate cotton farm would smile with all the beauties and blessings and comforts of rural life. Recognition in Heaven.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of November 20, 1873, we have an article, over the signature of M., on "Recognition in Heaven." Allow me, in kindness, to demur against the sentiment therein expressed. If I clearly understand the article, we are to be elevated "to a plane in spirituality" which will absorb grade, tie, diversity, fairly wiping away every division or individuality from among the sainted. I think the position untenable.

M. says: "The mother (in heaven) will not regard her child different from that in which she regards others." And again: "The effort of the gospel to extend the circle of man's affinities, until it shall compass the entire race," being admitted, would not favor the obliteration of any present, divinely instituted affection or affiliation; it would teach expansion rather than either contraction or retraction. "They who turn many to righteousness, shining as the stars," cannot well ignore their inclustering honors, nor the subjects of them. If I have been able to discover the mind of God, in any of his economy, he never presents intelligence with a plane. His gracious expedient is too fertile for that. Individuality is one of the vestments of his universe, while equality or sameness are, to my apprehension, but the shorn tempers of finite minds—far, far beneath the majesty of infinite conception.

If there be no elevations, no distinctions in heaven, who will occupy the twelve thrones? Who are the elders? Where will the accrued honors be meted to the faithful, who held the talents? Why not some obscure saint honored at the translation, and why the angels of our little ones to have the especial favor of always beholding "the Father's face?"

Although Abraham neither forgot nor ignored the old-time relationship when he addressed Dives as son, still we discover no outcropping sorrow, which fact makes our heavenly anticipations pleasant. Yea, Lazarus on Abraham's bosom, but not to the exclusion of Isaac.

Reminiscence of Wesley.

Rev. J. M. C. Fulton writes the following pleasant introductory note to an interesting autobiographical scrap:

I am somewhat of an antiquary. Whenever, by accident or otherwise, I hit upon anything that brings me into contact with our reverend and illustrious founder, John Wesley, M. A., I want to preserve it imperishably. Here is a genuine link—not between Darwin's monkey and a man—but between the eighteenth and the nineteenth century merely—but a link uniting the thrilling present with the glorious days and well-remembered efforts of the now sainted John Wesley—a ligature "of a thousand strings" between the few thousands of the eighteenth century Methodists and the millions (perhaps twelve) scattered from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth, of the glorious nineteenth century.

There is now living a man who has seen and heard Mr. Wesley for himself. That man is Mr. Thomas Cotton Hallamore, now residing in New Cornwall, County of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. His father was a customhouse officer, known as "locker-up of the king's stores," and "land waiter," and Thomas, his second son, left England early in the service of the British navy, and after several years of seafaring life settled in Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. He says he was one hundred and one years of age the fifth day of last September. His mind is amazingly clear and strong, his voice apparently as firm and unfaltering as if in the prime of life; he is of medium size, and "as straight as a rush." His step is short, quick and firm. He often walks three miles to visit his daughter, and home again the same day.

Among the many thrilling incidents of his eventful life is a lengthy interview with Lord Nelson, on board the Victory, a short period before his lordship's death, the circumstances of which interview he tells with most cheerful zest. But the most striking facts he relates are his clear and vivid recollection of the person, character and persecutions of Mr. Wesley, who, he says, often stopped at his father's house. He remembers of Mr. Wesley preaching on a platform in the open air, and of his being often interrupted and variously insulted by the mob. He says Mr. Wesley was very fond of children, and that he often held them on his knee, and taught them to sing that favorite hymn with him:

"Come, let us join our cheerful songs,
With angels round the throne," etc.,

and says Mr. Wesley's likeness in the hymn-book is good enough, all but the nose, which Mr. Hallamore declares was a very prominent feature on the good man's face.

It has been my privilege of late to spend a few hours in the company of this venerable and time-honored man, and to see and read several letters written to him by his brother and nephew, between the years 1830 and 1842, giving accounts of family affairs, of the Methodist Church in Falmouth, and of the death of our aged friend's father, at the advanced age of ninety-three years, in 1842. The dates and allusions referred to in these letters confirm beyond a doubt the age and statements of the venerable and honored Mr. Thomas Cotton Hallamore.

CLASSIC GAELIC.—The following authentic anecdote shows very clearly the benefits which a knowledge of Gaelic can confer under peculiarly distressing circumstances. A clergyman of the Church of Scotland, who was possessed of a fund of dry humor, occupied a rural parish in Perthshire, bordering on the Highland district. He took much interest in the progress of a Highland student, and aided him as much as he could in his studies preparatory to getting license from the presbytery. One thing, however, he was deficient in, and that thing was indispensable. Time wore on, and the day of trial approached. Both minister and student were much exercised as to how they were to overcome the difficulty. Neither knew anything of Hebrew, and how the young man was to meet the reverend court without it sorely puzzled them both. At last the clergyman saw his way clear, as if by inspiration. "Take your Gaelic Bible," he said, "and when you are asked to read Hebrew, go on reading from it." "But will they not find me out?" said the young man. "No fear of that; just do as I tell you." The day came; the trial proceeded, and everything passed off satisfactorily. The young man was requested to read Hebrew, and, with fear and trembling, he drew forth his Gaelic Bible and proceeded to read and translate. After he had gone on thus a short time, "That will do," said the moderator; "what do you say, brethren?" Of course every reverend brother complimented the young man on his familiar acquaintance with Hebrew. His reverend friend said nothing, and the candidate received license to preach.—The Highlander.

ONE of our most interesting adventures at the Galapagos Island was landing in a little bay full of seals, so tame, so little afraid of men, that we could tramp past groups of sleepers on the beach without awakening half of them, and without apparently frightening half of those we did awake. They seemed to be fond of crawling under bushes just above high-water mark, and sleeping two or three in a place, huddled close together. Under one bush lay a mother and her two cubs, so fearless that one of our officers held a piece of cracker to the old one, and she smelled it in his fingers, as a pet dog.—Prof. Agassiz.

CONSIDER whether thou hast thy heart at command, or whether it be not escaped out of thy hands, to engaged itself in some inordinate affection of love, hatred, envy, covetousness, fear, joy, sadness; and if it be stayed, seek it presently, and bring it back gently to the presence of God, subjecting thy affections and desires to the obedience and direction of his divine pleasure.

The Wonders of the Deep.

During the recent passage of the British exploring ship Challenger from England to the West Indies the sounding-line and dredge were kept constantly going. The former showed that a pretty level bottom runs off from the African coast, deepening gradually to a depth of 3,125 fathoms at about one-third of the way across to the West Indies. If the Alps, Mont Blanc and all, were submerged at this spot, there would still be a half a mile of water above them. Five hundred miles farther west there is a comparatively shallow part a little less than two miles in depth. The water then deepens again to three miles, which continues close over to the West Indies. At the deepest spots, both on the east and west side of the Atlantic, the dredge brought up a quantity of dark red clay, which contained just sufficient animal life to prove that life exists at all depths. No difficulty was experienced in obtaining these deep-sea dredgings, and it was merely a question of patience, each haul occupying twelve hours. In depths over two miles little has been found, but that little was totally new.

One of the lions of the cruise is a new species of lobster perfectly transparent. Not content with obtaining animals with eyes so fully developed that the body may be said to be an appendage, a new crustacean has now been dredged up, in which the body has cut itself clear of the eyes altogether, and the animal is totally blind. It has no eyes, or even the trace of an eye. To make up for its deficiency nature has supplied it with the most beautifully-developed, delicate, lady-like claws, if one may use the term, it is possible to conceive.

Nearer the West Indies, in a depth of only half a mile, some similar creatures were brought up, and here the claws, longer than the body, are armed throughout with a multitude of spike-like teeth, looking more like a crocodile's jaw than anything else. At a short distance from Teneriffe, in a depth of a mile and a half, a rich and extremely interesting haul of sponges and coral was obtained, but the latter was unfortunately dead.—Christian Intelligencer.

THOUGHT HE NEVER PRAYED.—Rev. Mr. Kilpin passed a very profane man, and, having omitted to rebuke him, he awaited him in the morning in the same place. When he approached Mr. Kilpin said:

"Good-morning, my friend; you are the man I have been waiting for."

"O, sir," said the man, "you are mistaken, I think."

"I do not know you, but I saw you last night when you were going home from work, and I have been waiting some time to see you."

"Sir, you are mistaken; it could not have been me; I never saw you in my life before that I know of."

"Well, my friend," said Mr. Kilpin, "I heard you pray last night."

"Now I assure you that you are mistaken. I never prayed in all my life."

"O," said Mr. Kilpin, "if God had answered your prayer last night you had not been seen here this morning. I heard you pray that God would destroy your eyes and ruin your soul."

The man turned pale, and, trembling, said:

"Do you call that prayer? I did! I did!"

"Well, then, my errand this morning is to request you from this day to pray as fervently for your salvation as you have done for damnation; and may God in mercy hear your prayers!"

The man from that time became an attendant on Mr Kilpin's ministry, and it ended in his early conversion to God.

DOING GOOD.—Perhaps there are no words in the English language that are looked upon with more widely different feelings, or that carry more diverse impressions than these—"doing good."

Dry, hackneyed, canting term, in the ears of some; something that takes with enthusiastic girls, to others; some unknown, vague, undefined impulse that drives people to and carries them through a host of disagreeable offices in this life, perhaps with the hope of a reward to come, to a third.

A yearning of empty, unfilled lives for a place in God's plan; for some outlet to the strong energies and sympathies which have been lying so long wrapped away in the napkin of conventionality. Such are a few of the lights in which "doing good" is looked upon and pictured.

"Doing good," a phrase, an impulse, an enthusiasm, a term? Then all the higher life is a phrase, a term. For all our obligations to God, our duty to man, our relations each to each are comprehended in these words. God the source, man the object on whom the stream must be outpoured.—London Day of Rest.

THE introduction of the practice of inoculation into England met with obstinate resistance. Not only did the medical professors condemn it as a dangerous innovation, but the clergy also denounced it from their pulpits as an impious attempt to take the issues of life and death out of the hands of Providence. On the eighth of July, 1722, a sermon was preached at St. Andrew's, Holborn, by Rev. Edward Massey, lecturer of St. Alban's, Wood street, "against the dangerous and sinful practice of inoculation." The sermon was published, and the text is Job ii, 7: "So went Satan forth from the presence of the Lord, and smote Job with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown." Of the arguments used, the following may serve as specimens: "Remembering our text," he says, "I shall not scruple to call that a diabolical operation which usurps an authority founded neither in the laws of nature nor religion, which tends in this case to anticipate and banish Providence out of the world, and promote the increase of vice and immorality."

WE CANNOT understand what we have never experienced; we need pain were it only to teach us sympathy.—Landon.

IN MEMORIAM.

SUSANNA VIRGINIA NEWSOM was born August 24, 1843, and died November 4, 1873, at the residence of her brother-in-law, James Turner, in Livingston parish, Louisiana. Sister Newsom was a deaf mute, being deprived of the sense of hearing in infancy—by scarlet fever, I believe. She never learned to articulate sounds. She was sent to school at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, in her eleventh year, where she remained about six months. At the age of sixteen she went to school at Jackson, Mississippi, where she remained about two years, during which time she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The writer is unable to state at what time of life she was converted to God, but is able to testify, from his acquaintance with her, as well as from the statement of her mother, that she had experienced this change. She was an obedient daughter, an affectionate sister and a truly devoted Christian. She left an aged mother, three sisters and three brothers, beside a large circle of friends, to weep over her departure. One of her brothers is the Rev. Joseph D. Newsom, of the North Mississippi Conference. She is gone where the "dumb their loosened tongues employ", in singing praises to the Most High; and where her ears, though closed to sounds of earth, are now saluted with the music of angelic voices. May we meet her there. T. B. WALDEN.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, The great Author of all good, and who doeth all things well, has removed from our midst one of our beloved members, WILLIE A. ADAMS, of New Orleans, son of the Rev. J. D. Adams, of the Louisiana Conference; And whereas, From his connection with us we sympathize with his afflicted relatives; therefore

Resolved, That we deplore the loss of Willie with deep feelings of regret, softened only by the hope that his spirit took its flight to the haven of rest that awaits the finally faithful.

Resolved, That we, the members of the Franklin Institute of Centenary College, heartily tender to his afflicted relatives our sincere condolence and earnest sympathy at the loss of Willie, who was just verging into manhood, with a vast field of bright prospects before him.

Resolved, That we can do nothing more for the relief of the relatives of the deceased than express to them our sympathy, and point them to the Cross, the only source of comfort to the bereaved that has ever proven sure upon trial.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and that a copy, signed by the president and certified by the secretary, be transmitted to the relatives of the deceased.

IN MEMORIAM.

Death has recently visited our Sunday school in Prattville, Alabama, and taken from us two of our beloved pupils. We weep their departure; but we doubt not the sun of their immortality arose in cloudless glory in that sphere where death is unknown.

The first to depart was Miss LUCY JANE TURNER, eldest daughter of J. S. and Elizabeth Turner, formerly of Choctaw county, Alabama. She was born February 28, 1855, and died November 2 1873. Reared by pious parents, she, when a little girl, gave her heart to God, and obtained the witness that through Christ she was accepted of him. She united with the church and died in its communion. Hers was a consistent Christian life. She never came down to the low plane of worldly amusements to find pleasure; these she left to such as know of nothing better. Neither frivolous nor morose, hers was the tranquil, cheerful Christian spirit, so lovely in all, but especially attractive in youth. She loved her Sunday school, and was always in her place on Sunday morning, unless providentially kept away. Prominent among her virtues was filial piety. She "honored" her "father and mother," and God honored her with his abiding presence. When death came she met it fearlessly—literally she triumphed over it by faith in Christ.

The second to depart was little MATTIE COUNTS. She was born February 14, 1869, and died November 16, 1873. She was one of those confiding lambs that nestle closely to the Shepherd's bosom. She loved to talk about God and Christ, and angels and heaven. The Sunday school was a delightful place to her. It was charming to see with what joyousness she would enter the Sunday school hall and pass to her place in her class. But the angels came for her, and her name has been entered upon the school-roll of heaven's eternal Sabbath. E. S. SMITH.

THE IMMENSITY OF THE FIELD.—The conversion of the Chinese is a stupendous task, and the obstacles in the way are very formidable. The empire is one of the largest the world has ever seen. It is much larger than the whole of Europe. The simple immensity of the scale on which the country is laid out often exercises a depressing influence on the spirit of the missionary. The population of the country is, in fact, almost beyond conception. There is not much reason to question the substantial accuracy of the general opinion that there are four hundred millions of people in China. And these hundreds of millions are welded together and bound by language, custom, education, religion and government. It is not the work of a day to move that mighty people, and a wise man will not expect to see great changes taking place in their moral, religious and social life without many years of hard toil and earnest crying to God.

BAD temper bites at both ends; it makes one's self nearly as miserable as it does other people.

THE LAW OF LIFE.

BY ELIZABETH W. DENISON.

A branch of yellow autumn leaves,
So steeped in sunshine, through and through
They seemed like stuff that Nature weaves
When all her homespun work she spurns,
And from her loom, that glows and burns
With all the splendors it achieves,
Doth show what she loves best to do.

I held it twixt me and the sun—
The lovely, shining beech-tree spray;
The breeze blew fresh, and one by one
Came fluttering down the leafless fair,
Till all the twigs were brown and bare.
"Ah! thus," I said, "my life doth run,
And thus my hopes are flown away."

A foolish thought. In vision clear
God's answer came to comfort me.
"The golden hopes would soon be sere;
They dropped away to leave a place
For nobler life and richer grace;
Behold where swelling buds appear
To crown anew the leafless tree!"

The Resurrection of the Witnesses.

BY ROBERT PATTERSON, D. D.

But now the providence of God, in a most wonderful way, opened up a new and unexpected source of testimony to the verneity of his word. Napoleon the First, invading Egypt for the purposes of his ambition, took with him a body of savans who were enraptured by the discovery of the pictures and inscriptions on the tombs and monuments; and subsequent investigators add yearly to their discoveries. The Egyptians were possessed with the same passion for immortality and fame as other nations. They knew not the art of securing publicity by the printing-press, but they knew the secret of securing millenniums of notoriety. They more than compensated for the limited number of their audience by the endless duration of their exhibition. And so they painted their names and portraits, and all their possessions, and the minutest details of their occupations, almost photographing for us the appearance of their daily lives. Harper's Weekly does not present more graphic illustrations of our American daily life than these tombs do of Egyptian manners and customs during many centuries. These pictures have been so well preserved, by the dryness of the climate and the close-fitting stone doors of the tombs, that they are perfectly legible, their colors bright and fresh, and all the particulars capable of comparison with the Mosaic reference to Egyptian manners and customs. In every instance where comparison is possible they confirm the accuracy of the Mosaic narrative. And the number of such comparisons is wonderful. Macaulay gives half a dozen illustrations.

Von Bohlen, a German commentator, who is a great authority with the Broad church clergy in all matters of biblical criticism, informs us that "the author of the Pentateuch represents Joseph, in most manifest opposition to the sacredness of beasts, commanding to prepare flesh for food," etc. But now every Sabbath scholar who can lay his hand upon Wilkinson's Ancient Egyptians, and turn to chapter third, can see engravings copied from the tombs, showing the Egyptians killing and cooking and curing sheep and geese and fish and ducks, and tables covered with all kinds of roast and boiled meats. And still more decisive proof has been discovered; a table, with the shriveled remains of fowls still visible upon it, has actually been found.

The same learned critic informs his readers that Moses' account of the Israelites' brick-making is an anachronism, borrowed from the Babylonish captivity, the scribe transferring to the first bondage one of the incidents of the second; since bricks, he says, were not suitable building material in Egypt, nor used there for that purpose. But he had not read of the brick pyramid of Dashour, nor seen the bricks, now found in most museums, bearing the seal of Tothmes the Third, of a period preceding the Exodus.

Even in such a minute and exceptional particular as the occasional making of bricks without straw to bind the mud together, which the Bible narrates as occurring once in the Israelites' bondage, it is wonderful to find that the ruins of Heliopolis, one of the cities fortified by the Hebrews (lxx,) Palmer tells us, furnish "many sun-baked bricks bearing the stamp of Tothmes the Third, which show, on being broken, that they are made without straw." (Egyptian Chronicles i, 194.)

Colenso and others object to the name "Hebraics" as an anachronism; but in a hieratic papyrus at Leyden we find the following remarkable sentence: "Give corn to the soldiers of the Egyptians, and to the Hebrews who draw stones for the house of Rameses, beloved of Amun." The writer who furnishes this (Ebers Ägypten und die Bücher Moses) devotes two hundred pages to the tenth chapter of Genesis, of which he says: "The author possessed a fullness of ithnographical and geographical knowledge which can be explained only by a connection partly with the maritime Phœnician cities, partly with Egypt; and he pronounces the Mosaic references to Egypt to be "genuinely Egyptian."

It has been gravely agreed by Wolff, Vater, Hartmann and other critics that alphabetic writing was not known in Moses' day; that he could not have had any better writing materials than boards, or plates of lead or brass, as parchment was not discovered till invented by Eumenes, King of Pergamos, a thousand years later than the Exodus; and we have calculations how many wagon-loads of planks and how many tons of brass would be necessary for a copy of the Pentateuch.

But now come our Egyptologists who discover that the use of parchment was common among the living Egyptians, and was buried with their dead twelve hundred years before Eumenes was born. Next comes the discovery of paper made from the papyrus, covered with cursive writing. M. Prisse discovered, and M. Chabas has translated, a papyrus written in the hieratic character, written by a royal author of the fifth dynasty, which goes back, therefore, beyond the days of Abraham. Finally we have public schools for the young Egyptian nobles, described at that early period. Nahrai, one of the nobility of the reign of Amenemles the Second, cotemporary with Abraham, tells us he was keeper of the sacred goat of Beni Hassan, constable of the palace of Beni Hassan, and steward of the land tax for the support of the schools for the sons of the kings of Lower Egypt.

Hesiod, Plutarch and others, having limited the discovery of iron to the period of the siege of Troy, the opponents of the Pentateuch accuse Moses of an anachronism of a couple of thousand years in representing Tubal Cain as the inventor of iron weapons. They found confirmation in the use of bronze by the ancient Egyptians; which they said nobody would use who could iron. And everybody has heard of the famous stone, bronze and iron ages in the progress of the ape to manhood. But now comes Belzoni and deposits in the British Museum a steel sickle which he found under the feet of the Sphynx. And, to make assurance doubly sure, Colonel Howard Vyse found imbedded between two of the stones of the Great Pyramid, and removed by blasting a piece of iron, a copy of the photograph of which is now before me.

Our anti-Bible critics object that Moses represents Abraham as receiving from Pharaoh sheep, camels and asses, and describing the vine as growing in Egypt, and flax as a common crop at the time of the Exodus. All these, it is alleged, are anachronisms; the vine could not grow in Egypt on account of the inundation; and others were not introduced for centuries afterward. The book, therefore, must have been written in Syria, by one ignorant of Egypt.

But now even our children have been familiarized with copies of pictures from the tombs in Osburn and Wilkinson's books, of kids browsing on the vines, of vine trellises and wine presses, of long lines of asses and sheep and goats and figures of kneeling camels. The abundance of linen in the bandages of the mummies is familiar to all frequenters of museums.

Similar objections have been founded on the presumed anachronism of representing Abraham weighing silver coin, and Rebekah using gold ornaments, and in general to the representation of society as in a civilized state at that early date. But the monuments confirm the Bible representations of the early civilization of mankind. Says Osburn (Monumental History, II, 291, speaking of the ancient civilization of this degraded country: "This fact, so important to the history of Egypt, exactly coincides with the Jewish account of the sojourn of the Israelites in that country. They were the subjects of a great kingdom, strong in foreign alliances and foreign commerce, and therefore their increase was very rapid."

Indeed the Bible represents the surrounding natives as advanced far beyond the savage state at a very early period, and the monuments confirm this statement. "The force of Sheth, so far as it appears in the field, consisted wholly of war chariots. We have already noticed the same peculiarity in the armament of this people in another representation of them, and pointed out its exact coincidence with the battle array of Moab and Ammon in the Scripture history."—Monumental History (II, 404, 503.) The ability to equip and maintain such a force demonstrates a military organization equivalent to that which would maintain an equal number of pieces of modern artillery.

The Great Pyramid remains an imperishable monument of the astronomical, mathematical and engineering capabilities of mankind two thousand years before Christ. This oldest of all human creation combines its testimony with that of the Bible, and that of the paintings on the tombs of Egypt, to the primitive civilization of the human race. Man, created in the image of God, was created a civilized being, and placed in civilized society, and instructed by his Father in heaven. At least the forefathers of all Christian men were thus educated by their Creator. But if any one desires the validity of all sacred history and profane monuments, and insists that he is developed from an ape, I will cease to contradict him.—Interior.

The Burmese.

In the general ability of the men to read and write, in the social position of the women, in the absence of any law of primogeniture, and consequent general diffusion of landed property, and in their temperate habits, the Burmese are incontestably in advance of all European nations. The women do most of the trading, superintend farms, advise in law cases. The wife keeps the money, and her husband goes to her when he needs any. Married women can acquire and hold property in their own names. Such a notice as the following is not a solitary instance: "Twenty persons, including women, have formed themselves into a mercantile firm, and have obtained a monopoly for the sale in the Bhamo district of salt for the Shan States." Women can sue and be sued; can obtain legal divorces on the plea of incompatibility of disposition; yet the suits relating to marriage, dower and divorce in all the courts of British Burmah for 1869 70 were only one thousand one hundred and seventy-eight, in a population of two and a half millions.

According to the Burmah books a good wife "knows when her husband is hungry, and, that he may eat, puts before him the best food in the kindest way; and dresses him becomingly, seeing that his clothes are not old or dirty; and keeps him in mind of his work and his duty. As friends consult each other regarding their mutual profit and happiness, and assist each other, she, having consulted her husband, lends her assistance and looks on; and believes to her husband's relations as to her own, and does not dispute his authority; and if he goes to the chief's house or other place, she waits till his return, and eats not her meal till she eats it in company with him."

The men are generally able to read and write, and many of them know also the principles of arithmetic. In one place, with a population of a little less than ten thousand, the government inspector of schools ascertained last spring that 66.6 per cent. of the boys were attending school, and but 3.3 per cent. of the girls.

Even now the Burmese may be ranked as the most temperate people in the world, and yet, since English civilization came among them, they have very much degenerated from their former principles of strict abstinence, and of speedy punishment by flogging for such a breach of decorum and decency as drunkenness is. Owing in part to their temperate habits, and in part to their being no law of primogeniture, there are very few beggars in Burmah. In British Burmah the average size of landed estates is estimated at fifteen acres. The people are intelligent, quick of apprehension and quick of application; courteous, tolerant and well governed; and constitute a fine field for missionary labors, which is now in the hands of our Baptist brethren.—Missionary Herald.

BILL SANDUSKY was something of a character. In the old days, when anybody could get a pilot's license for five dollars, Bill got himself made into a pilot for nearly all the Western rivers, and vaunted his knowledge lavishly to the captain of a new steamer about starting up Red river. Upon getting into the dangerous part the captain expressed some doubts as to Bill's familiarity with that peculiarly difficult river, whereupon the confident pilot replied:

"Why, cap'n, I know every rock and snag in the whole creek."

Just at that moment the boat struck a sawyer, which ran up through the hurricane deck, between him and the captain.

"There, cap'n," said he, "I told you I knew where every snag was, and there's one of 'em!"

A FARMER took his wife to a grand concert, and, after listening with apparent enjoyment, the pair became suddenly interested in one of the grand choruses: "All we, like sheep, have gone astray." First a sharp soprano voice exclaimed: "All we, like sheep"—

Next a deep voice uttered, in the most earnest tones:

"All we, like sheep"—

Then all the singers at once asserted:

"All we, like sheep"—

"Well, I don't!" exclaimed old Rusticus to his partner. "I like beef and bacon, but I can't bear sheep meat!"

There was an audible titter in that vicinity, but the splendid music attracted attention from the pair, and they quietly slipped out.

AN eloquent clergyman tells a good story about one of his early professional experiences. He was trying to preach to a rural Yorkshire congregation, and was consciously making a very poor fist of it. He had hardly announced his text when the "pulpit fright" marked him for its prey. His brain was in a muddle, and his tongue clave to the roof of his mouth. He was stumbling and stammering along from bad to worse, when a warm-hearted old brother in the gallery suddenly roared out with all the force of his healthy Yorkshire lungs: "Lard, Lard, loose the lad, and let 'im go." It broke the spell. The "lad's" nerves steadied themselves, his head cleared, and the sermon was a decided success.

"VELL, now, I vill tell schust how it vas," said a thick-headed Dutch witness in Canada recently, for the twentieth time, after receiving as many reprimands from the judge for telling what his wife told him, instead of what he saw. He gave the statement very concisely, but to the consternation of the court, in reply to the opposing counsel's question as to how he knew it all, came the old answer: "My vife told me." Losing all patience, the judge roared out: "Suppose your wife should tell you the heavens had fallen, what should you think?" Without the slightest hesitation the witness replied: "Vell, I should tink dey vas down!"

SOMETIME AGO a well-known angler was fishing in a trouting stream in Scotland, on a Monday, when he was accosted by the minister, who asked him as to his success. The angler, after replying, said to the minister: "Dae ye no try the rod yersel'?" "Oh, no," said the minister, with pious awe and eyes upturned; "I am a fisher of men." "Oh, indeed," replied Sandy, "but I doot ye're nae great hand o't, for I lookit into your creel (basket) yesterday, and it was unco empty."

WHILE still associated with the Presbyterians, Leighton was called to account in a synod of that body for not "preaching up the times"—that is, making current controversies the theme of his pulpit addresses.

"Who does preach up the times?" he asked at last.

"We all do," was the reply.

"Then," said Leighton, "if all of you preach up the times, you may surely allow one poor brother to preach up Jesus Christ and eternity."

PROF. DONATI, of Florence, the discoverer of the great comet of 1858, distinguished also as a spectroscopist, died September 20, of cholera, in Vienna, where he had arrived only two days previously.

AN old negro woman was heard to exclaim recently: "Thomas Jefferson, you and James Madison come into the house, and bring Abe Lincoln along with you, or I'll reach for you, sinah!"

IN a Dublin newspaper appeared the following: "A number of deaths are unavoidably postponed."

A Winning Way.

There once lived in a certain household a damsel from the Green Isle of Erin, whose name was Mary Ann. To a singularly ungraceful and bulging figure, a walk resembling that of a lame and discouraged duck, and a very marked and obtrusive squint, Mary Ann added the unfortunate distinction of having had the small-pox. Her face was seamed and scarred from the topmost bit of her forehead to the lowermost bit of her double chin; and, altogether, she made, upon one who saw her for the first time, the impression of something at once pitiful, sad and grotesque. A woman who has made an utter failure in the line of beauty is always an object of compassion, and, in a lesser degree, of wonderment.

To Mary Ann, as to prettier demoiselles, however, there came one day of triumph and delight. A youthful compatriot of her own came a-wooing; and to him it was nothing that her eyes squinted, that her hair was carroty and that her face was a sight to behold. He loved her; and his love, like an enchanted mirror, transformed her ugliness into satisfying comeliness and grace. She pleased him, and his courting sped smoothly on. "You see, ma'am," said Mary Ann to her mistress, as, on her wedding-day, she came, in sky-blue gown and emerald ribbons, to be congratulated, "it is not my beauty attracted Pat. It was all my winning way."

We feel like preaching a little sermon to our readers about the essential charm there is in a winning way. Mary Ann's observation had in it a deeper truth than she, in her innocent self-glorification, dreamed. We have seen charming faces, fresh in tint, and dimpling with youthful loveliness, that absolutely seemed to have been bestowed by mistake on the wrong person, so flat and glaring was the contradiction between their gentleness and the ungentle manner of their possessors. We have seen really unselfish and noble actions utterly marred and spoiled by the fact that they were accompanied by a manner that was rude or ill-tempered or crusty. Very often indolent and selfish men and women acquire an ill-deserved reputation for amiability in this world simply because they have a way of looking pleasant and smiling benignantly, no matter what happens, while the really kind, good, self-denying disposition is unrecognized because it does not think it worth its while to show how fair it is.

Manner is a very important thing. Simple, gracious courtesy, politeness to the people one meets; recognition, by thanks and by prompt expressions in kind, of obliging acts: in short, a winning way, is of the utmost value in society and in our homes. We hate veneering and artifice: and, in so far as manner is a putting on, instead of a growth from something inbred, it is artificial, and of the nature of veneering. The trouble with it, when it is merely assumed like a dress, is that in sudden emergencies it will fail of its end, or crack like an ill-fitting mask, and betray the real nature beneath. Let the nature be sincere and genial, and then let the manner suit it, and grow from it as the flower from the bud, and we shall have the result that our good, plain but lovable Mary Ann called "a winning way."—Hearth and Home.

BAD BARGAINS.—Once a Sabbath school teacher remarked that he who buys the truth makes a good bargain, and inquired if any scholar recollected an instance in Scripture of a bad bargain.

"I do," replied a boy; "Esau made a bad bargain when he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage."

A second said: "Judas made a bad bargain when he sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver."

A third boy observed: "Our Lord tells us that he makes a bad bargain who, to gain the whole world, loses his own soul."

"Boy, what will you take to tell a lie for me?" asked a mate of one of the little cabin boys on board of a fine British ship. "Not for all the gold of California, sir," was the prompt answer of the lad.

A SWEET ANSWER.—A little boy and girl, each five years old, were playing by the roadside. The boy became angry at something, and struck his playmate a sharp blow on the cheek, whereupon she sat down and began to cry.

The boy stood looking on a minute, and then said:

"I didn't mean to hurt you, Katie. I am sorry."

The little girl's face brightened instantly. The sobs were hushed, and she said:

"Well, if you are sorry, it don't hurt me."—Ladies' Repository.

A NOVEL REASON.—A friend, visiting in a minister's family, where the parents were very strict in regard to the children's Sabbath deportment, was confidentially informed by one of the little girls that "she would like to be a minister."

"Why?" inquired the visitor, rather puzzled to understand what had given the child so sudden an admiration for that calling. She was quickly enlightened by the prompt reply:

"So I could holler on Sunday!"—National Baptist.

TWO NEIGHBORS had a long and envenomed litigation about a small spring, which they both claimed. The judge, wearied out with the case, at last said: "What is the use of making such a fuss about a little water?" "Your honor will see the use of it," replied one of the lawyers, "when I inform you that the parties are both milkmen!" The roar of laughter which followed proved that the entire audience saw the point.

THE Pacific says the California Congregational churches have taken a step forward in organizing a woman's board of missions for the Pacific coast, and already local auxiliary societies are forming at different points.

PROF. MAX MÜLLER, the noted German savant, at the invitation of Dean Stanley, has been lecturing in behalf of Christian missions, in Westminster Abbey, London. His lecture is pronounced fresh, luminous and able.

A WESTERN exchange says: "Rev. Seth A. Clark, a Baptist missionary in the western part of Kansas, has a portable church tent capable of seating seven hundred persons. He has two good mules, and a wagon on springs, furnished expressly for the transportation of his church from place to place."

REVIVAL.—The revival movement at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in which Mr. Moody, of Chicago, has taken a prominent part, appears to be sustained with an earnestness that marks it as something genuine. Never was the town in such an excited state, yet the excitement is of the most healthy character.

GREAT prosperity has attended the work of the London Missionary Society at Nundial, in the Kurnool district of South India, during the past year. The number of persons now connected with the mission is 1,500, an addition of 861 during the year; 712 of these are baptized; 878 under instruction preparatory to baptism.

BISHOP CUMMINS, in company with Bishop Cheney, of Chicago, and pretty nearly the whole synod of the Reformed Episcopal Church, has visited Peoria, Illinois, where he spoke to a crowded congregation in the Second Presbyterian church. Notice was given that a church would be organized in that city on the following Sunday.

THE Jesuit missionaries in Madagascar are making rapid progress in their work. According to statistics given in one of their publications, they have now seventy-four places of worship in the central province, and forty-four priests, sisters of mercy, and teachers in Antananarivo and vicinity. Their work already extends to nearly every important village.

DURING the present fiscal year of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions five missionaries have returned to their fields, two to Syria, one to the Gaboon and Corisco mission, and two to Japan. During the same time twenty new missionaries have been sent out—three to the Gaboon and Corisco mission, two to Syria, two to India, one to Siam, eight to China, three to Japan and one to Brazil.

THE minutes of the thirty-first annual meeting of the Bassein Sgau Karen Association Baptist present the following summary of their work: 65 churches, 59 pastors, 21 of whom are ordained, 54 school teachers, 351 baptized during the year, 261 received by letter, 268 dismissed by letter, 94 died, present membership 6,047, 4,516 pupils in their various schools, including 93 young men studying at Rangoon and other stations. Total contributions for the year, $6,755.

THE Wesleyan Methodists have two weekly newspapers, published in London, the Watchman and the Methodist Recorder. A third paper is about to be started, to be called the Methodist. The Christian Advocate says: "The new journal will be advanced in its opinions, and will prove the advocate of many measures, both in and out of the circle of Methodism, which are rapidly gathering strength and demanding full discussion."

LOCAL PREACHERS.—The Rev. W. H. Kincaid, in the Christian Advocate, says that within the past few years the work of local preachers in the West has become more systematic and thorough, that at Indianapolis they have started several mission churches which will soon be charges in the Conference, that the faithful labors of these lay preachers in Pittsburg, in connection with the city mission work, had been greatly instrumental for good, and that in many other places substantial results had flowed from organized efforts.

DECREASE OF FRIENDS.—The "Friends" have been holding a conference in London to take into consideration the condition of the body, and in particular to inquire into the causes which are retarding its increase and producing a marked diminution in the attendance at many of the meetings. An English paper states that in 1660 there were estimated to be 60,000 Friends in England, but that the number now is less. In 1800 there were 413 meeting-houses; half a century later there were 371. The same fact of decrease is noticeable in the United States.

CONFESSION in the Church of England is brought to the front again by a declaration on the subject signed by Dr. Pusey and several other "priests." It is intended to correct "the serious misapprehensions" on the subject which are widely prevalent, and it sums up thus: "While, then, we hold that the formularies of the Church of England do not authorize any priest to teach that private confession is a condition indispensable to the forgiveness of sin after baptism, and the Church of England does not justify any parish priest in requiring private confession as a condition of receiving holy communion, we also hold that all who, under the circumstances above stated, have claimed the privilege of private confession are entitled to it; and that the clergy are directed under certain circumstances to 'move' persons to such confession." Dr. Pusey is not a bishop, but his word will have more weight with the High Church party than that of any dozen bishops, and the principles of action laid down by him are pretty certain to be generally adopted and put in practice by the English Ritualists.—Independent.

SANTA SOPHIA, of Constantinople, after the Church of the Nativity at Bethlehem, the oldest Christian temple in existence, dating over fifteen centuries back, has been so protected by buttresses made necessary by earthquake shocks, and so closely built upon by modern dwellings on certain sides, as to be completely deprived of its original exterior architectural beauty. Lately, however, the neighborhood of the great mosque has been cleared of obstructions, particularly on the west side, where the area thus obtained is to be surrounded by a wall, surmounted by an iron railing. Not long since, while workmen were engaged in digging near the southwest corner of this space, to lay the foundation of the wall, an archeologist from abroad, visiting the place, noticed an ancient stone of unusual value there, bearing an important inscription, and he at once proceeded to make a sketch of it. Whereupon one of the Kura laborers offered to sell it to him for a couple of Turkish liras, about $9; and, as his offer was not accepted, the rude Vandal shattered the relic to pieces by a blow of his hammer. Fortunately a copy of the inscription remains in the possession of an English resident, who says the loss falls chiefly on the Moslem authorities, for the record pertained to a name they greatly reverence.

GERMANIC RELIGION.—Bishop Foster, of the M. E. Church, who has just returned from a missionary tour in Europe, was at the late anniversary of the Missionary Society, held in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and in his address made the following remarks: "Germany was not a heathen country, but claims to be the most Christian country in the world. But Germany was an unchristian Christian country—the most unchristian of all Christian countries. The Reformation had left it nominally a Protestant country, and Germany was formerly superstitious, but now it was an infidel country. The male population of Germany did not attend church. The most of the people who claim to be religious attend church about twice a year. The speaker had gone into a cathedral in Germany to hear one of the most eloquent preachers in the country. The church, which would hold 3,000 people, contained 37 men—15 of whom were Americans—and 250 women. To ask a German if he is a Christian is to insult him. A Christian, according to the German idea, was a man who had been born in a Christian country and baptized."

BISHOP HARE, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, pays the following tribute to the self-denying missionaries who are carrying the standard of the cross among the Indian tribes on our extreme outposts, viz., the Lower Yanktonnais, Lower Brules and at the Cheyenne Agency: "The missionaries among them have it as their lot to see attention on the qui vive when they speak of rations, and flagging when they tell of the bread which endureth unto eternal life; to be daily frustrated in their efforts to enlighten, by finding that the maxims which are axioms with them, are to their auditors strange and even incomprehensible; and to spend months in winning a reputation for common decency of life, because the representatives of their race who preceded them have generally forfeited it. They are heroes and heroines, and that not in the lower realms of courage. What I know of the history of missionary work in other lands, what I have seen of the progress of other Indians, and what I have seen of signs of awakening among the very people among whom these brethren labor, produce in me the happy conviction that their day of reward is surely coming. I trust that the boarding schools which they will conduct this winter will be both present comforts to the laborers and potent means to the end for which they yearn."

IT IS A FACT often commented upon by missionary speakers, as well as those who labor for the Seamen's Friend Society, that "Jack ashore" is not a good specimen of the Christianity or the civilization of the countries whence the missionaries have come. Indeed, the best inclined of the natives often find Jack their greatest stumbling-block in the way out of heathen darkness into the Christian's light. It is more than rhetoric to say that one vicious or drunken sailor can upset not only the pineapple and orange stands of the heathen, but with the same kick of his foot the work of many months of missionary labor. Whatever is done, then, to keep Jack sober and to help him to act like a man and a Christian is genuine missionary work, and deserves to be helped and recorded as such, to say nothing of the benefit done to a class of men who do not receive any too much attention. Good work done for the sailors is on both "home" and "foreign" field. It gives us great pleasure to publish the fact that the Christian sailors of the British and American Asiatic squadrons, cruising in the seas of China and Japan, have, with the aid of the Christian landsmen and landswomen of Shanghai, in China, and Yokohama, in Japan, secured permanent buildings for the use of sailors when on shore. These rooms have been neatly furnished, supplied with temperance drinks and eatables, books, newspapers, games, etc. Every rational means is being tried to compete with the dram-shops and low houses, to win men from temptation, as well as to afford a rendezvous for Christian and temperate sailors. Temperance societies have lately been started in both Shanghai and Yokohama, which are now in a very flourishing condition. At the prayer meetings on Sunday and Wednesday nights, at both these ports, a large proportion of the company are sailors, and it is not too much to hope that, with God's blessing, the heathen Japanese may rescind the orders frequently issued when exhibitions in Kioto and other places were about to open, which are couched in words to this effect: "All classes of foreigners are invited to attend, except sailors; as experience has taught the Japanese authorities that this class of men are not to be trusted to wander freely among the Japanese people." One of the most promising prognostications of permanent success in this movement is that it originated with the sailors themselves.—Independent.

The Weak Place.

There is a weak place in every man—a point at which he is most liable to break down in his moral and religious integrity. There are sins of which a Christian stands in little danger. They are far from him in relation to habit, tendencies of thought or of appetite. If he gives way at all it will be in some other direction. In our estimate of others we have reached decided convictions concerning the location of the peril. One is almost certain, by reason of temperament, to be betrayed into anger and possibly into profane words or violent and murderous acts. His nature is like a magazine of powder, or like a warehouse filled with inflammable or combustible materials. Let the chance spark fall, let the incendiary's match be struck, and a conflagration suddenly wraps everything in its devouring flames.

At sea the dangers are few in number, but they are great and well-defined. They are not such as surround those who travel in private carriages, where the horses may take fright, or the vehicle be hurled into a ravine by negligent driving. Neither are they such as the traveler on a railroad has reason to apprehend, where defective rails, weak trestles and bridges or a cracked wheel may be the undoing of a train. The sea has its own perils—there may be fire, collision, a leak or wreck from storm. The ship itself is no better than the most inferior plank in it, and the wreck must come from some one of a limited number of causes. He who ventures up in a balloon comes within the range of accidents which neither the mariner nor the landsman has reason to fear. He is at the mercy of air currents which cannot be foreseen or controlled. The silken bubble which bears him up may be rent in a moment, and in the descent the frail basket and its occupant are dashed to pieces.

In the physical constitution some conjecture may be made as to the organs which are likely to first give way. The lungs are weak, and pulmonary complaints are hereditary. The brain is unduly developed, and head symptoms are the leading ones in sickness. The invasion of fatal disease, as to its point of attack, may be indicated by the peculiarities of the physical constitution, and also by conditions of climate, topography of the region inhabited, the relations of land and water, altitude and surfaces, and the diseases which are known to prevail. There are sections where malarious influences predominate, and others where the digestive organs are especially liable to become impaired. We might also take into account the occupation, the exercise, exposure to weather, and the proportion of mental and physical labor. In the mental organization and endowments a full and complete mind is the exception. The defect or the strength may be in the memory, the imagination or the reasoning powers. The will, the sensibilities, the intellect, are not equal, and the great infirmity, the overshadowing incompleteness, and that which mars and defaces the character, is in one of these.

In the spiritual nature, and in every individual life, there is something of this sort—a tendency to sin, in some one direction, and a want of strength and robustness in reference to certain powers of resistance to the enticements of evil. The weak place, be it in temper, appetite, unbelief, pleasure or avarice, is to be guarded. By so doing the soul may be kept, and made strong for every work and trial. The good seaman watches the exposed points—the perils which are peculiar to his business. A good general does the same in the line of defense, putting courage and vigilance and every conceivable precaution upon the most vulnerable places. In the care we take of our health, the constitutional habit, the well-ascertained diathesis, the predisposition to some particular disease, are all considered, and life is prolonged and suffering prevented. In things spiritual the thought, watchfulness and prayer, wisely and truly directed, may correct the evil. If given to appetite there must be a cautious and wakeful care, lest the bounds of virtue and temperance be passed. If the trouble lies in the direction of inordinate affection, doubt, covetousness, selfishness, to these unfortunate and guilty proclivities must the attention of the prayerful and penitent spirit be called.

Granted that every one has a point of peculiar weakness, are we always sure of finding out what it is? In order to lay aside "the sin which doth so easily beset us," we must know what it is. This is perhaps the greatest difficulty with some. It is a wile worthy of the devil that he should lead the soul astray, on the wrong scent, and that he should bring the tender conscience to overlook the real danger while aroused and distressed about something of little moment. The concern may be about that wherein we are strong, while the point of peril, the weak place, is left to the invasion of the enemy. It takes as much grace to discover the weak link as it does to strengthen it when found. The invader has entered the castle at an unsuspected approach, while we are busied with some entrance that has never been seriously threatened.

One Cause.

Dr. A. L. P. Green, writing in the Western Methodist, speaks of one cause of the loss of power in the pulpit as follows:

One cause of the decline of pulpit power, in my opinion, has arisen from a clamor, on the part of church-going people, for short sermons. This demand has been yielded to by the ministry to an extent which has, in many congregations, so lessened the efficiency of the pulpit as to render it almost powerless for good.

No great gospel truth can be presented, elaborated and enforced in fifteen or twenty minutes; and just so soon as there is a conflict between the "service" and the sermon, and the rights of the latter are intrenched upon by the former, the aggressive element will suffer damage, and the church will, sooner or later, become formal and ultimately decline; and when once other agencies shall be substituted in the place of the pulpit a departure is taken from the plan adopted by the great Head of the church for subduing and Christianizing the world. There may an increased interest be taken in those means and agencies by which the church is to be built up and the cause of God promoted among men—such as Sunday schools, prayer meetings, experience meetings, religious books and periodicals, all of which are very valuable in their place; but to substitute these for the preaching of the gospel will defeat the great object contemplated. It is by preaching the gospel that the powers of darkness are to be driven back; by preaching Christ and him crucified the batteries of sin and unbelief are to be silenced, and the strongholds of infidelity are to be carried; for by preaching the church becomes aggressive and drives back the enemy, and opens the way for other agencies. It will not do to say that the preacher, by a lecture of fifteen minutes once a week, shall accomplish the great work which is to be accomplished by the pulpit. To limit the preacher to any particular number of minutes is not to be allowed. The preacher should have an object to accomplish in every sermon, and he, and he alone, can determine when that object is accomplished.

I should much rather see the pulpit relieved by the laity of all other work or employment. Let the singing, the public prayer and all matters that pertain to finance be taken in hand by others, and let the preacher do nothing but preach and attend to necessary pastoral work. To this end let him turn all his thoughts, all his time, all his strength; let him be handed from pulpit to pulpit, with the everlasting gospel to preach. Let every other duty and obligation be taken from him, and let him be a man of one work. Let him go, and as he goes preach. Let him preach Christ and him crucified; then the pulpit will become a power, and the preacher a messenger sent from God, not to serve tables, not to take charge of temporal things, not to settle abstract and difficult questions in science, not to take charge of the politics of the day; but let him be a man of one work, and let that one work be the preaching of the gospel. A preacher of a partial consecration will never accomplish the full work of a gospel preacher. It is a work which requires all the powers of mind and body, and when given up wholly to this work he may still say: "Who is sufficient for these things?"

Now these may be regarded by some as extreme views, but let the reader stop and think of the character of the work to be done, and then ask himself the question: What time will the minister of Christ have to appropriate to any work?

The Papers.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate is the largest of our Advocate family, and a first-rate religious newspaper. Dr. McAnally has the pen of a ready writer, and keeps it bright with exercise. Under the above caption he notices our Southern Methodist press as follows:

OUR OWN.—We have begun the year with encouraging prospects, and so far are gratified by the promptness with which our subscribers are renewing and the agents sending in names of new subscribers. We can, however, bear a great many more of the same sort. Let them come, and the sooner the better. This is obliged to be the paper of the West, and we try to make it all that it ought to be. Hope that ere long we may present it in new type, when it will have a somewhat better appearance.

The Nashville Advocate seems to have begun the year well and with encouraging prospects for the future. No change has been made in its general appearance or character. In the publisher's address, given in the first number of the new volume, he speaks very highly of its past, present and prospective future.

The Southern Advocate keeps on the even tenor of its way, and as to its appearance and matter is pretty much as it has been for years past—a good, reliable paper.

The Richmond Christian Advocate, the oldest of all the Advocates of the South, has new type, makes a very neat appearance, and commences the year by giving the first chapter of the editor's narrative "of the great revival in the Southern armies during the late war."

The Raleigh Christian Advocate is also printed on new type, is a large, well-conducted paper, and worthy the patronage it receives.

The Baltimore Methodist goes on without any noticeable change, and calls loudly and earnestly upon its delinquent subscribers to pay up.

The Western Methodist, published at Memphis, Tennessee, also begins the year without noticeable change in appearance or matter; so does the Christian Advocate of Galveston, Texas, and so does the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, which is perhaps the most neatly printed paper in the connection.

The subscription price of these papers severally is $2 a year in advance.

The Nashville and Texas Advocates are published in sixteen-page form, the Western and Baltimore Methodists, New Orleans and St. Louis Advocates in eight-page form, the Southern, Raleigh and Richmond Advocates in the old folio form.

Beside these, there are several other papers published in the interests of our denomination, such as:

The Holston Methodist, a sprightly and useful paper, published at Morristown, Tennessee.

The Religious Herald, published at Seddon, Virginia, by Rev. William Hicks. This also is in the bounds of the Holston Conference.

The Christian Neighbor, an excellent little paper, published at Columbia, South Carolina, by John A. Elkins. Rev. S. H. Browne, editor.

There may be some others which we do not now remember. We should have remarked that the Holston Methodist is published and edited by Messrs. Price and Thomas, who, as editors, are often called upon to pay their respects to such distinguished characters as Bishop Haven and Dr. Cobleigh, editor of the Methodist Advocate, published at Atlanta, Georgia, in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) which paper some time since called upon the editors of the Holston Methodist to repent of the sin of taking up arms against the government. To the call the editors of the Holston Methodist respond in a long article, ably defending their course, and concluding with the following:

"We would inform our brother that when we shall have been seized with the pangs of repentance for having sinned against the government of the United States, alias the Methodist Episcopal Church, we will either knock for admittance into said church or propose to go to Congress."

The papers published in the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will not suffer by comparison with those of any other denomination in the country or in the world. But stay, we must not omit the Pacific Methodist, a very handsome, neatly-printed, and every way excellent eight-page paper, published at San Francisco, California. It has entered its fourteenth volume; has done and is doing excellent service on the Pacific coast in behalf of our church. Edited and published by W. B. Parsons. Terms, $4 per annum, in advance.

Death of Richard Jones.

The death of this well-known citizen of New Orleans occurred at two o'clock A. M., January 29. To the community at large, and to the most of his intimate friends, the announcement came with no previous note of warning. He was at his desk in the New Orleans National Bank, of which he had been cashier from its organization, as recently as Saturday, the twenty-fourth; he was also at Sunday school and church on Sunday morning, but before the dawn of Thursday his spirit was in paradise. He died from a violent attack of congestion, induced by a cold contracted some days before he became seriously ill. It is not often that the death of a private citizen creates so profound a sensation or excites such widespread sorrow and regret.

Richard Jones was born in Dublin, Ireland, July 9, 1819, and settled in Montgomery, Alabama, in the winter of 1836. He resided there until 1860, when he came to New Orleans. He was from his youth constantly occupied with business, connected with banking and mercantile pursuits, and throughout his entire history most conscientious and blameless. His character for honor, integrity and uprightness was without a stain. He was a man of fine endowments and cultivation, of large information, and of the greatest benevolence. He had a capacity for friendship, and was well qualified to enjoy and adorn society. Considerate, refined and genial, it is not wonderful that he had so many warm and devoted friends.

He joined the Methodist Church in Montgomery, Alabama, in his early manhood, and had filled almost every position. He was at times class-leader, trustee, steward, Sunday school teacher and local preacher. For several years past, and up to the time of his death, he was the leader of a weekly class, regular teacher of a Bible class in the Sunday school, and frequently in the pulpit. He was an instructive preacher, always ready to go where his services were most needed, and a most reliable and efficient help to the church in this important office. He was especially gifted in prayer, always edifying, and leading the devotions of a congregation with great power. His piety combined rare intelligence with deep spirituality, and was the highest type of charity realized in the spirit and daily life. During a long and most intimate acquaintance we never heard from him a word of harshness or unkindness, nor anything that could be construed as an unfavorable reflection upon the character and conduct of another. Somewhat brusque in manner, robust and even rugged in body and in mind, he was tender, refined and most gentle in heart.

His life was one of vicissitudes, at one time prosperous, and during the last years passing through adversity and sore bereavement. Under these trials religion was to him a warfare, at times a hard conflict; but he conquered, and was chastened and purified by the fires through which he passed. He did not faint in the day of adversity, but maintained his integrity and was faithful to his God. He loved his home, and was a pattern in the relations of husband, father, and as the priest and head of his household. Take him all in all, his was a most exemplary life, and a character most worthy to be loved and honored. The Felicity Street church, where his membership had been, and where he had statedly worshiped during the last fourteen years, was filled to overflowing on the funeral occasion, and while devout men carried him to his burial great lamentation was made over him. His death was felt as a personal bereavement and sorrow by every Methodist, and by the members of other communions in New Orleans. He has been taken, in the prime of his manhood, from the midst of his home and family ties, and from a life of great usefulness in the church. During his last hours he was conscious of his approaching end, and expressed himself as ready for the change. We may not question the dispensation, but must bow submissively. May God sustain the grief-stricken family, and sanctify the stroke to the church and to the entire community.

Letter from Mexico.

CITY OF MEXICO, January 1, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: A happy, happy New Year. It comes in upon us here in all the brightness of a tropical clime. The sun sends down his beams in all the fullness of his strength and glory. It is the genial warmth and mellow light of elder spring. Nature seems in a happy mood. Flowers of every shape and hue bend beneath the burden of their own loveliness. The air is redolent with richest perfume. Birds of sweetest voice and brightest plumage, amidst green boughs, trill their highest and most harmonious notes. Vegetation laughs and skips for joy that the shackles of grim winter are not forged for it. And yet, just yonder, in full view, reaching up to the blue vault, are mountain-peaks in garb of purest white—perennial snow. The whole scene seems more like a dream than a reality. How, then, must it appear to those who can only hear thereof? How difficult to realize the truth from the most precise descriptions. Strawberries, watermelons and a great variety of tropical fruit, with vegetables of almost every species, form a part of each day's meal. But, alas! there is another side to the picture. While all nature is thus rejoicing in the beneficence of the Creator—springing harmoniously forth in obedience to the laws of its being, living a daily life of usefulness to man and sacrifice to God—there are teeming thousands of immortal souls crouching beneath a burden of spiritual gloom—men, made in the image and likeness of God, going down to darkness and to death. There is a barrier to the full enjoyment of nature's glories, and the genius of man, in the thought of death's terrible, fearful reign. Just when the soul swells with gratitude and praises to God for the wonders of his hands as it beholds the varying beauties all around, it is dashed with sadness at the thought of reigning superstition and religious unwisdom. But, thank God, light is coming in. The first faint rays of dawn give encouragement and inspiration to effort. However, of this more anon.

We left Vera Cruz for the City of Mexico at the time announced in my last letter. The time for starting and arriving could not well be more detrimental to personal comfort. The train leaves Vera Cruz at three A. M. and arrives at Mexico between eleven and twelve at night. By this arrangement you have a full benefit of the most sublime mountain scenery, I suppose, to be found on the face of the globe, which otherwise would be lost. My pen staggers and halts feebly as I approach a bare mention of this wonderful mountain range; and, considering the difference in the creators, the almost equally wonderful genius of man in overcoming such insuperable difficulties, and making the hardy, frowning mountain-peak a resting-place for his iron rails. I have good reasons, too, to hesitate. First, the impossibility of any pen doing justice to the subject, much less mine; and, then, fresh in your memory is the almost perfect description furnished by Bishop Keener. That account was inimitable; and yet it bears about the same relation to the reality that the first letter in the alphabet bears to the science of letters. For the first time I appreciated the strong point made by Rev. Dr. Abby in his Diuturnity on the poverty of human speech. The whole man is lost in wonder and astonishment. The mind palpitates like a diseased human heart. The eye rushes from scene to scene, and then back again, and then again returns. And the soul almost sickens at the bear suggestion of lettering out its impressions. Stopping a few moments at one of the stations, Mr. Jackson, an English gentleman, to whose skill and energy the success of the enterprise is largely due, called my attention to an object away, hundreds and hundreds of feet, up the craggy mountain-side, informing me that it was an iron bridge, and the point of passage for the train. I suppose on an air line it was over half a mile off, and yet the space of eight miles must be made to reach it, and that, too, on a grade of four per cent. From the point of that iron bridge, looking down upon the valley and town below, the picture was more like a fairy scene than a reality. The little town had the appearance of a beaming ray of sunlight. Men on horseback seemed veritable Lilliputians. By noon the train reached the Sinner station, located at the highest passable point. We were literally among the clouds. It was uncomfortably cold. Men gathered their great coats closely about them. In the dim distance, through the occasional breaks in the clouds, were to be seen snow-peaks, far, far above us still. Orazaba, head and shoulder above all, looking down in dignified silence, seemed the hoary-headed grandfather, proud of his generation. We begin the descent, and soon reach the broad plateau or table-lands of Mexico. Here agriculture is more advanced. Occasionally large plantations are seen. Beyond the mountains, though the valleys are broad and fertile, yet comparatively but little has been or is being done to develop their resources. Now and then were to be seen small patches of corn or Indian maize, and vegetables of various kinds, some in the full ear and some just springing up. But here the fields were much larger, and the plow, though of an inferior sort, freely used, almost invariably drawn by oxen—manifesting the spirit of non-progress in this: the yoke is discarded, and the animal's head is made to do the duty of his neck and shoulders. On these plains the steam plow could do magnificent work. Here I noticed, for the first time, the most celebrated plant perhaps in Mexico; not so much for its size and luxuriance as for its uses. I refer to the plant Maguey, or perhaps the proper name, Agave Americano. It is useful to the native in many ways, principally, perhaps, in giving him his favorite beverage, pulque, and at the same time fencing his land. A shallow ditch, bordered with this plant, is the only plantation or garden fence to be seen. As beans is the national dish, so pulque is the national drink. And I suppose, if either one had to be given up, the more substantial one would give way for the beverage.

But I must stay further observations upon this and many other interesting subjects, and hurry on to the great city itself. And while we are passing over the intervening space allow me a paragraph upon the railroad. I made no particular effort to find out, and whether it is under the control of Mexicans, Spaniards or Englishmen I don't know. The three classes seemed to be pretty well interested, so far as I could observe. The road-bed, rails, etc., are good. Passenger accommodation is far from being good. There are three classes of coaches. The first is the clumsily-cushioned English coach, cut off into apartments, affording seats for eight. The entrance is at the side. The fare in this class is $16 gold. The second class is in the same order, seats running across, entrance at the side, no cushioned, and no partition. The fare here is $12 gold. The third is too common and uncomfortable to talk about. The fare in this class is $7.50. Each passenger is allowed twenty-five pounds of baggage, and pays in gold per hundred pounds for extra weight. Counting two and a half passengers, I paid $13 for three trunks, they by no means large or unusually heavy. Unless one is well supplied with gold he had better not attempt the route to Mexico, or else travel with light baggage. Now we are nearing the city. Night has been upon us some time. Mountains, as silent night-watchers, are seen in the dim distance. Now the moon comes out in all her tropical splendor, and lights up the snowy peaks of the famous Popocatepetl and Iztaccihuatl. But for the distinctness and emphasis of the outline you would think it only a bank of fleecy cloud. Between eleven and twelve we reach the depot, and are soon whirling along the rock-paved streets, in a modern coach, to the Hotel Gillon.

Mexico is a modern city compared to Vera Cruz and other Mexican towns along the route of the railroad. It impresses you pleasantly. You at once feel its solidity. The houses, two and three stories high, built of rock, walls very thick, as prepared to stand the siege of ages. But I am not ready now for impressions and descriptions of this great city. In a future communication I may attempt something in that way.

Delivering my letters the day following our arrival, soon brought me in contact with kindred spirits. Our reception was most cordial. Rev. Dr. Butler and Rev. Dr. Carter, of the Northern Church, Rev. Alejo Hernandez, of our church, and Rev. Dr. Hutchinson, of the Presbyterian church, also Rev. Mr. Parks, were warm in expressions of welcome. Hon. Mr. Foster, Hon. Dr. Skelton—the former United States minister, the latter consul general—Major Clark, editor of the Two Republics, and Mr. Hugo Willson and family were sincerely cordial in their greetings. We were soon made to feel very much at home. Of course the first wish of my heart was to know something of the mission interest in general, and of our own in particular. I was much gratified to find that the great enterprise was being pushed forward with commendable zeal. Since Bishop Keener's visit here matters have opened up wonderfully. The door now stands wide open. Men, full of the Holy Ghost and faith, with means to sustain them liberally, is all that's needed now to take the country—to win, literally win, an empire to Christ. Since the expulsion of the Jesuits, and the inauguration of the new constitution, sundering the last and weakest tie of Church and State—or, in other words, destroying all Catholic influence, temporal or political—the Protestant cause has received a wonderful impetus. Now the harvest is white, but the laborers are few. The church of God never, it seems to me, had such an opportunity. It can now lay up spiritual stores against that day. I pray God that our people will not permit the hour to pass without improvement. The sickle must be thrust in—the grain must be garnered. It must be done now. Delay will not do. Had I the means, I could open at once two or three more places of worship. Our church possesses a jewel in Bro. Hernandez. He is a deeply spiritual man. He is joyous and hopeful for the future of spiritual religion in this country. He has been in training an interesting young man, who will do credit to the cause. We can secure others of talent and influence so soon as we can organize other congregations. A well-conducted, firmly-established Advocate in this city would be a power. It would carry with it a moral influence hard to realize. I am firmly persuaded that when the call is made Southern Methodism will respond readily and liberally to the project. In a future communication I will refer more at large to the general missionary interest in Mexico. The Presbyterian and Northern Methodist Board have done a good work. They are pushing on the cause of Christ with might and main.

To our many personal friends and to the Church South we send greetings. When on our knees our native land and the church of our heart are not forgotten. We find the blessed Savior as near to us, and, if possible, more precious here than in our own country. We want and need the sympathies and prayers of the church for the success of our enterprise. Let there be special mention made, by each and all, at the throne of grace of the Mexican mission. God bless you. Affectionately,

JOEL T. DAVIS.

Florida Conference.

This body met at Jacksonville, January 7, Bishop Pierce presiding. Dr. Kennedy, editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, writes of the condition and prospects as follows:

The outlook for Florida is in all respects more promising than it was a year ago. A fine class of young men—the largest for several years—was admitted on trial, one or two valuable transfers were made to the Conference, the missionary collection was larger, the ministry have been better supported, and although the claimants upon the Conference funds were settled with at a lower per cent. than last year, the amount collected was larger—the number of claimants being greater than ever before. The spiritual improvement throughout the Conference has been very marked during the past year, many and very gracious revivals having crowned the labors of the preachers. Above all, the preachers are animated with a far more hopeful spirit, and we confidently anticipate, from the labors of the present year, results commensurate with the advanced faith and zeal of the Florida ministry. In the midst of embarrassments and privations, unknown to other Conferences, the members of this body are patiently prosecuting the work of the Master, with a spirit which cannot fail to realize speedy and signal proof of his approval. The business of the session was performed with the decorum and propriety always insured by the skillful chairmanship of Bishop Pierce. Resolutions adverse to the employment of concerts, fairs, suppers, etc., as means to replenish the treasury of the church, were adopted after a spicy debate, which disclosed ability, as well as independence of thought, upon this vexed question. The request of the General Board of Missions that the Conference endeavor to raise $1,000 for missions, the ensuing year, was responded to by a resolution to raise, if possible, $2,000. Dr. Redford's "hundred dollar proposition" was indorsed by a unanimous vote, to comply as far as practicable with the terms proposed. The project of the trustees of Emory College to endow the institution with $500,000 was ably presented by Bishop Pierce, and the earnest co-operation of the Florida Conference in that noble work was cordially pledged by its members.

A SCHOOL INSPECTOR, examining the boys, put them through their "animal kingdom," and in the course of his performance rather grandly exclaimed: "Now, can any of you boys name to me an animal of the order Edentata—that is, a front tooth toothless animal?"

A boy at once smitten with wisdom replied: "I can."

"Well, what is the animal?"

"My grandmother!" replied the boy.

A LITTLE GIRL was sent to the pasture to drive home the cow. While thus engaged she treated herself to climbing an unnecessary fence, from which she fell and was severely scratched and bruised. On returning home she was asked if she cried when she fell.

"Why, no," she replied; "what would have been the use? There was nobody to hear me!"

THE power in the hand of God's Spirit for conversions is heart coming in contact with heart. Truth from the heart goes to the heart. This is God's battle-ax and weapon of war in his crusade. He is pleased to use the yearnings, longings and sympathies of Christian men as the means of compelling the careless to think, constraining the hardened to feel, and driving the unbelieving to consider.

A STUDENT who has been afflicted with a sermon one hour and a half long grumblingly says that these professors study so much about eternity that they have no conception of time.

FERTILIZER.—As the spring approaches planters will find it to their interest to consider the importance of procuring fertilizers, the use of which will add so largely to the product of their labors. In this connection we would direct their attention to the advertisement of Stern's Fertilizer, and recommend them, if interested, to call at No. 16 Chartres street, or write and satisfy themselves of the value and economy of this valuable fertilizer.

AS SET FORTH in their advertisement in this issue, the New Orleans Mutual Insurance Company insures fire, marine and river risks, dividing the profits separately on each department to the insured. J. Tuyes, Esq., is the president, and Mr. J. W. Hincks the secretary of this reliable company. Their office is at the corner of Canal and Camp streets.

STORAGE.—Mr. H. M. Isaacson (late of the Hostoo Warehouse,) at the Lafayette Warehouse, corner of Magazine and Lafayette streets, is prepared to receive storage of all descriptions, and will advance charges to steamboats, consignees, railroads, etc. The Lafayette Warehouse has been recently renewed and is in first-class order.

WOOD AND COAL AT REDUCED PRICES.—Mr. Sam Smith, at No. 351 Dryades street, between Pilo and Erato, offers to deliver wood and coal in any part of the city at reduced prices. See his advertisement.

IT WILL be noticed in his advertisement, in another column, that Mr. J. W. Petty photographer, has removed from 151 Canal to 187 Poydras street, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and patrons.

E. J. RILLIEUX, corner of Dauphine and St. Louis streets, manufacturer of Havana and domestic cigars and cigarettes. All brands at low prices.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement of John P. Magee, who does a general cooperage business at No. 60 Lafayette street, near Tchoupitoulas.

J. WOLF & Co., general dealers in crockery and queensware, cutlery, etc., No. 833 Magazine street.

DIAMOND COTTON CHOPPER AND CULTIVATOR.—This implement, the invention of a North Carolinian, promises to be of immense advantage to the cotton planters of the South. From the number of high testimonials which it bears, its excellence would seem to be established. It hars on both sides of the cotton, chops out weeds and dirts the cotton at one operation. It is worked with one man and one horse as easily as an ordinary plow. After the chopping it is converted into a harrow-sweep for cultivating between the rows. This machine was exhibited at the principal Southern fairs last fall, where it is said to have attracted more attention and elicited greater applause than any other agricultural implement. It took first premiums and the grand sweepstakes prize, the gold medal, at the Georgia State Fair. It will no doubt prove a great blessing to the cotton planter. A cotton planter and guano distributor attachment has been added to it, which is said to be superior to any in the market. See advertisement in our columns.

THE PAN-HANDLE ROUTE.—As the season approaches for those who are impelled by the requirements of business, or led by motives of relaxation or pleasure, to lay their plans for Northern tours, we would commend to their consideration the Pan-Handle and Pennsylvania Central route as unsurpassed for safety, speed and completeness of accommodation. Of all the routes over which we have traveled North, the scenery on this route has interested us the most and the fatigue has been the least. For further information we refer to William M. Wallington, Esq., general Southern agent, through whose courteous and obliging attention they will obtain full and complete information as to the time and distance saved by this route. His office is at the corner of Camp and Common streets, under the City Hotel.

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY AND DRESSMAKING.—Strangers visiting our city should not fail to visit M. McAuley's attractive bazar, No. 151 Canal street, between Dauphine and Bourbon streets, and examine her rich and recherche styles of hats, bonnets and general millinery, dresses, cloaks and other ladies' wear, all worked up in the most fashionable and artistic manner to conform to the reigning modes.

HATS.—No more stylish hats can be found anywhere than at the establishment of Albert & Reinerth, No. 30 Chartres street, corner of Customhouse. Their assortment for the spring trade is now arriving, and purchasers know the advantages of an early call.

THE extensive marble and granite works of George Stroud are situated at Nos. 158, 160, 162 and 164 St. Charles street, corner of Girod, where every description of cemetery and building work is executed in the best manner and at reasonable prices.

PLANTERS and stock-raisers will do well to notice the advertisement of the Louisiana Oil Company, which appears in this issue. The economy of the cotton seed meal as an article of food, and the value of their fertilizer, deserve attention.

SEE the advertisement of Joseph Walker, proprietor of the Crescent machine shop, corner of St. Joseph and Constance streets. Plantation machinery manufactured and repaired. Jobbing promptly attended to.

HAIR STORE.—Miss C. C. Matthews, at No. 282½ Camp street, keeps a full assortment of braids, curls, switches, puffs, etc., of all shades. A competent hair-dresser in attendance.

J. DUBARRY occupies stalls Nos. 2, 4 and 6, St. Mary's Market, where he keeps a fresh supply of Western beef, which he will deliver to purchasers free of drayage.

THE genuine Halford Leicestershire Table Sauce, now so generally in use in families, can be obtained of all good grocers. You have but to try a single bottle to become its reference. It is the cheapest, at the same time that it is the best. fe5 ll

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR.
A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER.

PRICE, $1.

A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the Proceedings of the Conference, including the Pastoral Address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the Reports of Committees, the Speeches and Debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

A brief outline of the Lives of the Bishops will be published in the DAILY; also a Pen-and-ink Sketch of the Members, both lay and clerical, who compose the General Conference.

The next General Conference will be invested with an importance scarcely equaled in any similar body in American Methodism. Questions of the greatest moment and highest interest will come before the body, and be discussed by the master-minds of the church—questions in which every Methodist will feel the liveliest concern.

The DAILY will be a handsome sheet of four pages, of good size, printed on good paper, and in clear type; and neither labor nor expense will be spared to make it all that the church may desire.

The services of a competent reporter have been secured, and the subscribers may rely on receiving the earliest intelligence of the deliberations of the Conference through the Daily.

Many persons desire to preserve the Proceedings and Debates of the General Conference in a permanent form. To all such we take pleasure in saying that the numbers of the DAILY ADVOCATE when bound will make a handsome volume that may be read with interest for years to come.

Address A. H. REDFORD, Agent,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Subscriptions will be received by ROBERT J. HARP, Agent, New Orleans. fe5 tf

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

JUSTLY CELEBRATED.

THE DIAMOND COTTON CHOPPER AND CULTIVATOR.

THE GREATEST LABOR-SAVER OF the AGE; with ONE MAN and ONE HORSE does the work of from SIX to TWELVE men and from TWO to FOUR horses. It CHOPS and BARS both sides, WEEDS and DIRTS the cotton at one operation. After which it is converted into a most excellent CULTIVATOR, for use between the rows throughout the season. This machine has been tested upon a growing crop, and proved a thorough, practical SUCCESS. It bears the highest TESTIMONIALS from our best cotton planters. It will soon become as indispensable to the cotton planter as the cotton gin or press. It has taken the grand sweepstakes prize, the GOLD MEDAL, at the Georgia State Fair as the latest and most valuable improvement in agricultural implements, and the first premium wherever it has been exhibited. Active and reliable AGENTS are wanted in every town and county, to whom a liberal discount will be made. Applications for agencies should be made without delay. Retail price of machine, with attachments, $35 and freight. A most excellent COTTON PLANTER and GUANO DISTRIBUTOR has been added to the machine. Price, $2.50 extra. For circulars and further information address JOHN W. HINSDALE,

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pastures weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
FROM
The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder-humor.) He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of blles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five in eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed.

Raw and Inflamed,

The Child's Corner.

TONGUE, EYES AND EARS.

A RHYME SIX HUNDRED YEARS OLD.

Guard, my child, thy tongue,
That it speak no wrong;
Let no evil word pass o'er it;
Set the watch of truth before it,
That it speak no wrong.
Guard, my child, thy tongue.

Guard, my child, thine eyes;
Prying is not wise;
Let them look on what is right;
From all evil turn their sight;
Prying is not wise.
Guard, my child, thine eyes.

Guard, my child, thine ear;
Wicked words will sear.
Let no evil word come in
That may cause the soul to sin:
Wicked words will sear.
Guard, my child, thine ear.

Ear and eye and tongue,
Guard while thou art young;
For, alas! these busy three
Can unruly members be.
Guard, while thou art young.
Ear and eye and tongue.

ONE step and then another
And the longest walk is ended;
One stitch and then another,
And the largest rent is mended;
One brick upon another,
And the highest wall is made;
One flake upon another,
And the deepest snow is laid.

A Letter to the Children.

Well, well, my little friends, Christmas has come and gone, and you are borno out upon a new year. Did you all know why your friends tried to make everything so joyous and gay on that occasion? What is Christmas? Why the anniversary of our blessed Savior's birthday, you answer, while your eyes grow large with surprise to think I would ask you such a question. But you need not look so surprised. I have seen large girls and boys who had no idea of its meaning. I hope you were all happy, for it is right for us to rejoice then; not because we have so many nice things, and because old "Santa Claus" steals in to bring presents to the sleeping little ones, but because we have so much for which to be thankful in having a Savior who makes all that is good in the human heart, and plants within us an undying hope of eternal rest in the world to come.

Don't you wish the little children away off yonder knew our Savior? Yes, I know you do. If you were there you could tell them; but you are not, and I will tell you what you must do. Try to save enough money this year to send a Bible to some little child. You cannot form the least idea of the good that might result from it. You might take a few cents and buy some toy that you think would add very much to your happiness, but if, instead of that, you could place "the word of life" in the hands of some perishing soul, oh! I know you would much rather do it. It might be the means of converting some little boy, who in time would become a minister. Think of the souls he might win for Christ! And it would all be the result of your little self-denial being smiled upon by our heavenly Father. Oh! children, we do not know how much good we could do if we would only try.

One day a dear little girl was sitting near me, and she asked me to tell her a fairy tale. I told her one of the prettiest ones I knew, and when I was through she looked up in my face so earnestly and said:

"Oh! I wish there were fairies now; I would try to have them come to me some time."

"There are plenty of fairies now," I answered.

There was a twinkle of doubt in her blue eyes which said: "I wonder if you really think so."

Then I told her I thought she was a fairy. Not one of these airy creatures that nestles between the mild sunbeams and gossamer clouds, and only drops to the earth to sip the pearly dew trembling on a rosebud, or wave her golden wand over the busy streamlet, and then floats away on a rising zephyr. No, we read about these sometimes; but I love these flesh-and-blood fairies, that have found out how sweet it is to be good. God has not made us all beautiful, he has not made us all bright in intellect, nor has he showered the gifts of fortune upon us all, but he has made us all capable of being good; and being gentle, sweet and amiable is the only thing which will make you really happy.

I know these grown-up people sometimes say that little folks ought to be good—they have nothing to worry them. And you same little folks think: "Oh! if I could only do as mamma and papa do, wouldn't I be happy." Now you must not believe that your parents have no care, nor do I think you have none. No, indeed; I know you have great, large troubles that hurt you just as much as grown people's hurt them, and it is not right for them to treat yours so lightly. You meant to be right good this morning; but that missing button, knotted shoe-string or tangled hair, how it did vex you! But then you must try to meet all these little trials bravely, and then you will know how to meet larger ones.

I know some of you read that pretty little story that appeared in the ADVOCATE, not long ago, about the "Sunshine Factory." Perhaps some of you had read it before; but it was really nice, wasn't it? Now who is going to be a sunshine-maker or a fairy? Oh! I know; you will all try. You needn't wonder who I am talking to. I am talking to you, with your sweet, loving eyes, looking up at mamma as she reads—or may be you can read yourself a little. Bless the little children; I love them so much, because when I tell them to be good they don't listen so well, while I am talking, as some grown people do to the preacher, and then go right off and forget what I say to them. Now, when you are out playing in the sunshine, and a gust of wind takes off your hat or shawl, you won't get angry with "that old wind," but just think the wind loves to play with fairies' hair, and away you go for the truant. When you think you know your lesson well, and fail at recitation, don't get angry with your teacher. I could tell you a great many things that wouldn't make you happy, but you try my plan, and you will see that it will make you happy:

Love God and everything that he has made.

S. W. H.

Andy and the Worm.

One day Andy was digging in his very own garden, just after a shower, when he spied a big worm. He sat quietly down on an overturned flower-pot, and looked at the worm in silence for at least two minutes, and the worm raised its head a little (worms can't raise their heads very high) and looked at him. At last said Andy:

"You're not pretty."

"I am not," answered the worm.

"You can't dance," said Andy.

"I can't," said the worm.

"Nor sing," said Andy.

"Nor sing," repeated the worm.

"You don't know your letters even," said Andy.

"I don't," said the worm.

"Butterflies can fly," said Andy.

"They can," said the worm.

"Bees hum," said Andy.

"They do," said the worm.

"You can't do anything," said Andy.

"I CAN," said the worm, so loudly (for a worm) that Andy tumbled off the flower-pot, he was so very much astonished. But quickly picking himself up, he sat down again and asked:

"What?"

"Something that bees, birds, and even boys can't do," answered the worm, wriggling a little, as naughty girls do when they say: "So, there now, you think yourself something great."

"Let's see!" said Andy.

"Take your little spade and chop me in two," said the worm.

"Oh, no," said Andy, "that would be wicked."

"Well, don't you ever do it unless a worm asks you to," said the worm; "then it's all right. Now I'm ready, go ahead."

"Are you sure you're in earnest?" asked Andy.

"Quite sure," answered the worm.

"And won't it hurt you?" asked Andy.

"Don't ask so many questions; do as I tell you," replied the worm.

"And why?" said Andy; but, seeing that the worm was turning away from him, he seized his little spade and chopped it in two, and lo and behold! one-half crept off one way and one-half the other.

"Well, sure enough," said Andy, "I don't believe I could do that. Good-by, Mr. Worm—I mean two Mr. Worms."

"Good-by," said the head, and "good-by," said the tail; and they both crept under the ground, and left Andy to ask, "And why?" until this very day.—St. Nicholas.

Mice in a Bird's Nest.

Under this tree are again to be seen the footprints of the mice. Last summer a blue jay built her nest of small sticks and roots on one of its branches, and when the fall came these little mice made their winter home in it, lining and roofing it over with soft green moss and strips of cedar bark, using pine for the inside and coarser strips outside; the whole making a structure about the size of a small football. The entrance was a small hole in the side leading on the branch, most perfectly concealed.

These timid little creatures dare not trust themselves away from home in the day-time, so we shall probably now find them in this nest. The first time we shake the branch it only brings down a shower of snow; but these little mice, so cozily housed, know the movement was caused by no breath of wind hurrying by; for the second time out they scramble, wild with fear. They cling to the limbs, trembling and gazing anxiously about them, not daring to move forward or back again. As we pull the limb down to look at them more closely all the three terror-stricken creatures jump to the snow below, and quickly disappear in a little entry-way leading down beside a birch stump. The fur of this mouse is dark-brown on the back, fawn-colored on the sides and white on the under parts. The eyes are very large for so small a creature, with the same deep liquid beauty a deer's eye possesses.

One peculiarity with these mice, and the same is true of a red squirrel, is that, as a rule, they approach their nest by the way of some tree other than the one they have their nest in. You will see them run up a tree at some little distance, and then jump from branch to branch and tree to tree, often making long leaps, until they finally reach home.

One season these mice built a nest against an uninhabited gray squirrel's nest, using some of the overhanging oak branches, of which it was largely built, as material for their roof. The nest was in a pine, but the mice approached home by way of a small oak standing near, the bark on this being worn off by the marks of their tiny claws. Frequently these mice use the nest of the cat-bird as a storehouse, filling it with hazelnuts and then covering it over with strips of cedar bark, leaving only a small entrance in the side.—Old and New.

THE BOY AND HIS DOG.—A Detroit newspaper tells this pretty little story: A boy about ten years of age, leading a lively little dog, called at the central station and asked if that was the place where they shot dogs. Being answered in the affirmative, he said: "Well, please shoot my poor little Dan. He's an awful good dog, and he plays with the baby all day, but father's deaf, and mother's sick, and I can't raise money to get a license." Then, turning to the dog, the boy lifted him up tenderly and stroked him, saying: "Poor Dan! how Billy will cry when I tell him you are dead!" Great big tears rolled down the boy's face, and in a little time those around him made up a purse sufficient to save his dog, and a person went with him after the license. The boy's eyes fairly sparkled at his unexpected luck, and, speaking to the dog, he cried out: "You're saved, Dan! You're saved; let's go right home to Billy!"

THE East India cocoanut crop is said to have been ruined by drought.

LOVE to man is often the shortest road to the love of God.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Fruit Garden.

This and the next month are best for trimming fruit-trees. We cannot repeat too often that short trunks and low heads are indispensable in our hot climate for protection against the sun. Where trees are trimmed up high there is a constant tendency for sprouts to spring from the stem near the ground, and the bark is almost certain to be killed on the south-west side of the trunk. We prefer the pyramidal shape for almost every variety of fruit-tree. If young trees have been neglected the past summer, bring them as near to the pyramid as possible by shortening the branches, leaving the lowest ones longest, the next above some shorter, and so on to near the top, leaving one strong, vigorous, upright shoot, some ten inches higher than any other, for a leader. Have an eye also to thinning out the interior branches, so as to leave the head open.

PEACH-TREES.

Cut off half the last year's growth of bearing peach-trees, to diminish the fruit-buds and increase the vigor of those left. Indeed all kinds of fruit will bear this thinning out of fruit-buds; the size of the fruit will more than make up for the diminished number. Search out and destroy the borer.

TOP-DRESSING.

Give each tree a top-dressing of ashes scattered as far from the trunk as the limbs extend—a peck to a half bushel to each tree. An addition of an equal quantity of lime will be very beneficial to apple-trees.

WASH FOR TRUNK AND LIMBS.

Make a thick wash of lime two parts, and sulphur and soot one each, and apply it freely to the stem and branches, taking care that an extra supply is given to the forks of the stem where the larger limbs grow out, as it is at these points that disease and insects most readily find lodgment. We advise this wash for every tree in the orchard.—Southern Cultivator.

ROBBERS.—Bees at any time, when they cannot gather honey and are rearing brood abundantly, are inclined to rob; and to prevent this we at such times feed all such stocks and feed abundantly, and always feed just at night, and keep the entrances to all stocks properly contracted, and we never have any trouble from robbers. At such times, if we handle our bees, we open the hives always just at night. With a very little observation we soon learn to distinguish the aggressor from the aggrieved. But if robbers have gotten possession, and we wish to know where they come from, we sprinkle them with wheat flour, and we can very soon detect the hive that they got into. Robbers go in empty and out loaded from the hive they are robbing, and a very little observation will learn a person to detect robbers at once.—E. Gallup, in American Bee Journal.

STANCHIONS FOR COWS.—William V. S. Beekman, a noted dairyman of New York, says: "I have experimented with various kinds of stalls, but find stanchions keep them in a more cleanly condition than loose stalls. The platform upon which they stand should be a foot above the floor. The gutter in rear is eighteen inches or more wide, and about two inches below the floor. I think such a gutter better than a very narrow and deep one. The rear of the platform is in line, but the stanchions are regulated to suit the length of each cow. Though my cows have been stabled nights all summer, and fed on succulent food, yet by using a liberal supply of straw for bedding they have kept perfectly clean."

TO PRESERVE GRINDSTONES.—A grindstone should not be exposed to the weather, as it not only injures the wood-work, but the sun's rays harden the stone so much as in time to render it useless. Neither should it stand in the water in which it runs, as the part remaining in water softens so much that it wears unequally, and this is a common cause of grindstones becoming "out of true."

TO FRESHEN SALT FISH.—A good way to freshen salt fish is to pour a little vinegar into the water, and soak the fish with the skin side up.

AS THE organ never responds with its sweet sounds until its jdjes are blown upon by the air of heaven, so our lives will never give forth melody and harmony until our hearts feel the atmosphere of Christ's love surrounding them.

WANTED TO BE HEARD FROM.

If anybody has ever used the thorough and scientific course of treatment recommended by the proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy for the cure of Catarrh and has not been perfectly cured, the proprietor, Dr. R. V. Pierce, would like to hear from that person, and by addressing him at the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, New York, such person, if there by one, will hear of something to his or her advantage, as the Doctor is in earnest when he offers $500 reward for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure, and is perfectly able to pay it if he fails in a single case, as any one may ascertain upon inquiry. The thorough course of treatment referred to and recommended by Dr. Pierce consists in the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, which is the only means by which the fluid can be carried high up and applied to all parts of the nasal passages and the chambers connected therewith, in which ulcers exist and from which the discharge proceeds. In addition to this thorough application of the Remedy, which should always be used warm, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be taken earnestly as constitutional treatment, without which few cases can be cured, as the disease is always constitutional and must be treated accordingly. This treatment has no unpleasant features about it, and has the advantage of never driving the disease to the lungs, as there is danger of doing by the use of strong, irritating snuffs or poisonous solutions.

PLAIN FACTS.

FRANKFORT, Me R., Sept. 13, 1874.

A year ago I had a bad cough from the Catarrh which had got in my throat. I tried a good many things, but got nothing to do me any good until I used your Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They cured me in three months, for which I am very thankful.

AGENTS WANTED TO ENGAGE IN A permanent, lucrative and respectable business. None but energetic and responsible persons need apply. A. COYLE, oct23 3m 419 North Sixth street, St. Louis, Mo.

FROM A RECENT ANALYSIS BY Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Yale College, the following table will show the chemical composition of YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN:

Albuminoids...	12.45	Sugar	13.66
Gum	5.21	Starch	55.82
Fat	8.59	Cellulose	2.95
Ash	2.12

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, gluten, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. "These," says Yanmans, "are the flesh-forming principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable to all requiring a highly nutritious and at the same time easily assimilated diet, and hence is used as an article of daily consumption in climates which occasion rapid waste of the system. "Almost all Asiatics, Africans and (aboriginal) Americans use it as their chief nourishment."—Louis Figuier, in his work on the Vegetable World.

The Hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN all the nutritive qualities of the grain are preserved. The grain is cut from the ear and boiled in the canisters with the rich juices (or milk) it exude from it, and is then sealed air-tight and the canister subjected to steam heat, which sterilizes the albumen. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by this that all the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and a most nourishing article of food in the domain of nature placed within the reach of all.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

The Spring session of this widely-known and popular Institution begins on the Twenty-ninth of JANUARY next, and closes on the Seventeenth of June, which is Commencement day. In view of the present financial depression we now make this liberal offer:

FOR ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS, paid in advance, we will give, for one entire session of twenty weeks, to any student in the Collegiate, Scientific or Business course, his board at the Byars House (now reduced to $10 per month,) tuition, fuel, room-rent, washing, library and contingent fees. In the Preparatory Department the charges will be even less. Board at the Fulton House and in private families may be obtained at moderate though at somewhat more advanced rates. The advantages now offered here to those seeking thorough collegiate training and culture were never excelled in our previous history, as those best acquainted with the school will testify. COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirtieth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales... 29,758
Lake	388
Arkansas	5,691
Tennessee	321
Mobile, a	891
Texas	708
Total	37,656

On Saturday the market opened with a fair demand, and the sales during the morning reached 2,000 bales, but the movement subsequently exhibited only a moderate degree of activity, and the business was consequently confined to 6,750 bales. Throughout the day the advantage was on the side of the buyers, but, as there was no attempt to force sales, a part of the business was at previous rates, and the rest at a falling off of hardly ⅛c., except in some cases, in which factors were compelled to make further concessions. Low ordinary sold at 8⅝@8¾c., ordinary, dusty and stained, at 9⅛@9⅜c., good ordinary at 13⅜@13½c., strict good ordinary at 14c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 14⅝@14¾c., low middling at 14⅞, 14⅞@14¾c., strict low middling at 15¼c., and middling at 15⅜@15⅝c. Buyers were again complaining of the scarcity of good cottons. On Monday the movement was checked by dark, rainy and inclement weather, and also by scant supplies of the better qualities, but still there was a very fair demand, resulting in sales to the extent of 5,750 bales. Prices exhibited a good deal of irregularity, over-running lists of desirable kinds showing little change, while other descriptions gave way to the extent of ⅛@⅜c. The heavy receipts had an unfavorable influence. On Tuesday the demand was fair, but mostly from buyers who claimed further concessions, at least on the general run of the offerings, and under the pressure of heavy receipts factors were compelled to meet the demand more freely, giving way ⅛c. on good ordinary and the better qualities, and ¼c. on the lower grades.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 20,800 bales, against 24,500 for the corresponding time last week and 31,650 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 817,636 bales, against 702,275 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 282,304 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 34,708 to Great Britain, and of 61,714 to France, and a decrease of 41,286 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Low ordinary	8¼ @ 9
Ordinary	10 @ 10¾

SUGAR.—We have no material changes to note. The receipts are small, but amply sufficient for the demand, which is poor. The receipts on Saturday and Monday were confined to 903 hhds., with sales of 400 hhds. at 4⅝@5¼c. for inferior, 5⅝@6¼c. for common, 6⅜@6¾c. for fair, 6⅞@7⅛c. for good fair, 7⅜@8c. for fully fair, 8⅛@8¼c. for prime, 8⅜@8¾c. for choice, 9⅝@10c. for yellow clarified, and 10¼@10¾c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—On Tuesday 307 hhds. and 8 half hhds. were received. The demand was fair and the supplies mostly sold at 47½c. for fair fermenting, 48@50c. for cistern bottom and fermenting, 55c. for cistern bottom and fair fermenting, and 61c. for good prime and sound fermenting.

CORN.—The supply has been liberal, with an active demand, and prices have advanced. On Tuesday 22,429 sacks sold, comprising 13,429 sacks on the landing, at 75c. for white, 77c. for choice white, and 78c. for yellow; and 9,000 sacks, delivered at ship for export, at 77c. for white, and 80c. for yellow.

OATS.—On Tuesday 1,550 sacks sold at 56, 57@58c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Tuesday 775 sacks sold at $1 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday the stock was small, and held strongly at $16.75@17 ₱ bbl. for mess, with sales of 200 bbls. at $16.75, and 25 bbls. at $17 ₱ bbl. New mess is retailing at $17@17.25 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday the sales embraced 125 casks, in lots, at 8c. for shoulders, 9¼c. for clear rib sides, and 10¼@10½c. for clear sides.

SPARE RIBS.—None in market. They have sold at $6.25 ₱ bbl.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 111⅛@111⅜, (against 111⅜ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates in both markets.

Nothing has been reported in silver. Owing to the light supplies it is quoted at 109@110½ for American half dollars, and at the disproportionably high rates, compared with gold, of 110 for Mexican dollars.

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1874. NO. 7.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 5.—The physicians who went to North Carolina for the Siamese twins have returned. The bodies will be here to-night by express. The exmmination is not to take place for two or three days, and will be then conducted by the college of physicians. The bodies are reported well preserved.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 5.—The seventh annual session of the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry convened at the Southern Hotel, Thirty-two States and two Territories were represented by masters of State granges. About thirty ladies were present. The session was held with closed doors.

Last night's session of the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry was entirely taken up by a disenssion as to parliamentary rules for the government of subordinate granges. It had been decided by the State agents of the order now here to leave the question of co-operation to the National Grange, with a view of having a constitutional provision made for it. This will defer the matter for another year, as the amendments to the constitution must be ratified by two-thirds of the State granges before they take effect.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 7.—The National Grange has sixteen hundred subordinate granges in Missouri.

The constitution and by-laws are, by special orders, to be printed in all languages.

At a meeting to-day Charleston was unanimously selected by the cotton States for the next place of meeting.

Bro. Taylor, in the name of South Carolina and of all the States of the South, returned thanks for the unanimous vote, and assured the members that no efforts would be spared by the citizens of Charleston to make their visit to that city pleasant and the session of the grange agreeable.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 1, via Havana, Feb. 8.—Mr. Foster, United States minister, has entertained at a banquet Bishops Keener and Simpson, who are looking after Protestant Church interests in Mexico.

The revolution in Yucatan is gaining strength. The Indians have plundered and burned the town of Conochel, in that State. Complaints are made that the merchants of Belize sell arms and ammunition to the Yucatan savages.

The Apaches have raided in Sonora, and committed several murders.

The revolution in Jalisco is ended.

The appointment of Benevides and Corona as ministers to Germany and Spain is confirmed.

The press complain of the injury to Mexican interests caused by the introduction into foreign commerce of the new American trade dollar.

Judge Ramlerz, of the Supreme Court, declares Mexico a republic only in name—that in reality it is governed by a military despotism.

The building of several leading railroads is about to be commenced. It is reported that the Mexican and the International railway companies will be amalgamated.

LONDON, Feb. 4.—The Daily News has a special dispatch from Berlin, which says that alarming reports were current in that city concerning the relations between France and Germany.

Prof. Anderson, the well-known conjurer, is dead.

LONDON, Feb. 5.—A riot occurred yesterday among one thousand two hundred convict Intransigentes, confined at Oran, Algeria, and several of them were murdered. Two Spanish frigates were expected to-morrow to take them back to Spain.

Late advices from the Gold Coast report that the Ashantees have released the Mormon missionary whom they had held in captivity, and sent him to Sir Garnet Woolsey with proposals for a treaty of peace.

Twelve hundred British troops have advanced to within a day's march of Coomassie, the Ashantee capital. As yet there has been no opposition to them. The troops were healthy. Fantee carriers find deserted.

PARIS, Feb. 7.—There are nine hundred Communists still awaiting trial.

MADRID, Feb. 7.—General Sickles took his final leave of the Spanish government, and placed Mr. Secretary Adee in charge of the legation.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—The Post of this morning thinks it quite certain that Gladstone will resign the premiership before the new Parliament assembles. The press of this city unanimously recognize the completeness of the defeat of the government in the elections.

A large meeting was held in St. James last night for the purpose of expressing sympathy with Roman Catholics of Germany. The Duke of Norfolk presided.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—It is announced that a reconciliation has been effected between Disraeli, the Marquis of Salisbury and Earl Carnarvon, and that the Marquis and Earl have consented to assist Disraeli to form his ministry.

Disraeli delivered an address at Buckingham to-day. He congratulated his constituents on the result of the elections, which, he declared, justified the policy of the Conservative party in introducing and carrying reform law when it last held power.

BERLIN, Feb. 10.—A heavy gale has prevailed in the Lower Baltic, and caused the partial inundation of Kiel and Swenemunde; but the latest dispatches state the storm has abated and the waters are subsiding.

MADRID, Feb. 10.—Imparcial says the government has agreed to exchange prisoners with the Carlists.

PARIS, Feb. 10.—Berthold, the new French minister to Washington, has departed for there.

La Patrie says sharply-worded notes have recently been exchanged between the governments of Germany and the United States. The subject of the correspondence is not stated. Jules Michela, French author, is dead.

Why the Ship Went Down.

THE ONE WEAK POINT IN THE VILLE DU HAVRE.

People unacquainted with nautical matters have been quietly asking themselves why it was that in these days of water-tight compartments the Ville du Havre went down so quickly, and whether it be true, as has been so often stated in connection with this disaster, that no human foresight or skill could have saved the ship after she was once struck. The general impression deducible from what has been published on the subject has been that it could not, and that thus the element of uncertainty and danger in ocean travel, already sufficiently terrible, is intensified by a new aspect of the powerlessness of man to struggle with the inevitable. These reflections are somewhat modified, and one's natural apprehensions relieved, by some important statements appearing in a London scientific journal, the Engineer, which clearly point out the one fatally weak point in the equipment of the magnificently appointed Ville du Havre. That she was a magnificent vessel there can be no doubt. She was only built in 1865, and from first to last over $270,000 were expended in her construction. She was massive in build, and of undoubted strength and buoyancy. She had the most perfect pumping apparatus that can be imagined. The iron on her sides had been carefully tested, and there was no stint in the use of it. She had eleven water-tight bulkheads, and lastly she was well officered and manned.

The one weak point was a rusty door-handle. Among the eleven bulkheads there were three which were pierced with doors. Each of these bulkheads had two doors, and they were so made as to be capable of being closed water-tight, like the bulkheads themselves. The blow from the Loch Earn struck the engine-room. One of the bulkheads in the engine-room, and only one, had doors, and if these had been closed the water could not have got further than the engine-room, and the ship would have floated. The arrangements for closing the doors were on the upper deck, and consisted of powerful screw-levers, the handles of which were fixed to them so that by no chance could they be missing at the critical moment. It is in evidence that when the crash took place one of the engineers rushed to the screw-lever and attempted to close the door. Had he succeeded in doing this the vessel would have been saved. He failed, and why? Simply because somebody, whose duty it was daily to see that the gearing was in working order, had failed to do it, and the screw had become corroded, and would not turn. The failure to turn the screw could not, says the Engineer, have resulted from any pressure of the water, but only from the cause just stated. Our English cotemporary very properly says: "It is sad to reflect that if this single bulkhead had been properly secured the whole vessel might have been saved, and certainly sufficient time would have been allowed for saving those who were not killed by the falling masts. It may be right to ask whether any other ocean-going steamers are subjected to similar neglect. It is vain to build vessels in compartments with water-tight doors in the bulkheads, and every contrivance for getting rid of the water, if the doors are to be left open and the apparatus allowed to get out of order."—New York Observer.

COLONIZATION SOCIETY.—The fifty-seventh anniversary of the American Colonization Society was held on the evening of January 20, in the Thirteenth Street Baptist church, Washington, D. C. Hon. J. H. B. Latrobe presided. The exercises were opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Cuthbert. Mr. Latrobe delivered a brief address, in which he said it was just fifty years since he entered upon the work of the Colonization Society. The secretary read the annual report, showing that the receipts for the year had been $35,022.02, all of which had been expended save $233.49. The number of colored people sent to Liberia from this country since the war is three thousand and sixty, a total from the beginning of fifteen thousand and forty-three. Several thousand applications are enrolled and will be sent as soon as the way is open. Liberia is steadily growing and increasing in all the elements of prosperity. Manufactures and agriculture are steadily improving. The schools are also gaining in strength and importance, and the prospects of the college are very bright.—Christian Intelligencer.

I KNOW not which is the greater wonder—that prayer, which is a duty so easy and facile, so ready and adapted to the opportunities of every man, should have so great effects, and be productive of such mighty blessings; or that we should be so unwilling to use so easy an instrument of procuring so much good.—Jeremy Taylor.

Prospectus of the General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOS. O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR.
A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER.

PRICE, $1.—A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the proceedings of the Conference, including the pastoral address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the reports of committees, the speeches and debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

A brief outline of the lives of the Bishops will be published in the Daily; also a pen-and-ink sketch of the members, both lay and clerical, who compose the General Conference.

The next General Conference will be invested with an importance scarcely equaled in any similar body in American Methodism. Questions of the greatest moment and highest interest will come before the body, and be discussed by the master-minds of the church—questions in which every Methodist will feel the liveliest concern.

The Daily will be a handsome sheet of four pages, of good size, printed on good paper, and in clear type; and neither labor nor expense will be spared to make it all that the church may desire.

The services of a competent reporter have been secured, and the subscribers may rely on receiving the earliest intelligence of the deliberations of the Conference through the Daily.

Many persons desire to preserve the proceedings and debates of the General Conference in a permanent form. To all such we take pleasure in saying that the numbers of the Daily Advocate, when bound, will make a handsome volume that may be read with interest in years to come. Address

THE subject of sympathies and antipathies is extremely curious. Boyle fainted when he heard the splashing of water; Scaliger turned pale at the sight of watercresses; Erasmus became feverish when he saw a fish. A curious story is told of a clergyman, that he always fainted when he heard a certain verse in Jeremiah read. Zimmerman tells of a lady who could not endure the feeling of silk or satin, and shuddered when touching the skin of a peach.

THOSE who err in one direction always take care to let you know that they are quite free from error in the opposite direction. A boorish man thanks God very loudly that he is not insincere; nobody having ever thought of accusing him even of that small and wretched approach to politeness which is sometimes favored by insincerity.

All Along the Line.

It will be seen from our list of shipments that there is no abatement in the business of the Publishing House. On Wednesday of last week our orders were more numerous and larger than we have ever known them in a single day; although the number of orders for books for the past week do not quite come up to the week previous, yet the amount ordered in the aggregate is larger. The following is the list for the past week:

Little Rock Conference.—J. P. Hulse, T. M. Winburn, Alonzo Monk, C. C. Godden, T. Van Valkenburg.

North Carolina Conference.—J. W. Jenkins, J. C. Jenkins, B. C. Phillips, James Willson.

Alabama Conference.—A. C. Hundley, D. M. Hudson, M. E. Butt, W. M. Winn, William B. Neal.

Memphis Conference.—W. H. Leigh, S. A. Mason.

Holston Conference.—Ayres Kincaid, W. D. Mountcastle, S. R. Wheeler, J. S. Ross, T. F. Glenn.

Missouri Conference.—J. J. Carden, H. A. Bourland, H. N. Watts.

North Mississippi Conference.—W. J. O'Bryant, T. C. Wier, Ira B. Robertson.

Arkansas Conference.—R. F. Beasley, W. J. Dodson, J. A. Walden.

Kentucky Conference.—J. W. Sageser, W. F. Taylor.

Tennessee Conference.—W. D. Cherry, T. H. Woodward.

Northwest Texas Conference.—A. A. Cornett, J. J. Shirley.

E. Texas Conference.—Lacy Hoone.

West Texas Conference.—John B. Denton.

Trinity Conference.—J. H. McLean.

Western Virginia Conference.—John Martin.

North Alabama Conference.—T. H. Deavenport.

Pacific Conference.—J. G. Shelton.

We have received an order from a local preacher at Quitman, Arkansas—no signature!

The names of those who have accepted the proposition, sending their orders to Nos. 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans, will be given next week.

A Word to Our Brethren.

At the last May meeting the board made large appropriations to our missionary fields. Since that time the unexpected "panic" has come upon the country, which, in places, has curtailed the collections. Fears are entertained that some of the drafts may not be met in due time. I therefore suggest:

1. That every presiding elder have a conference with his preachers, and proceed at an early day to lift their missionary collections. Ask for liberal contributions, and see if every member of the church will not give something to this noble cause.

2. I suggest that missionary sermons be preached in every congregation in the church.

3. These large collections made early will enable the Conference treasurers to pay the missionaries on the home work in due time, and remit to the general treasurer the forty per cent., that he may meet the drafts drawn in favor of our foreign work.

Come, brethren, let every man go to work!

The missionary secretary would like to visit every accessible point at as early a day as possible.

J. B. McFERRIN, Sec.

A Move in the Right Direction.

At the preachers' meeting in Nashville, January 26, the presiding elder, the Rev. Dr. Kelley, proposed to those in charge of circuits and stations to begin without delay to raise their missionary collections. He suggested February and March as the most suitable months for this purpose. He suggested, further, that a sermon should be delivered in every congregation in the bounds of the district, and that every member of the church should be called upon, either in congregation or privately, for a contribution, and that our friends should be solicited to aid in this enterprise. His proposition was unanimously sustained, and brethren are going to work. This is an example worthy of imitation.

J. B. McFERRIN, Sec.

A ROMAN ecclesiastic, in reply to whatever question might be proposed, began by saying: "I make a distinction." A cardinal having invited him to dine, proposed to derive some amusement for the company from the well-known peculiarity of his guest. Saying to him that he had an important question to propose, he asked: "Is it under any circumstances lawful to baptize in soup?" "I make a distinction," said the priest. "If you ask, Is it lawful to baptize in soup in general? I say, 'No!' If you ask, Is it lawful to baptize in your excellency's soup? I say, 'Yes!' for there is really no difference between it and water."

A LEARNED DIVINE one day accosted a simple-hearted Christian, busy in his daily toil, thus: "Well, John, it is a long and hard way to heaven, is it not?" "O no, sir," was the answer, "it is only three steps." "Three steps! how is that, John?" "Why, sir, nothing is plainer. First, step out of yourself; second, step into Christ; third, step into heaven." The astonished minister, years afterward, acknowledged his indebtedness to that poor rustic for one of his profoundest and most comprehensive lessons in experimental theology.

Tribute of Respect—Richard Jones.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God, in his infinite wisdom, to take to himself our beloved brother in Christ, RICHARD JONES, teacher and assistant superintendent of this Sabbath school, who departed this life on the morning of Thursday, the twenty-ninth ultimo, in great peace, and in the assured hope of a joyful resurrection; And whereas, We recognize in his just and pious life a proof of the innate power and truth of our most holy faith in Jesus Christ our Lord, which is able to do for us and in us, as it did for him, infinitely and above all we can even ask or think, which can make us, as it did him, able to overcome all things through Christ, who strengtheneth us; invoking the office and ministry of the Holy Spirit, sanctifying, and taking of the things of the Father to show them to us, making us wise unto salvation, each standing in his lot, waiting the Lord's good time when we, with our brother, can go up into his gates with thanksgiving and into his courts with praise; And whereas, We are admonished by the suddenness of the call which carried our brother to glory, that we also should be ready, with our lamps trimmed and burning, and oil in our vessels, for we know not the day nor the hour when we may hear the midnight cry: "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him;" teaching us that > "Upon a narrow neck of land,

> 'Twixt two unbounded seas we stand."

and that this is not our abiding city; but that we should seek one that is better, even a heavenly one, invisible, incorruptible, undefiled and which faileth not away; And whereas, The absence of our brother, this Sabbath, from his long-accustomed duties among us—duties which he so well performed last Sabbath day—causes a mournful reflection, on which we cannot but be sad, sorrowing most of all that we shall see his face on earth no more, yet cheered by the knowledge that, if we, like him, remain faithful unto death, we, like him, shall receive a crown of life, and joyfully meet him in that sun-bright clime, where all tears are wiped from all eyes, where there is no sorrow because there is no sin;

> "Where congregations ne'er break up,
> And Sabbaths have no end," and where forever dwelleth the infinite Spirit, who saith: "Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them;" therefore, be it

Resolved, By this meeting of Felicity Street Sunday school, Methodist Episcopal Church South, that we tender our heartfelt condolence to the bereaved family of our beloved brother, and can only remind them of what they have been taught by him whom we mourn: that the best of all is, "God is with them;" and as a Father pitieth his children, so the Lord much more pitieth them who fear him.

Resolved, That as officers, teachers and scholars we shall ever cherish in our memories the recollection of the many virtues, gifts and piety of our brother, and will endeavor, with God's blessing, to emulate the example of one of whom we can sincerely say: "Gone, but not forgotten."

Resolved, That these resolutions be inscribed in the record-book of the school, and that as an outward token of inward sorrow for our loss the superintendent's desk be suitably draped in mourning, and that we will make it a special object of prayer that, as the godly man ceaseth, the Lord will in good time raise up others like unto him, whom we may hear.

Resolved, That Bro. Parker be requested to publish in our ADVOCATE this feeble tribute to the memory of a good man gone home to heaven.

> "Servant of God, well done;
> Rest from thy loved employ;
> The battle fought, the victory won,
> Enter thy Master's joy!
> "At midnight came the cry:
> 'To meet thy God prepare!'
> He woke and caught his Captain's eye;
> Then, strong in faith and prayer,
> His spirit, with a bound,
> Left its encumbering clay;
> His cell at sunrise, on the ground,
> A darkened ruin lay.
> Soldier of Christ, well done!
> Praise be thy new employ,
> And while eternal ages run,
> Rest in thy Savior's joy."

PINE LEVEL CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Honor to whom Honor is Due.—Mr. Editor: I wish to correct a false impression which will be made by the financial report as to the amount received by me on the above circuit last year. After my return from Conference, besides several small amounts paid as quarterage, quite a number of liberal donations were made me by Drs. Adams and McQueen, Bros. Boswell, Ozier, Alford, Farnell and others, making a total of something above $800, instead of the amount reported.

THE Minutes of the Mississippi Conference are just to hand. I will forward copies by mail to the brethren who subscribed and gave the names of their offices. Let all the brethren, who have not done so, take collections and send for copies of the Minutes at once. I had one thousand printed, at a cost of about $148, including freight. The brethren have paid $73. Address

From Baton Rouge to Shreveport.

ON BOARD STEAMER LESSIE TAYLOR.

BRO. PARKER: After several days of preparation, crowded with farewells and blessings of many friends, we embarked, on Saturday at eleven A. M., on the elegant little steamer Lessie Taylor for Shreveport. And here I had as well say, at once, what I should not omit to say of this nice boat. She is first-class in all her appointments. Captain Truslow is exceedingly careful and considerate. He is a cousin to Rev. John F. Truslow, once a member of our Conference. The captain is the first to contribute to the support of the Shreveport preacher by conveying him and his family to their new home at half fare. Thank you, captain! Preachers and people will do well to travel on this most excellent boat.

I begin to realize that I have actually left Baton Rouge—pleasant place and precious people! How my heart lingers with them, especially with the hundred whose hands and names I have taken, in the past two years, as new recruits in the army of our great Captain. May they all "return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads," but I pray not for these alone, but for all them also who are enrolled with them, and for the many precious souls who yet linger in the enemy's ranks against every conviction of their minds. May the Lord bless Bro. Wilkinson, and make him eminently skillful in winning souls to the Master.

Well, here we are at Alexandria. From our boat I see what I suppose to be the Pineville church, nestled in a pine grove in the suburbs of the village. I have tried to see the parsonage on the Alexandria side, but cannot, as our boat lands too far up town. I doubt not it is a neat and proper building. These are the twin monuments of the zeal and energy of our young and promising brother, Rev. Christian Keener.

Now we have steamed away from Alexandria, and nothing but a winding, shallow river addresses the eye from without; so I turn mine within, and look again with pleasure upon the pleasant memories of Baton Rouge. There I have just spent two of the most laborious and most pleasant years of an itinerant life of twenty-six years, and there I have added some of the most valued names to the list of precious friends I fondly cherish.

But why linger thus upon the past? We are nearing Shreveport, and I must gather up the affections and energies of my heart for the work before me there. I pause awhile to commune with God and my own heart.

Here we are at Shreveport, just at dusk on Tuesday evening—too late to take the little ones to the parsonage. I retire for the night, and when we reach the parsonage will finish this rambling letter.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.—Reach the parsonage, with wife and little ones, early after breakfast, Bro. S. B. McCutchen supplying the carriage, and a stranger friend volunteering to transport baggage and bundles free of charge. I am now quietly seated in one of the upper rooms of this exceedingly comfortable home. I thank God for this house, and I thank the good people who had the heart to build it, and Bro. Wilkinson, who no doubt endured toil and privation and anxiety in a measure known only to him for whose sake he could afford to suffer. It is indeed a good place for comfort, and kind people have already made us feel quite at home. But, oh! this is all nothing if I may not win the hearts of the people for the Master. I should be miserable in a palace if I thought I should fail of a harvest of souls; and I do believe a prison would content me if I could be the means of saving some.

"Brethren, pray for us."

SHREVEPORT, January 28, 1874.

Note from Rev. N. A. Cravens.

MR. EDITOR: As my name does not appear in the appointments of the Texas Conference, and my field of labor is not indicated in the Minutes of the Louisiana Conference, my friends may not know where to address me. You will oblige me by stating in your paper that my post-office is Houston, Texas, and the work assigned me is Shearn's chapel, which is the central church of our Zion in Houston. Yours truly,

N. A. CRAVENS.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, January 30, 1874.

IN HIS last will and testament the late Prof. Agassiz modestly styled himself a "teacher." To his pure taste it would have seemed arrogant to say, "I, Louis Agassiz," without any affix, and ostentatious to have appended to his name the long string of honorary titles which had been given him by various institutions and societies. The great professor was content to call himself simply by the title of his life-occupation, affording a strong contrast with the course pursued by myriads of small pedagogues, who are ashamed to be called "teachers," and who never cease to parade themselves as "professors."—Christian Intelligencer.

PRAYER draws down gifts from Heaven. It fills the empty soul. It brings strength to the weak, true riches to the poor, grace to the feeble. It is a bank of wealth, a mine of mercy, a store of blessings. It flies where the eagle never flew. It travels farther and moves faster than the light. Well might Mary, Queen of Scotland, say: "I fear John Knox's prayers more than an army of ten thousand men."

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1874.

JOHN DODGE'S SERMON.

The minister said last night, says he:
"There be afraid of givin'
If your life ain't nothin' to other folks,
Why, what's the use o' livin'?"
And that's what I say to wife, says I;
There's Brown, the mis'rable sinner,
He'd sooner a beggar should starve than give
A penny toward buyin' a dinner.

I tell you our minister's grand, he is;
But I couldn't quite determine,
When I heard him a-givin' it right and left,
Just who was hit by his sermon.
Of course there couldn't be no mistake
When he talked of long-winded preachin',
For Peters and Johnson they sat and scowled
At every word he was sayin'.

And the minister he went on to say:
"There's various kinds o' cheatin',
And religion's as good for every day
As it is to bring to meetin'.
I don't think much of a man that gives
The Lord Amens a' every preachin',
And spends the time the followin' week
In cheatin' and over-reachin'."

I 'spects that dose was bitter enough
For a man like Jones to swallow;
But I noticed he didn't open his mouth,
Not once, after that, to holler.
Hurrah, says I, for the minister—
Of course I said it quiet—
Give us some more of this open talk;
It's very refreshing diet.

The minister hit 'em every time;
And when he spoke of fashion,
And a-riggin' out in bows and things,
As woman's rulin' passion,
And a-comin' to church to see the styles,
I couldn't help a-winkin',
And a-nudgin' my wife, and, says I: "That's you;"
And I guess it's set her thinkin'.

Says I to myself: That sermon's pat:
But man is a queer creation:
And I'm much afraid that most o' the folks
Won't take the application.
Now, if he had said a word about
My personal mode o' stealin',
I'd have gone to work to right myself,
And not set here a-grinnin'.

Just then the minister says, says he:
"And now I've come to the letters
Who've lost their shower by usin' their friends
As sort o' moral umbrellas.
Go home," says he, "and find your faults,
Instead of fault'in' your brother's;
Go home," he says, "and wear the coats
You've tried to fit for others."

My wife she nudged, and Brown he winked,
And there was lots o' smilin',
And lots o' lookin' of our pew;
It set my blood a-boilin';
Says I to myself: Our minister
Is gittin' a little bitter;
I'll tell him, when meetin's out, that I
Ain't at all that kind of a critter.

Watchman and Reflector.

Experimental Religion.

MR. EDITOR: Experimental religion means a religion of experience, in distinction from a doctrinal or theoretical religion—the experience which the heart, not the intellect, has of divine truth and power, the religious exercise of the affections and feelings. The relative importance of this feature of religion, as compared with other religious manifestations, grows out of and is measured by the great principle enunciated by the Savior when he said: "Out of the heart proceeds the life, whether good or bad."

The affections, as compared to the other powers of the soul, are like the pattern-room in the foundery. Other departments may furnish the molten metal, the driving power of the machinery, the lathes and other finishing tools, but it furnishes the patterns—it determines what form the material shall assume.

The baptism of the Holy Ghost falls principally and immediately upon the heart. The new man is a man with new motives. His armor and his aggressive spiritual power consist in the enhanced strength of his good desires over his evil desires.

The spiritual power communicated to the soul in regeneration is not laid over the faculties, like strata upon substrata, but it is infused into the living faculties of our nature, and we become "lively members." The aids which the Holy Spirit give to the new-born soul are not like the crutch given to the lame man, but the communication of health and strength to his shriveled limbs, that he may walk by his own internal and living power.

Our faith is not "dead, but living." Any other conception of spiritual aid is mechanical. The soul would be robbed of its high prerogative of liberty—"the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free." Hence, even after conversion, the spiritual life is a warfare. God does not destroy our enemies, but he gives us grace to be conquerors. This view alone reconciles those apparently contradictory declarations of Scripture which say "Without me ye can do nothing," and yet magnify man's own responsibility in the act of his salvation, "Work out your salvation, for it is God who works in you." Not who works on you or for you, but in you. The sanctifying grace of God acts upon the soul as oxygen on the physical life. Oxygen vitalizes the blood, and the regenerated blood carries on the processes of life.

We dwell upon this conception of the nature of the operations of grace, for it is the key to the whole subject of experimental religion. A religion of experience, then, is the feeling and realization of the quickening power of the Holy Spirit in the heart, in the feelings, in the motives. It is loving God because he first loved us; it is the peace and joy of assurance; it is spontaneous action, not a perfunctory life. It is prayerfulness because we feel in the depths of our consciousness the need of it, and in the experience of our life the benefit of it. Oh! it is doctrine, truth, spiritual power, brought down from the ethereal heights of mere theory and speculation, to be crystallized in every-day experience.

In the emphasizing of this truth, more than in the teaching of any other doctrine, lies the glory of Methodism. Methodism has turned away the attention of the Christian world from bickering about creeds to the vastly more important matter of the practical effects of creeds, and other mere means, upon the heart and life. All the churches are now beginning to magnify the heart's experience of grace as compared with the matters of church government and doctrinal form. Out of the growing prominence of this idea the Evangelical Alliance was evolved, for the Christian world are beginning to see that forms cannot be the same. And when this spirit of experimental religion shall have reached its due significance, we shall see a united church,
feeling that the Holy Spirit operates upon the heart and life of all alike, begetting a catholic brotherhood in experience. Denominational lines may still mark, but shall not separate the affections of different believers. There will be "one God and Father of all—above all, and in all, and through all"—by his blessed operations upon the heart and the affections.

We say that much of these results is due to Methodism. Methodism is not only "Christianity in earnest," but Christianity in experience. Have not the love-feast and the class meeting been the "peculiarities" among Methodist institutions? Were not these for the purposes of giving play to and developing the experience? Alas! is not our glory departing with these? We have dropped them because they are impracticable. And why so? Methodists have no longer an experience to tell. Of course class meetings are a mere form, and actually hurtful to the soul, unless it have an experience. One of the peculiarities of Methodist worship has ever been the unfettering of the soul from the trammels of false restraint and conventional dignity, and letting the mighty feelings of the heart find vent in shouts of praise and loud-swelling song. Why was this? Because it was the religious experience of the heart that our fathers were aiming to arouse. If they had aimed at the careful inculcation of creed alone, or the superimposition of a surface morality, they would have repressed emotional religion as a foe to that composure so necessary to a firm mental grasp of an abstruse, delicately-linked system of doctrine.

And here let us say that among all the conventionalities of cultivated society none is more hurtful to religion than that habit, considered essential to good breeding, of concealing the feelings, of repressing all signs of our joy or sorrow. This habit, which in highly artificial society extends its paralyzing wand over the churches, freezing into cold, respectable, proper calmness, in the name of "decency and order," the worship of God, at the same time puts out the fires upon our altars. The heart of the church is benumbed. Its sympathetic power is lost. Its experience hibernates. Religious worship without emotional expression is like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out.

Experimental religion is the mightiest weapon of conviction. Men can resist thought and argument, but it is hard for them to resist intense feeling in others. Thought travels through a miserable non-conductor—language—in passing from mind to mind, and, like electricity, its current is enfeebled; but feeling leaps, without an intervening and obstructing channel, from heart to heart. Sympathy is the sensitive plant of the soul, delicate leaves responding, even before touched, to the very approach of any influence. Fast are we drifting, on the tide of a false philosophy, and a foolish and weak compliance with the unauthorized demands of an unnatural and artificial state of society, upon the sands of mere doctrinal life and formal worship. There we will stick fast, and there will be no power of steam or sail by which we can move ourselves forward.

The noble ship of the church, which once rushed forward with magnificent speed, driven by the winds of the Spirit, and by the deep, internal fires of a heart-experience, will cease to move. The church will stagnate if there be no experimental religion, stirring into mighty currents the activities of her heart. C. C.

Discipline.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the fifteenth instant there is an article from the pen of the venerable Dr. L. Pierce, from whom, on most subjects, we hope often to hear; and yet we can but differ from the spirit and tenor of the article above alluded to. We fear that if the spirit and teachings of that utterance should be carried out, the weak brother, who might be saved, would be thrown out of the church to perish. First. His motto for the church is: "Hard to get in and easy to get out." Now ours would be the reverse of this, and that which he condemns, namely: "Easy to get in and hard to get out." Our view of this matter is that the church should be like > "The glorious gates of gospel grace," that

> "Stand open night and day."

But the doctor thinks it would be well for the church "to hold all in abeyance until they bring both soul and body under the law of Christ." Now, Mr. Editor, it seems to us that this would be putting the bars up too high for the halt, the lame, the blind, the feeble, the penitent, the trembling believer, etc. And then to us another difficulty arises. Who among us would stand at these bars and be the judge? No, sir, the millions who have come into the Methodist Church, and have gone from her up into heaven, came into her bosom on this condition: "A desire to flee the wrath to come." And the millions now in the same church below came into her on the same condition, and they compare well with the members of our sister churches, which require a "profession of faith" in order to membership.

Again, what does the doctor mean when he says: "You are all of the time whining after a revival of religion, by which most of you mean accessions to the church?" Now as to the whining, we leave that to the doctor. But is it wrong in us if we "all of the time" pray, preach, toil, and, even weeping, cry to God for "a revival of religion" and "accessions to the church?" Our observation in the church, for more than forty years, is that "revivals of religion" not only add members to the church, but confirm the wavering, strengthen the weak, recall the wandering, help up the fallen, reclaim the backslidden, etc. Nay," we who are strong should bear the infirmities of the weak," try to reform our wayward brother, love him, plead with him, weep over him, pray and bear long with him; and only apply the knife when nothing can save the perishing member.

Mr. Editor, we hope that no part of our church, nor any General Conference, will imbibe what seems to us the teaching and spirit of that article. We, too, would have a pure church; but we would fill it with love, mercy, pity, piety, purity, and then throw the strong arms of this love around a falling brother, and thus help him to stand in the church till he is able to walk without aid, leaning on Christ. We would have charity, forbearance, even long suffering. Hear the divine Redeemer. What did he say? "One of you is a devil?" And yet to him he gave his own, "the Lord's Supper."

See Peter draw his sword and cut off a man's ear. Hear the mild Redeemer: "Put up again thy sword into its place." Did Christ excommunicate Peter? See Peter again. He "standeth in the way of sinners." Hear him deny Christ. Hear him lie, curse and swear. See the compassionate Christ turn and look upon him; and that look of love and compassion "broke Peter's heart of stone," and Peter became a mighty minister of the gospel. No, at least let the disciplinary steps be taken, or the New Testament steps, which are the same. Let these steps be taken in love, and ninety-nine out of a hundred will be so reformed that it will not be necessary to cut them off, but they will be saved to the church, themselves, God and heaven. How often? "Until seventy times seven." LOOKER ON.

Support of Presiding Elders.

MR. EDITOR: For some time we have been thinking that we would make some suggestions upon the importance and necessity of a more efficient plan for the support of the presiding elder. In our judgment there is no office in the Methodist Episcopal Church South more important or responsible—the Bishop's excepted—than that of presiding elder.

The present plan to secure his support we do not think the best, or even efficient. It is made the duty of the district steward to apportion to him his salary, and to distribute the same to the respective circuits and stations in the district. Here their work ceases. Besides, the office of a district steward is considered one of such little importance that we never have seen anything like a full attendance at such a meeting. Hence many of our presiding elders never attempt to call them together, but just go along in a haphazard way, and make their own suggestions as to their claims. We believe a better plan would be to do away with the whole plan which now exists, and levy a per cent. on the salaries of all the preachers on the district sufficient to meet the claim of the presiding elder. But as we have a plan we must work it. We suggest that when the district stewards have apportioned the salary of the presiding elder, and distributed it to the respective circuits and stations, then it should be made their duty to look after the interests of the presiding elder during the whole year. Let them see that he gets his pro rata. As it is, it is often embarrassing to the pastor and to the presiding elder to adjust their own claims.

The Discipline says that the presiding elder's salary shall be added to the salary of the preacher, and shall be collected in the same way. But the presiding elder sustains a different relation to the circuit and to the stewards to that of the pastor. They do not feel that interest in him, as a general thing, that they do in their pastor. Again, it often happens that a goodly proportion of the claim of the circuit is collected not only after the fourth Quarterly Conference, but even after the Annual Conference; and, thus collected and paid by the circuit, never gets to the recording steward's book, and the presiding elder rarely ever gets his pro rata. Now if it was made the special duty of the district steward to look after the interests of the presiding elder he would often fare better than he does. If it were not for the sympathies of the preachers for their presiding elders they would often fare badly; but they should not be subjected to the mere sympathies of others for support.

Now we would suggest either to do away with the present plan of having district stewards, and adopt the per cent. plan, or else make it the special duty of the district stewards to look after the interests of the presiding elder during the entire year.

The Trinity.

MR. EDITOR: All entire systems are made up of parts, as the "system of government, the system of philosophy" (Webster,) and we judge system is equally as applicable to the divinity of the godhead, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, in truth and good theological taste, as system is to logic, the system of principles and the solar system. For there was a plurality of persons in council in creation, and it is a supernatural truth that there was a plurality of persons in the great work of redemption and the setting up of the kingdom of Jesus Christ upon the earth.

These divine persons are revealed in the Scriptures by different names, and in dissimilar relations to man and the glorious work of grace, forming one unbroken chain of systems of divinity, made up of parts, under their appropriate names. First, The Holy Ghost and the Son of Man, the Son of God, and the almighty creator God. They were not all revealed in creating the world and its fullness, or in redemption proper.—Neither were the circumstances of their advent the same, but radically different in fact; for tangible supernatural evidences are interwoven in the divinity of Jesus Christ, and the circumstances, to a given extent, point out their specific work.

PATRICK HENRY left in his will the following important passage: "I have now disposed of all my property to my family; there is one thing more I wish I could give them, and that is the Christian religion. If they had that, and I had not given them one shilling, they would be rich; and if they had not that, and I had given them all the world, they would be poor."

Yazoo City, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: In your editorial of the twenty-second, on the subject, "Endure Hardness," you speak of your recent canvass of the Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, and that you were led to infer that a comfortable support was the "exception." Now, sir, praise to whom praise is due; and I just wish to say to the friends of Christ that Yazoo City church is an exception, for, according to the minutes of her last church conference for 1873, she paid her pastor well. He was comfortable; and while they loved him much and would have retained him longer, they have received the writer, his successor, with praiseworthy hospitality. They have here a good and comfortable parsonage, well furnished. When we came we found our home prepared and the larder not forgotten. Yes, sir, we are happy with this dear people. Our stewards are live men. We think they "are men who know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline," and who do not mean that their pastor shall want.

But what shall I say of these noble, earnest ladies of the church? I cannot express my mind toward them better than by quoting from a letter received recently from my presiding elder, who says of them to me: "Such a female membership as you have in your station is hardly equaled in the Mississippi Conference." Now, Mr. Editor, this is strong language, but, judging from their unbounded kindness to us, we are prepared to believe this to be true. And we feel like working for this people, and do pray most earnestly that many precious souls may be born into the everlasting kingdom of Jesus Christ during this year. Our congregations are good, interest in prayer meetings increasing, and our Sabbath school is deeply interesting indeed. We are doing all we can for the good ADVOCATE.

Religious Vows.

BY C. S. ROBINSON, D. D.

Few persons have reached maturity without having been pressed, first or last, with some most perplexing questions concerning the duty or privilege of making vows. It is a rare theme in the pulpit; not so rare in pastoral conversations. Perhaps good will be gained from a quiet study of it.

Classic history makes clear the fact that all religions and schemes of faith have encouraged their devotees in the practice of offering themselves and their gifts to their deities. Temples of every sort, the world over, are filled with votive tablets and emblems, presented by grateful recipients of what they conceived to be divine favor when they have been delivered from danger or prospered in difficult enterprises. Even the rituals of heathenism, the wildest and the wisest, seem to agree in this. The custom, therefore, has very ancient authority. The first vow mentioned in the Bible is that of Jacob at Bethel. But this was no original invention of his. Nor was it introduced by Moses as a fine discovery. Nor was it ever announced from Heaven as a duty. Its history is as old as the annals of the race.

Hannah vowed that Samuel should be devoted to the service of the Lord all the days of his life and no razor come upon his head. But Hannibal's father did much the same when he pledged the infant to be the eternal enemy of Rome. There appears to have been as much of a certain kind of religiousness in Hannibal's case as in Hannah's. David vowed unto the mighty God of Jacob that he would find a habitation for the tabernacle before he would give sleep to his eyes or slumber to his eyelids. But the forty who banded themselves "with a curse," not to eat or drink until they had killed Paul were in their own way conscientious. A wild and thrilling interest is given to the whole book of Judges by the unfortunate vow of Jephthah that he would offer up for a burnt sacrifice whatsoever came forth first from his doors to meet him when he returned from fighting with Ammon. It proved to be his own daughter. But every commentator who writes upon this passage mentions the curious parallel of Agamemnon's surrender of Iphigenia.

Concerning all of which, it needs to be remarked that heathen and Hebrew sentiment was absolutely agreed in one thing. A vow was positively irrevocable. No one ever seems to have doubted for an instant that the obligation incurred could in no way be discharged save by a literally faithful fulfillment, without delay.

The philosophy underlying so plain a conclusion was eminently simple. The main pressure of a vow lay in the fact that, since it was voluntary, it must be scrupulously and religiously observed, no matter how fierce the reluctance or unexpected the result. If any other person had imposed it, then he might be implored to interfere for release and let up the promise. But a vow, by its very nature, assumed independent self-decision, from which, of course, there was no appeal. Hence the united public sentiment of the entire world in all ages may be considered as concentrated and well expressed in the utterance of the royal preacher: "When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools. Pay that which thou hast vowed. Better is it that thou shouldst not vow than that thou shouldst vow and not pay."

The great lawgiver, Moses, acting under divine direction, found this custom when he came to the leadership of Israel. He simply set himself to regulate the practice and put it under some code of intelligent management. His language is exceedingly significant. He not only omits all sort of confirmation and countenance of the exercise, but he adds a single sentence which might seem almost like a deprecation. These are his exact words on introducing the subject: "When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay; for the Lord thy God will surely require it of thee, and it would be sin in thee. But if thou shalt forbear to vow it shall be no sin in thee."

Then after the announcement of the principle—namely, that if any one refused to make these vows he did no wrong, even to a venerable custom; but that if he did make one he must carry it out unalterably, even to its smallest provisions—this earliest legislator proceeded to lay down what now appear to us most complicated enactments. Children could not vow without the consent of their parents. A wife was to be released from any vow if she had entered into it without the knowledge of her husband. Wives, however, could reject their husband's objections if they knew of the obligation and did not interfere at the time. All vows were void if forced by violence or fear. To vow an animal to God made it necessary to bring it at once to the priest. To vow an imperfect or blemished victim was to be reckoned a misdemeanor. And certain low and vicious matters, as to concubines and dogs, could not even be made the subject of vows.

Thus the practice inevitably brought with it a most intricate and perplexing train of casuistical distinctions. And the Rabbins in after years had to keep up the hair-splitting evasions. Refinements, as subtle as language could state, allowed or disallowed the infringements of exact terms. If you vowed a house, and the house fell down, then you were not responsible; but if you had said, instead, the price of a house, then you had to make it good. If you vowed an animal, and then it proved unsound, you were exempted from blame; only you must give another animal. Then, also, one was forbidden to evade his vow by a reserve or subterfuge of words. He must not say: I vowed a sheep, but I kept back his bones. And a man who vowed not to sleep on a bed could be arraigned for sleeping on a skin. So the fine-spun entanglements multiplied, until, at the coming of Jesus Christ, the Jewish nation had a code of traditions and glosses so intricate and confused that the original sense of Scripture had become almost totally obscured.

Now, when we pass over from the Old Testament into the New, the most observable thing to be noticed is this: no precept whatsoever is given on the subject. No regulation is prescribed. Indeed an absolute silence is preserved as to any principle or duty involved. You may search your concordances in vain. The word vow occurs but twice in all the New Testament, and then without any connected expression to give us a hint as to rejection or approval.

These are the two instances: The Apostle Paul made a vow, nobody knows what about (Acts xviii, 18;) and there were four men in Jerusalem, unnamed and unhistoric, who had a vow on them so that they could not shave their heads (Acts xxi, 23.) About the first of these we really have no further information. About the second we are informed that the men were summoned before James and Paul and the elders, and there were told to consider themselves no longer bound, proceed at once to relinquishment and purification, and behave themselves like Christians under grace.

On the whole, therefore, it would seem that we are at liberty to infer entire release from the old bondage of such customs as these. Not that any one can treat a real vow lightly; but there is no need of any one's making it. It is not in the spirit of the New Testament, which is one of liberty.

If it be asked, with any real candor of desire for an answer, whether there may not be some good in the practice of special vows or definite convenants with God, to which young Christians might resort profitably, then a reply must be given with serious caution. Freedom is by no means lawlessness; liberty is not license. It is possible that there may be found in our churches some persons, or even in our own moods some moments, to which vows might be of service. But, while we admit they are not forbidden, we must remember they are not commended either.—Independent.

The Isle De St. Marguerite.

Marshal Bazaine has commenced his term of twenty years' seclusion, in accordance with the terms of the punishment fixed by Marshal MacMahon. The Isle de St. Marguerite, where he is to take up his lengthened residence, is on the Mediterranean coast of France, opposite Cannes, and about two miles and a half from the shore. It lies close to the Italian frontier, and is one of the group of two isles called Lerins. St. Marguerite is of small extent, is covered with wood, and the climate, as may be inferred from its position, is of a salubrious character. Bazaine does not exactly go into exile, nor is he to suffer the ignominiy of being transported to a penal colony. He will always have in view the coast of France, and close at hand are many towns and villages, where, before his eyes, can be constantly seen the industry and every-day life of his fellow-countrymen in one of the most attractive portions of France.

St. Marguerite was once before the prison of an individual whose life was of romantic interest and whose history has been the subject of labored and extended research. The Man in the Iron Mask was confined on the island from 1686 to 1698, when he was removed to the Bastile. The dungeon in which he was incarcerated is still pointed out. Its solid windows are guarded by twelve iron bars. The only approach to it was through the governor's rooms. In the midst of a small garden is a square building with a square door on each face, and evidently constructed with a view to strength and to prevent prisoners confined in it from escaping. It is understood that the condemned marshal will be accompanied in his seclusion by his wife and children, and that restraint on his movements will extend to his safe-keeping. In other respects he will have the privilege of moving about within the confines of the island as much as he pleases.

The Man in the Iron Mask was differently treated. He was closely watched, and not allowed to hold conversation with any one save his jailers. Various surmises as to who this historical character really was have been thrown out. At first it was contended that he was an illegitimate son of Louis the Fourteenth by De la Valliere, who, having boxed the ears of his half-brother, the dauphin, was condemned to imprisonment for life. This assumption proved unfounded. It was again insisted that he was the Duke of Beaufort, "King of the Markets," and afterward some believed that he was the elder brother of Louis the Fourteenth, that he was a son of Anne of Austria by the Duke of Buckingham. The Queen, having the impression removed from her mind that she was barren, afterward gave birth to the grand monarch, who discovering, on reaching maturity, the condition of affairs, consigned his elder brother to a life-long imprisonment. Conjecture has exhausted itself to find out who the masked man was, but it has not yet been settled with anything like certainty. He was transferred from one place of confinement to another, and on his journeys wore a mask. He was removed from St. Marguerite in 1698, and conveyed on a litter to the Bastile, where he was treated with distinction. When the latter fell search was made for papers or relics that might lead to his identification, but none were found.

Marshal Bazaine may not consider the place of his seclusion the most agreeable. The old buildings cannot be suggestive of the most cheering emotions. He is, however, close to Italy, and he has the Mediterranean expanse to the north, south and east. If desirous to escape there cannot fail to be many favorable opportunities, but, after all, the marshal may expect that at the expiration of a few years he may be permitted by the government to leave St. Marguerite a freed man—a fortune that did not befall the mysterious Man in the Iron Mask.—New York Herald.

Obituaries.

DIED, of consumption, on the tenth of December, 1873, at ten minutes past eleven P. M., at her home on the Atchafalaya river, MARTHA M. GORDON, wife of George V. Dodez, and a native of East Feliciana parish, aged twenty-six years and ten months. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn her loss; but they sorrow not as those having no hope. May all the surviving members form an unbroken family with her above. S.

IN MEMORIAM.

The following tribute of respect was inscribed to Miss GERTRUDE MARTIN, who died at her home (Mr. Frank Martin's) in Brookhaven, Mississippi, January, 1874:

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to take from among us our dear friend and fellow-student, Gertrude Martin; therefore,

Resolved, That our Sunday school is deeply afflicted in the loss of one whose happy face and gentle disposition here endeared her to us all, and whose kind words and acts will be embalmed among the most grateful recollections of our lives.

Resolved, That we recognize the hand of God even in this great bereavement, and that, while our tears fall on the grave of our friend who is gone, we will endeavor so to heed the warning we have received in her early and unexpected death that we may offer to her memory the higher tribute of purer and more devoted lives.

Resolved, That as individuals and as a school we tender to the bereaved family the expression of our deepest sympathy, praying God to soften even this heavy blow to their strength to bear, and that their sad hearts may be stayed where their treasure is—in heaven.

> Her eyes are shut to life and light;
> No more the pulses come and go;
> Fold the white vesture, snow on snow,
> And lay her where the violets blow.
> If any born of kindred blood
> Should ask what maiden sleeps below,
> Say only this: "A tender bud,
> That tried to blossom in the snow,
> Lies withered where the violets grow."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and to the Brookhaven Citizen and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

A PRIZE having been offered for the discovery in Jesuitical writings of an authority for the maxim, "The end justifies the means," the North German Gazette says it is to be found in the work, "Flowers of Moral Theology of the Jesuits, Collected in their Own Garden," published in Celle. Page 84 of this work says: "To whom the end is permitted the means conducting to the end are also permitted." The original sentence is found in Edward Volt's "Theologia Morulis," published at Wurzburg, 1769, pages 472 and 731.

SOME scholists have discovered a short path to celebrity. Having heard that it is a vastly silly thing to believe everything, they take it for granted that it must be a vastly wise thing to believe nothing. They therefore set up for free-thinkers; but their stock in trade is that they are free from thinking. No persons make so large a demand against the reason of others as those who have none of their own; as a highwayman will take greater liberties with our purse than our banker.—Fuller.

A CELEBRATED Scotch divine had just risen up in the pulpit to lead the congregation in prayer, when a gentleman in the front of the gallery took out his handkerchief to wipe the dust from his brow, forgetting that a pack of cards was wrapped up in it. The whole pack was scattered over the floor of the gallery. The minister could not resist a sarcasm, solemn as the act was in which he was about to engage. "O man, man, surely your psalm-book has been ill bund."

THINK, and be careful what thou art within.
For there is sin in the desire of sin;
Think, and be thankful, in a different case,
For there is grace in the desire of grace.

SPEAK NAE ILL.

Other people have their faults,
And so have ye as well,
But all ye chance to see or hear,
Ye have no right to tell.
If ye cauna speak o' good,
Take care, and see and feel;
Earth has all too much o' woe,
And not enough o' weal.

Be careful that ye make nae strife
Wi' meddling tongues and brain,
For ye will find enough to do
If ye but look at hame.

If ye should feel like picking flaws,
Ye better go, I ween,
And read the book that tells ye all
About the mote and beam.

Dinna lend a listening ear
To gossip or to strife,
Or perhaps 'twill make for ye
Nae funny thing of life.

Or dinna add to others' woe,
Nor mock it with your mirth,
But give ye kindly sympathy
To suffering ones of earth.

Authors' Habits in Writing.

On this interesting topic the New ork Observer contains the follow- g letter from Irenæus:

Ready writing is written down as e of the greatest accomplishments, d yet it is a serious question hether it is, in the long run, as de- able a talent as the want of it. hen a great painter, whose name now almost unknown to fame, was sting of the celerity with which dispatched his work, Zeuxis, hose name still lives among the s, replied: "If I boast, it shall be the slowness with which I finish ne."

Preachers who write their sermons n little and lose much by dashing their discourses with railroad ed. Haste makes waste, and a eary waste it is that is spread out fore a people whose teacher brings them on a Sunday that which has t him nothing through the week. minister neighbor of mine was in y house until nearly bed-time, Sat- day night, and, when he rose to go, marked: "I've half a sermon yet write for to-morrow; don't you l sorry for me?"

"Oh, no," said I, "not for you; I s thinking of the people."

They were to be pitied, and so is ery flock that is fed by the shep- rd with slops, when they ought to ve the best there is in the granary God's word.

The Rev. Dr. Sprague is the only n I ever knew who can write his t, and that first-rate, and at the e time with great rapidity. As ding makes a full man, conversa- n a ready man, and writing a cor- t man, he is always full, ready l correct, and the words flow from pen in one steady, easy, pellucid am. He rarely changes a word. ave had hundreds, perhaps thou- ds of his pages of manuscript ter my hands for publication; y were the first draught, and very ely was the beauty of the page rred by an erasure or emendation. Began his great work, "The An- s of the American Pulpit," ten vo volumes, when he was fifty- en years old, and in the midst of duties of a large pastoral charge never slighted a discourse, and e or twice a year he visited every ish in his parish.

r. Griffin was one of the most uent preachers in the American pit. Dr. Sprague edited his ser- ns and wrote his biography. Dr. ffin was the exact reverse of Sprague in composition; writing wly, and correcting with so much r and care that his pages were ost illegible to every human eye his own, and his accomplished ghter, Mrs. Dr. Lyndon A. Smith. copied for the press those splen- discourses that were published in volumes after his death. When was a boy in college he was its ident, and my puerile composi- s were laid upon the table before , while he without pity blotted n with a broad-nibbed pen, until re was no likeness of the original e to be seen. He kept two pens and, one to strike out with, the r to restore. "The great art in ishon," he would say, "is to ." And if a pet curl adorned the face of my essay, he without re- se and with apparent pleasure it off and cast it from me as if it e an offense. The late Dr. Mur- (Kirwan,) whose head came to same block before mine, has left testimony to the value of Dr. ffin's butchery as a critic and ex- ple as an author. "Young gen- men," Dr. Griffin often said to us, rn to stop when you are done." outhey was a rapid writer, but d that what he gained in time lost in polish and correctness. en one of his poems was finished ould not give it to the printer, wrote: "I am polishing and pol- ng, and hewing it to pieces with eou severity. Yesterday I drew heu across six hundred lines." again he says: "It is long since ve been a rapid writer; the care which I write, and the pains ch I take in collecting materials, er it impossible that I should be

. Johnson advised every young beginning to compose, to do it st as he could, to get a habit of ng his mind start promptly, "so h more difficult is it to improve eed than in accuracy." But Dr. son was one of the most unwise men that ever lived. He was a le of contradictious and said a t many things for the sake of adicting. "I would say to a g divine," says Dr. Johnson: ere is your text; let us see how you can make a sermon.' Then ay: 'Let me see how much bet- ou can make it.' Thus I should both his powers and his judg- ."

Easy writing is very hard read- And it is the easy reading— which gives the most lasting as as immediate pleasure to the r—which has cost the writer the labor. If he have the art to al his art, so that what is read ard with the greatest delight s to have leaped like Minerva the brain in full dress and gth, so much the better; but as eral rule in the matter of writ- ing, as in all other of the works of man, that which costs nothing is worth nothing.

Milton's Lycidas was rewritten again and again; his biographer says he hovered over the "rathe prim- rose" passage with fastidious fond- ness, touching every color, and fit- ting every word till he brought it to its present perfection of beauty.

The fastidiousness of authorship is ridiculed by some like Cobbett, who said: "Never think of what you write; let it go; no patching." And Niebuhr's rule was: "Try never to strike out any part of what you have once written down." But such ad- vice never made an author immortal. It may have helped him to sudden fame, and perhaps fortune, but use- fulness and the "monumentum ære perennius," for which the best of men may strive, are not to be achieved without patient work, painstaking—labor limæ—and the reward is worth all it costs.

But there are diversities of gifts. One man does well in one way, and if he were compelled by law to try another method might signally fail. This has been proved in many in- stances where the change of place and circumstances has compelled a complete change in the author's hab- its of writing, and the change was fatal to his success. Some of the best writers of sermons and books have proved inadequate to the daily or weekly demands of journalism. But it still remains true, and with this I draw toward the close that no really good thing is done in writing with- out giving time, thought and care to it.

The Revival in Edinburg.

Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar has writ- ten a private letter to a friend, which has been published in the London Christian, giving his impressions of the revival spirit in Edinburg, that Mr. Moody and Mr. Wilson, of Chi- cago, have been so instrumental in awakening. He says the movement carries on its face an intensity of in- terest which leaves no one in doubt as to the single-heartedness of the workers; and that it is a mighty fact, whatever may be its import or its philosophy.

As an instance of the power of the movement, Dr. Bonar refers to the evening crowds in the two assembly halls, the more fashionable audiences in the city churches, the five thou- sand men who have stood packed densely together in the Corn Ex- change, and the eager gatherings of young men—two thousand at each gathering—that have for nearly a month crowded daily into the noon prayer meeting. He gives no opin- ion as to actual results, considering that the time for this has not yet come. But he testifies that these are already such as are not only surpris- ing in themselves, but indicate that the work which has been wrought is a reality. In illustration of this Dr. Bonar says:

"The heart of many a father and mother, of many a sister and brother, is now rejoicing in the changes that have been wrought, and the signal ways in which prayer has been an- swered. The spiritual influence (con- tagious, as some call it) has struck into every rank and circle, and even those who decry it as fanaticism al- mult, and perhaps dread, its power. None who were present in the Corn Exchange last Sabbath evening will forget the crowd of listening men, most of them from Grassmarket and the Cowgate; nor will any who were present that same evening, at a later meeting, forget the scene when six hundred of the Grassmarket men streamed up from the Corn Exchange to the Assembly Hall, and, falling on their knees, gave themselves to God, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Moody successively leading in prayer."

The letter of Dr. Bonar concludes with the statement that, while Mr. Moody and his companions are reso- lute, earnest and zealous men, they are also modest, teachable and self- distrustful. At the immense meet- ings which they have led he has not seen nor heard any impropriety or extravagance, nor witnessed any- thing sensational or repulsive. He has been regular in his attendance on the meetings; and though he at first feared there would be vehement speech and great excitement, he has been disappointed by the result. The meetings are characterized by exceed- ing calmness at all times, an absence of excitement, a strange stillness and a peaceful solemnity. He be- lieves the work is of God, and that he is blessing it.

The Rev. Dr. Andrew Thompson, one of the most eloquent and earnest ministers of Scotland, has also writ- ten a long and glowing account of the revival, in which he fully cor- roborates the views and impressions of Dr. Bonar. The venerable mis- sionary, Dr. Duff, Dr. William Ar- not, whose presence was one of the blessings of the late conference of the Evangelical Alliance in this city, Prof. Blaikie, the Earl of Cavan, and many other eminent men of various denominations are actively engaged in the good work. Our latest ac- counts indicate its continued preva- lence and increasing power. "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost!"—Christian Intelligencer.

THIS IS, says Harper's "Drawer," a little close upon the Universalists, but they will relish it. A friend told his neighbor that he had been to hear a Universalist sermon.

"Well, what was the text?"

"It was this: 'How shall we es- cape if we neglect so great salva- tion?'"

"And what did he do with that?"

"Well, first he told us something about how great it was, and then he told us how we are all going to es- cape, even if we do neglect it."

THE minister of a rural parish hav- ing, in a season of protracted drought, neglected, as his hearers thought, to pray for rain, was waited upon by a deputation to remonstrate with him on the omission. "Weel, a weel," he replied, after hearing what they had to say: "I'll pray for't to please ye; but the feint a drap ye'll get till the change o' the moon!"

Jokes Hidden in Names.

Chambers' Journal gives some queer stories about names, mostly concerning puns on names.

An old gentleman of the name of Gould, having married a very young wife, wrote a poetical epistle to a friend to inform him of it, and con- cluded it thus:

So you see, my dear sir, though I'm eighty years old,
A girl of eighteen is in love with old Gould.

To which his friend replied:

A girl of eighteen may love Gould, it is true;
But believe me, dear sir, it is Gold without U!

The following epitaph on the Earl of Kildare is happily conceived:

Who killed Kildare? Who dared Kildare to kill?
Death killed Kildare, who dares kill whom he will.

That on John Penn is not so good, but has wit:

Reader! if cash, if that don't be in want of any,
Dig four feet deep, and there shalt find a penny.

The literature of English political anecdote is well garnished with bright sayings, of which the play upon names forms an essential feat- ure. James the First of England and Sixth of Scotland was not re- markable for vigor and steadiness. Having heard of a famous preacher who was very witty in his sermons, and peculiarly so in his choice of texts, he ordered this clergyman to preach before him. With all suit- able gravity the learned divine gave out his text in the following words: "James, first and sixth, in the latter part of the verse: 'He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven by the wind and tossed.'"

The Cavaliers, during the protect- orate, were accustomed in their libations to put a crumb of bread into a glass of wine, and, before they drank it, say: "God send this Crumb-well down."

"The trivial prophecy which I heard," writes Lord Bacon, "when I was a child, and Queen Elizabeth was in the flower of her years, was:

"When Hempe is spun,
England's done:

whereby it was generally conceived that after the princes had reigned which had the principal letters of that word Hempe (which were Hen- ry, Edward, Mary, Philip and Eliza- beth,) England should come to utter confusion; which, thanks be to God, is verified in the change of the name; for that the king's style is now no more of England, but of Britain."

An anonymous English writer some years ago declared his objec- tions to the gold coin, the sovereign, in the following vein: "We need be careful of not incurring the charge of high treason by our common expres- sion concerning it. How strangely the following must sound to any loyal ear: 'I have got a dreadfully bad sovereign'—'I wish I could change my sovereign'—'I am sure the sovereign I have got is not worth twenty shillings.' And how many of her majesty's most devoted sub- jects, if they were to speak their minds freely, must cordially and daily wish to have more sovereigns than one. And to console the friends of monarchy we may be just as cer- tain that every person in her maj- esty's dominions would rather have one than none."

The following Homeric joke was extensively circulated in the papers a few years ago, but it is good enough to be repeated. Some person named Homer had become a bankrupt:

That Homer should a bankrupt be,
Is not so very Odd I'd see;
If 'tis be true, as I'm instructed,
So ill-he had his books conducted.

AT the dedication of the Hanson place Methodist church, in Brook- lyn, New York, a certain Free Meth- odist brother, who was under the im- pression that "wherever the spirit of the Lord is there is liberty," arose in his place in the gallery at the close of Mr. Talmage's address and remarked in a loud voice: "The reason why Methodism has declined is because their churches have been turned into theaters and opera houses, and their ministers into clowns." This remark being regarded as not to the use of edifying, many of the brethren pres- ent responded: "Put him out!" Whereupon Bro. R. J. Luckey took Bro. King, who was not of that fold, by the collar and walked him down stairs. There he was put into the custody of a deputy sheriff, who con- veyed him to the stationhouse and locked him up till the next day, when he was released on bail. On his trial for disturbing a religious meeting, which occurred subsequently, it was proved that he made no resistance whatever when he was arrested, and that he was a peaceable and devoted Christian man. He himself testified that his remark was drawn out by words of Drs. Budington and Tal- mage concerning the early days of Methodism, and that he "felt moved" at the moment to give in his testi- mony as above. The jury seemed to think it a strange thing that a man should be called to account for an audible response in a Methodist meet- ing, and after about ten minutes' de- liberation they brought in a verdict of acquittal.—Independent.

DON'T be afraid of a little fun at home, good people. Don't shut up your houses lest the sun should fade your carpets, and your hearts lest a hearty laugh should shake down some of the musty cobwebs there. If you want to ruin your sons, let them think that all mirth and social en- joyment must be left on the thresh- hold when they come home at night. When once a home is regarded as only a place to eat, drink and sleep in, the work is begun that ends in gambling-houses and degradation. Young people must have fun and re- laxation somewhere. If they do not find it at their own hearthstones, it will be sought in other and perhaps less profitable places. Therefore let the fire burn brightly at night, and make the home ever delightful with all those little arts that parents so perfectly understand. Don't repress the buoyant spirits of your children; half an hour of merriment round the lamp and firelight of home blots out the remembrance of many a care and annoyance during the day, and the best safeguard they can take with them into the world is the unseen influence of a bright little domestic sanctum.—To-Day.

Scientific.

BLACK mustard-seed is said to con- tain twenty-five per cent. of an oil resembling colza oil, and capable of being used for the same purpose.

"ONE of the most curious questions of botanical geography," says the London Athenæum, "is that of the transport of seeds across seas by means of currents, winds, ice and other agents. At the instance of the eminent botanist, M. A. DeCan- dolle, some experiments on this sub- ject have been made by M. Thurat, who lives at Antibes, on the French shore of the Mediterranean. The re- sults of these experiments, which were made to determine the relative durability of different kinds of seeds when kept in sea-water, are pub- lished in the Bibliotheque Universelle et Revue Suisse, and are interesting for comparison with the kindred ex- periments of Darwin and Charles Martius."

THE Japan Gazette notices the anomalous absence of earthquakes in that country during the past winter and spring, tremors almost invari- ably occurring with frequency at the beginning of the latter season. As an interesting collateral phenome- non, the remarkable volcanic activity which has accompanied this absence is worth mentioning. From nearly all parts of the island empire come reports of mountains quaking, re- vealing flaming fissures, or bursting into blossoms of fire. Smoke and steam from Asamayama have been visible in Yeddo on several occasions during the last two months, and Mito and Higo have been especially active; and Kurokymai, near Nikko, hitherto always quiet, was recently shaken with a great shock. "It is," says the Gazette, "as if the very islands were nervous."

AMERICAN genius stands pre-emi- nent in the perfection of mechanical appliances to supersede manual la- bor. Perfect invention to this end is, indeed, the offspring of necessity in the United States, where scarcity of hand-labor has forced forward, to an almost inconceivable degree, human ingenuity. In this special branch of invention there can be no dispute that the Yankee can give the world long odds and beat him. In England, where labor has been al- ways abundant, and, until of late, cheap, the genius of invention has trodden rather the higher than the humbler path, has tended rather to achieve great ends than to effect simple purposes, has given mechan- ical handicraft, less attention, and devoted itself to great physical revo- lutions. In America it is far differ- ent; there is scarcely an industry too humble, a labor too mechanical or common, to escape the attention of the inventor, who, with an almost infinite ingenuity, sets himself to work to combine all the known me- chanical movements and to invent new ones, until the sleight of the hand of the operator is imitated to the life, and the dead metal is in- dued with a life and power with which flesh and blood cannot com- pete.

THE Herald of Health gives the following account of a spurious sugar which is much made now: "It has long been known to chemists that a variety of sugar could be manufac- tured from common starch, sawdust, cotton, or woody fiber of any kind, by treating it with sulphuric acid. The sugar thus produced is called grape-sugar, and two and a half pounds of it are required to equal one of the cane-sugar in sweetness. For some years this kind of sugar has been used in the manufacture of candy and of alcoholic liquors. It is also manufactured in Germany for commercial purposes, and more re- cently a number of manufactories have been established in this coun- try for the purpose of imitating and adulterating the various forms of cane-sugar. Several such establish- ments are located in New York and New Orleans, and one in Madison, Indiana. The greatest fraud seems to be in the article known as golden drip sirup. This sirup is very supe- rior in appearance, but often con- tains not the slightest trace of cane- sugar, being made entirely from saw- dust, paper, rags, starch, and other similar trash, treated with sulphuric acid. This sirup can always be dis- tinguished from the genuine by its reaction with an infusion of tannin. As tea-leaves contain a large amount of tannin, a very convenient test is to put a small quantity of it into a little strong tea. If this sirup is of the kind described, the liquid will become black upon being stirred."

A. H. KENNEDY, of Oberlin, Ohio, has devised a new method of demon- strating the theoretical relations be- tween musical sounds. A reed is placed over the opening of the organ- pipe where the sound is produced, far enough above the opening to ad- mit of the free passage of the air. This reed is tuned in unison with the pipe. When the pipe is sounded, the reed vibrates in harmony with it. Upon this reed is placed a small mirror, varying in size with the size of the reed. When this is held in the sunlight or in any light of suffi- cient power it can be reflected upon a screen or a wall. When the pipe is made to sound, the reed vibrates with it, causing the reflection upon the screen, which is nothing but a little bright spot, to elongate a foot or more. If the pipe is now turned from right to left, the waves appear upon the screen in the same manner as every professor, when explaining the theory of sound, makes them upon the blackboard. This only shows the waves. To show the rela- tions between sounds of different pitch, two pipes are placed together in such a way as to throw the reflec- tions one above the other. The pipes are both sounded at the same time by being connected at their lower extremities by a tube which com- municates with the chambers of each. All the chords can be distinctly seen upon the canvas. In the octave there will be seen one wave of the lower sound coinciding with two of the upper. In the chord of the fifth, two of the lower with three of the upper. By the aid of the rotating mirror the experiment becomes ab- solutely perfect.

Religious Intelligence.

ACCORDING to the London Watch- man, the Wesleyans failed in electing members of the school boards from unwillingness to give prominence to denominationalism rather than weakness.

NATIVE Christian chapels have been so far constructed along the two thousand miles of the sea coast of China that for eight hundred miles of that coast a footman might put up at a Christian chapel each night of the journey.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, according to the Congregational Minutes just issued, has 188 Congregational churches, and 193 ministers, of whom 68 are pastors, 67 acting pastors, and 58 without a charge. The membership is 18,424, of whom 823 were received last year.

GREAT interest is now awakened for Christianizing the Jews. More than $300,000 were contributed in Great Britain alone, the past year, for this object. In Jerusalem there are sixty Jewesses meeting daily to hear the gospel; ministers are now welcomed in every house at Jerusalem. Within the last sixty years, since the establishment of the society, twenty-five thousand people have been converted to the Christian religion.

AN Old Catholic society has just been started in Dusseldorf. Begin- ning with twenty members, they called a public meeting, and received a further addition, bringing up their numbers to over sixty. The matter is to be pushed, and it is expected that the necessary total of one hund- red heads of families will soon be reached, when a congregation will be formed and a church demanded. They have also a priest ready when the time comes for his appearance.

ONE of the many signs of the vio- lence of religious animosity which has been engendered in Germany by the Pope's bitter encyclicals and other utterances is found in a decla- ration of "several Catholics of Cre- feldt," lately published in the Ga- zette of that town, that in future they will take no notice, by way of greet- ing, of the Old Catholics of their for- mer acquaintance, the recent encycl- ical having forbidden the faithful to have any intercourse with unbe- lievers. This is anything but the spirit of the gospel in pope or people.

A LONG struggle between the Evan- gelical and the Liberal Protestants of Neufchatel, Switzerland, has resulted in the organization of a Free Church on a basis similar to that of the neigh- boring Canton of Vaud. Twenty- seven out of the forty-five pastors of the National Church have joined the movement; a free faculty of theology, composed of all the professors and all the students of the national faculty, has been formed; and the prospect is that around the new church will gather the great majority of those who believe in any sort of spiritual religion.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH, BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—The following is a stat- istical report of this church for 1873: Number of members received into the church during the year, 245; dis- missed, 80; average yearly admis- sions for twenty-six years, 136; whole number received since its organiza- tion, 3,547. In its three Sunday schools there are 2,746 scholars, with 258 officers and teachers; number of volumes in libraries, 4,914; school contributions, $2,486. The church contributed for benevolent objects, $57,335; home expenses, $40,000; total amount raised during the year, $97,335.

THE religious troubles in Brazil are not yet composed and very little prog- ress has been made toward their set- tlement. It will be remembered that the government sharply arraigned the Bishop of Olinda for disobeying laws made by the State for the regu- lation of religious affairs. The Bishop has not yet been brought to trial, and the administration shows none of that vigor in dealing with him that characterizes Bismarck in his con- flict with the church. The opinion begins to be expressed "out loud" in many quarters that the only satis- factory settlement of the question is the entire separation of Church and State.

SUBSTITUTE FOR INFANT BAP- TISM.—At a recent conference of Baptist pastors in New York the subject of the dedication of infants to God, as a substitute for baptism, was discussed. One brother cited a case in which he was asked to bap- tize a child who was dying. He com- plied so far as to take the babe in his arms and ask God's blessing upon it. Another remarked that it was not so much the sprinkling of their children that parents seek as some- thing to be done which shall satisfy their own scruples, the child being constructively benefited. He there- fore made it a regular practice to take the children in his arms and pray for them and over them.

THE recent changes in Switzerland can hardly look less alarming to one who sincerely believes, as Pope Pius the Ninth apparently does, that freedom of thought and liberty of conscience are part of the products of antichrist. For Switzerland, which has just shown the door of its do- minions to the papal nuncio, has also just adopted some important amend- ments to the constitution, which, as reported, guarantee liberty of con- science, forbid taxation in behalf of a religious sect, except of those who belong to it, authorize the free exer- cise of public worship, if conducted in an orderly manner, forbid the Jesuits from exercising educational and religious functions in Switzer- land, open all convents to public visitation by civil authorities, and forbid the establishment of new ones. Christian Weekly.

THE Young Men's Christian Asso- ciation in Springfield have opened the door of active membership to other than members of evangelical churches. We learn that this was done on the ground that the work of the association was confined too much to that done by the churches, making the association too much like the fifth coach wheel, if not add- ing somewhat to the friction. As now arranged, not more than two from any one church are eligible to the board of management. The change was effected without a dis- senting voice. Bro. Milton Bradley, of Trinity M. E. Church, is the pres- ident. The new members show a disposition to do such committee work as they are adapted to. One prominent feature of operations is to provide "meal tickets" for aiding the unfortunate, hoping thereby to rob station-houses of many of their patrons.

FROM the Indian Evangelical Re- view we learn that the work of Bible revision is going on in several parts of India. New editions of the Ben- gali and Marathi versions have been recently published. A committee selected from the several missions in the northern part of the Madras Presidency are engaged in revising the Telugu Bible. In the extreme south of India, where two versions of the New Testament in Malayalim have been used, a committee from various missions has been at work for two years in preparing a single version, to take their place. The first two gospels have been published and Luke is nearly completed. In Madagascar, too, says the English Independent, a committee began last June the work of revising the Mala- gasy translation of the Bible, a work that will probably extend over sev- eral years. In China the Presbyte- rian Missionary Society English have just published the first edition of the New Testament in the Ro- manized colloquial of the Amoy dis- trict.

THE fourteenth annual meeting of the Foochan mission (Methodist) be- gan its sessions October 8, and was presided over by Bishop Harris. The services were held in a large tent. Several preliminary meetings, to which all the missionaries in Foochan were invited, were held for the dis- cussion of important questions con- nected with their work. "The treaty rights of missionaries and their con- verts" was one of the most prominent of these topics and led to an animated discussion. All the missionaries were agreed that no appeal should be made to the consuls in behalf of native converts except in aggravated cases of persecution clearly and solely on account of their Christianity. In the matter of self-support it was shown that three preachers have been en- tirely supported by native contribu- tions during the past year and a con- siderable reduction has been made in appropriations to other circuits. The discussion of the organization of mis- sions brought to light strong objec- tions to the present plan of the super- intendency, the three superintend- ents of the missions in China being themselves anxious to have the office abolished. Five candidates for deacon's orders were ordained and two elders. Eleven candidates were continued on trial and eight admit- ted. The annual report gives the fol- lowing statistics: 1,025 members, 595 probationers, 301 baptized children, a decrease of 56 members and 226 pro- bationers, but an increase of 21 bap- tized children. The decrease in mem- bership is owing to a more rigid ex- ercise of discipline, removing those who have joined the church from un- worthy motives. Eighty preachers were in attendance, most of them bringing their wives. Especial at- tention is to be given the coming year to educational matters, partic- ularly to the establishment of schools in the interior.

THE "second statement" of the American Palestine Exploration So- ciety has been in our hands for two or three weeks and should have been previously noticed. It includes Prof. J. A. Paine's account of the discov- ery of an ancient Greek inscription near Beirut, on a road running by the Nahr-el-Kelb, the old Lycus river. The now famous Hamath in- scriptions are exactly copied for the first time, and described and analyzed by William Hayes Ward, D. D. He is unable to translate the inscriptions, but only determines the characters employed, the direction of the writ- ing, and the recurrent hieroglyphic groups. These inscriptions are of great antiquity, and open an entirely new chapter in the history of writ- ing. They are a hieroglyphic entirely distinct from any hitherto known. Since Dr. Ward's paper was written there has appeared in England a dis- cussion of these stones from the pen of a most competent French scholar, Fr. Lenormant, who has been exam- ining in the British Museum eight seals in a chapter similar to this of Hamath. Two of these seals had been figured already by Layard in his folio, "Monuments of Nineveh," and are copied in the plates given by Dr. Ward. But Lenormant sees in these seals closer approximations to the Hamath signs than did Layard, and is satisfied that they are in the same character. But we know the date of these seals to have been col- lected by King Sargon, of Assyria (721—704 B. C.,) or by his son Sen- nacherib (704—681 B. C.) This brings down the use of the Hamath char- acters to a later period than had been supposed. Lenormant attempts to identify characters on these seals with characters on the Hamath stones, which are probably the names of Hamath kings. The two kings of Hamath of this date thus far known are Ilu-bid and Inl-llu. One ele- ment ilu is common to both names, and Lenormant supposes one char- acter common to the two hypothet- ical royal names to be this ilu, which would give the value of inl and bid to two other characters. His reason- ing would be good if we were only sure that the characters are correctly copied by him. But the copies here given of the Hamath inscription do not bear out Lenormant's reading, and we should be glad of better cop- ies of the seals, such as we under- stand are soon to be sent to this country. We fear that the problem of reading these curious inscriptions is not very near solution. The be- ginning is given in this same state- ment of the itineracy of the party exploring in Eastern Palestine, and will call for further attention. We notice in the brief account given of the Di Cesnola collection of Cypriote antiquities a word given to one terra cotta votive offering. It represents the duties of the midwife, and the account in Exodus i, 16, referring to the position of the woman in labor on the "stool," is excellently illustrated. Independent.

Our Local Ministry.

This ministry has been and still is a most effective element in the Methodist system. It is not an idle, unemployed or surplus material, but a species or class called and designated for its own peculiar work. The men are not waiting for invitations to pastorates, they are not candidates for vacant pulpits, but they are already in their chosen field, and doing that to which God in his providence has assigned them. It is not a separate ministry, set apart to the one thing of the care of souls and preaching the word, but rather a ministry in which secular pursuits are recognized as compatible and legitimate. Much available talent has been brought into exercise, and many choice gifts have been utilized by this feature in our economy, which would otherwise have remained undiscovered and unemployed. Many sections and communities are furnished with preaching and with the sacraments by local preachers which would be left destitute without them.

As assistant and supplemental to our traveling ministry, the local is an arm of service of great importance. In case of sickness, necessary absence or any disabling circumstances in the pastorate, the local preacher comes in to keep up the regular ministrations and to supply the lack of service. In the appointments of an Annual Conference it often happens that he is employed to advantage in supplying a work for which no traveling preacher can be readily found. On circuits where the pastor can be at each appointment not more than once or twice a month, it is fortunate if there are local preachers to alternate with him, so that there may be preaching every Sunday. The Discipline speaks of the duty of local preachers in this wise: "It shall be the duty of local preachers to aid the preacher in charge of the circuit, station or mission to which they belong in supplying the people with the ministry of the word. They shall accordingly be applied to by the preacher in charge, as soon as he enters on his work, to state what amount of service they are able and willing to perform; he may then draw up a plan by which their labors shall be regulated; and they shall be authorized to form new congregations, to take a list of the names of all candidates for church membership, and, if expedient, receive them into the church; provided that all such congregations, candidates and members be reported, as soon as possible, to the preacher in charge, in order that they may be placed immediately under his pastoral care."

Evidently it is contemplated by the law that the local preacher should preach, and this not in an occasional and haphazard way, but habitually and after a well-devised plan. His position is not one of retirement from the ministry, but of labor, modified and determined by circumstances. He may be without pastoral responsibility or oversight, and full work in the pulpit may not be expected, but he is to preach. Monthly, semi-monthly, and sometimes weekly, but still regularly is he to preach. It is often a fault with pastors, and perhaps also with presiding elders, that no plan is formed by which the services of local preachers are brought into requisition. In stations the preacher in charge is expected to fill his own pulpit, and he may be at a loss how to carry out the directions given in the Discipline. A suggestion, however, is found in the authorization of local preachers "to form new congregations." A man who is truly called as a local preacher will have this aggressive spirit, and will seek to form and organize appointments where none are ready to his hand. He will not wait to be invited to fill the prominent pulpits already supplied by the regular pastor, but he will push out into the suburbs of the cities and sparse country neighborhoods, and organize Sunday schools, hold prayer meetings, and preach the word where no ground has been broken hitherto.

It is a ministry surrounded with peculiar difficulties and embarrassments. The time for study and pulpit preparation is limited; the mind is occupied and the spirit often harassed with business. The diversion of thought, the annoying contact with men and affairs, and the bodily weariness consequent upon daily occupation, unfit, in a serious measure, for reading and preaching. Few men can maintain the mental and spiritual tone needed for the best pulpit work under such conditions. The maximum of interest and power can rarely be reached amidst the toil, exhaustion and cares of secular pursuits. It is no fault of the local preacher that he should fall below the highest standard of popularity and effectiveness, as compared with those who give themselves wholly to the pastoral office. It is enough that he can be eminently useful, and that where his labors are wisely directed they are of inestimable value for the building up of the church and for the salvation of souls. An embarrassment to usefulness and acceptability, to which local preachers are more liable than their traveling brethren, grows out of their secular pursuits. In trade, and in business dealings generally, suspicion of sharpness, unfairness, worldliness and covetousness may be excited. There may be only the appearance of evil, or possibly not even this when fairly considered. What would hardly affect the reputation of a private member of the church, impairs the usefulness of the preacher, and closes the ears and hearts of the people against his message. The local ministry is in peculiar danger at this point, and many neutralize and cripple their effectiveness by lack of a careful and circumspect course in their contact with the world. Where this peril is avoided the word is clothed with a power which springs from a life kept unsullied amidst the greatest temptations.

With these hinderances and embarrassments the local preacher has this strongly in his favor: that he is near and in close sympathy with the people. He is in the same case with them, has the same labor and cares, and can most considerately and intelligently reach their condition and wants. In this he has a decided advantage over the preacher whose experience and habits have placed him at a distance from the trials and temptations incidental to business and temporal engrossments. A man of reading, prayer and blameless life, in the local relation, has this singular qualification for usefulness, and wields an influence peerless and enviable in its own sphere. The noblest examples of consecration and devoted piety are found in the local ranks, and some of the most honored names in our history sustained and adorned this relation. Let our local brethren magnify their high and useful office, and let them take care of the talents which the Master has given to their keeping. Everything which looks to the conservation and improvement of this eminent institution of Methodism should receive careful and intelligent consideration.

A Pleasant Trip.

Dr. Kennedy, the editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, after attending the Florida Conference at Jacksonville, extended his trip up the St. John's river and to St. Augustine. We quote the most of the very interesting account:

On Monday morning, in company with Revs. C. A. Fulwood, R. M. Lockwood and Z. D. Cottrell, we took passage on the steamer Darlington for a short trip up the St. John's. This noble stream, with an average width, as far as we ascended its waters, of two and a half miles, and only inferior to the Mississippi in length and the rapidity of its current, far surpassed any conceptions we had entertained of either its magnitude or beauty. It was necessary to keep in mind the geographical anomaly presented by the course of the St. John's to realize the fact that, while going "up the river," we were going "down the country." We shall attempt no description of the scenery, which charmed us perhaps as much by its novelty as its natural beauty. The dense tropical growth which borders the stream is every now and then broken by a "settlement," while several beautiful villages, which depend for their thrift and most of their population upon Northern visitors, dot the shore. Of these, so far as our trip extended, Mandarin, Hibernia, Magnolia and Green Cove Springs are the most important. The first-named derives its chief notoriety from having been selected by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe as her winter home. Her cottage, though near the bank, is almost hidden from view by the splendid oaks which surround it, and a flourishing orange grove of several acres, which extends almost to the water's edge. As sight-seeing was a leading object of our tour, we felt some regret at not having a near view of the writer of that wonderful work of fiction, Uncle Tom's Cabin. We had a glimpse of her figure as the boat passed, but it was too transient and indistinct to justify a description of her person. We forego the attempt therefore, lest it should be as imaginative and fabulous as her portraiture of the now defunct "Institution."

Between Mandarin and Hibernia Dr. Hicks and Rev. T. W. Moore have thriving orange groves, which promise to be very remunerative in a few years. We regretted that the limited time at our command forbade a visit to these groves.

At Tocoi, fifty-three miles below Jacksonville, we left the boat, with its gentlemanly purser, Mr. Talliaferro, to whom we were indebted for appreciated courtesies. Taking an ordinary street car, drawn along seantling rails by two horses, driven tandem, we reached St. Augustine in perfect comfort and with unexpected dispatch—just two hours having been consumed in accomplishing the journey of fifteen miles. An hour or two of daylight remaining to us after reaching the city, we expended it in walking along the sea-wall, which constitutes the main promenade of the city, and in examining the exterior of Fort San Marco, which is said to have been begun in 1620, and to have occupied one hundred years in building. While engaged in admiring this stupendous and venerable relic of human handiwork, the interest of the scene was enhanced by the splendors of a tropical sunset—the most gorgeous it has ever been our good fortune to look upon. Reluctantly we turned from our fascinating surroundings, full of regret that we had so little time to devote to observations in which days might have been spent without satiety. At the Orientai House, where guests are allowed their option of the American or European plan, we enjoyed as well-spread a table and luxurious lodging as are provided at the Metropolitan or Continental, and we have tried both. Far less pretentious in outward appearance than several other hotels in the city, we were somewhat apprehensive at first of having made a mistake in selecting the Oriental for our brief sojourn; but the table and dormitories, together with the courteous attentions of the landlord, satisfied us that no visitor to St. Augustine can do better in securing real comfort than by intrusting himself to the hospitality of Mr. W. G. Ponce and his obliging copartner. Rising early the next morning, and partaking of a capital breakfast prepared for us at an unusual hour, we sallied out for such sight-seeing as could be accomplished before the departure of the car. Passing along the narrow streets, lined with ancient buildings, whose projecting balconies approach each other near enough to permit conversation in an ordinary tone, we visited the Plaza de la Constitution, glanced at the old cathedral, with its quaint Moorish tower and chime of bells, the Bishop's Palace, the cemetery and the old entrance gate, which is all that remains to show that this was once a walled town. Everything about the place wears an antique aspect that is intensely fascinating, and surely tried our resolution to leave by the first car. The native population is mainly of Minorcan descent and Roman Catholic in religion. There is, however, a steadily increasing immigration of Protestants, especially for the winter months. The Episcopalians have a neat church, and we were greatly pleased to find in the rector, Rev. Mr. Mumford, an acquaintance, with whom we spent an exceedingly pleasant hour. The Presbyterians also have a church and pastor, whom, to our regret, we failed to see. The Methodist Episcopal Church South owns a substantial church edifice, said to be worth $3,000, but has had no minister in the place for several years. The building is occupied by the colored people who are in ecclesiastical union with the Methodist Episcopal Church. We could not learn that there was a white Methodist in the place, but it seemed strange to us that Southern Methodism should fail to effect a permanent lodgment in a community where it had the advantage of a commodious church building in which to gather its friends. Ought we not to have a missionary in St. Augustine?

Papal Intrigues.

Great excitement has been caused in Roman Catholic and Protestant circles in Europe by the recent publication in Germany of a document which implicates the Pope in an underhanded intrigue to control the selection of a successor to the pontificate. It is understood that the document was published with the privity of Prince Bismarck, who is said to be a sponsor for its authenticity, with the view of opening the eyes of the Roman Catholic States in Europe to the fact that they are considered mere puppets by the Jesuitical and clerical party, who have secretly devised a plan to deprive them of their customary votes and influence in the selection of a Pope.

This extraordinary document is dated May 28, 1873, and purports to be a bull of Pius the Ninth, expressing the determinations of a species of papal caucus, and in many respects altering the form of election to the papal chair. It sets forth that, following the example of Pius the Sixth, the Pope, by this rescript, provides for the speedy and free election of a new pontiff after his demise; and he therefore, proprio motu, repeals not only the laws which ordain that the election of a new pontiff is to be made at the place where the late pontiff may depart this life, but also the laws concerning the ceremonials and customs which in former times have been observed on such occasions. It liberates the cardinals from their obligation not to discuss matters pertaining to the choice of his successor during the life of the Pope, and it permits them to consider the most notable means of hastening the decision. They may discuss all that relates to the fixing of the day for the election; and if there should be any impediment to the holding of the congregation of cardinals in Rome, as is anticipated, it may be convened in the principality of Monaco, in a French city, or even in the Island of Malta. Further, the bull neutralizes and disallows the influence or pressure such as have been usually exercised by Roman Catholic governments in the selection of a pontiff, and avows the intention to prevent the election of a candidate whose policy would be different from that which has been inaugurated toward the governments of Europe by the present Pope, and to secure the election of one who will not recede from his policy, nor from any of the theological dogmas which he has enunciated during his pontificate.

In consequence of the exposure of this rescript, it is stated that the "governments of Germany, Austria and Italy have come to an understanding for joint action in the event of the bull being acted upon, so as to protect their common interests;" and it is further announced that the German government has distinctly stated that it "will not recognize the legality of the election of a new Pope unless the proceedings take place in a regularly constituted conclave." So that, if the matter is not accommodated, we may again see the phenomenon of two Popes, hostile in dogma and in political combinations.

The papal journals and the high officials of the hierarchy, realizing the perilous position in which they and the pontificate are placed by the untimely publication of this document, with its exposure of the wire-pulling management of the papal junta, denounce it as a forgery. But the Cologne Gazette, in which it originally appeared, and which is believed to be inspired by Prince Bismarck, insists upon the authenticity of the document, and has published the Latin text of the bull, with a body of circumstantial evidence which substantiates its genuineness. A prominent Ultramontane journal, the Germania, of Berlin, which had pronounced the bull a forgery, gave as a ground for its opinion that the one which has been published was an imitation of one issued by Pius the Sixth, whereas the document which has really emanated from the Vatican is modeled on a constitution of Pius the Seventh. This unfortunate admission of the Germania, that a recent and secret bull regulating the election of the next Pope does really exist, is generally regarded as strong corroborative proof that the version published by the Cologne Gazette is correct, and the sensation caused by it is on the increase throughout the continent.

Apart from this, however, and notwithstanding the denial of the authenticity of the alleged bull by those whose plans are exposed and in great measure disconcerted by its unseasonable exposure, it bears upon its face the unmistakable lineaments of the Pope, and furnishes other strong internal evidence of his authorship. The most notable achievement of the pontificate of Pius the Ninth has been the assertion of his infallibility and its confirmation as a dogma of faith by a council of the Romish Church. That infallibility extended, necessarily, not only to matters of faith, but of judgment and administration. He could issue no dogma and lay down no policy that was not infallibly right, or which must not be implicitly believed and carried out. That he should, on the eve of his departure from the world, exercise another of the logical results of the infallibility that had been decreed to him, namely, select his own successor, is no cause for astonishment. It is the natural outcome of the principle that he could do no wrong personally or spiritually, and that whatever he might do or decree is binding upon the actions and conscience of those over whom he is the supreme and infallible head. Their acts upon his death will decide whether the infallibility dogma was intended as a mere personal ornament of the Pope, to be worn during his life-time and afterward cast aside with other useless rubbish of the past, or as a permanent part of the organic structure of the Latin Church. This is the dilemma in which the infallibility dogma places the papacy, and which may eventually rend it in twain.—Christian Intelligencer.

MRS. MARY A. LANE, relict of John W. Lane, died in New Orleans, on Saturday, February 7, aged sixty-eight. Sister Lane was an old member of the Felicity Street Methodist church and a woman of ripe religious experience. She enjoyed a full salvation and exemplified it in her daily life. When we first knew her, more than twenty years ago, she was in deep sorrow from the loss of her husband, who had then been dead some years, and was also suffering from general ill health and partial blindness. Her severe chastenings were then bringing forth the fruits of righteousness, and she had been led by them to a wonderful nearness to God. Her subsequent history has been a quiet, patient and resigned waiting on God. Her end was rather sudden, and, we believe, she was in a state of unconsciousness during her last hours. Her walk was with God, her conversation had long been in heaven, and now she is with Christ—with him whom she supremely loved. Her funeral at the Felicity Street church, on Sunday afternoon, was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends. Our New Orleans churches are losing many of their old and venerated members by death. May the living lay it to heart, and may those that remain increase their diligence and devotion in the work of the Lord.

Catechisms and Theological Institutes.

MR. EDITOR: The most superficial thinkers among our ministry and working laity must see and feel the great necessity of something more substantial in our Sunday school theology. Our children really know but little comparatively of the distinctive doctrines of our church and the plan of salvation. I am not disposed to underrate the work we are doing, nor the arduous labors performed by our brethren. They are doubtless doing the very best they can on the plan they are working, and the limited means at their command to work it. We are honestly of the opinion that in our Sabbath school songs, in our uniform lesson papers, and, in a word, in all our Sunday school labors, there is a want of depth in real devotion. Can we not take a deeper hold on divine truth, develop a higher and a better style of Christian education than we usually find in our Sunday schools? Drawings and paintings, banners and ditties may have their use, but I am sure they degrade the soul when used as a part of Christian training for the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ. Much money and labor may be given with proper motives, and yet the end be defeated by the very labor and money given. That our children may be more fully and generally instructed, we respectfully suggest to the next General Conference the propriety of having compiled from all our catechisms and question-books, with such other additions as the present advanced state of the church may require, four catechisms, for the use of all our Sunday schools, and to be used in all our families in the religious instruction of their children, embracing all the usages and doctrines of our church that the children are capable of receiving; and then let all the children in and out of our Sunday schools, belonging to Methodist families, understand that a knowledge of these catechisms is important to full membership in the church. For instance, A. is a member of the church of the first catechism, and B. of the second, etc. With all our professed improvements in science and religion, take the masses, in the church and out of it, and ignorance is the most formidable of all the difficulties we have to contend with. We have preached misunderstood salvation by faith only until our children and churches believe too much. They believe God will save them by faith, and let them sin on. We want a faith that is enlightened, that works by love and purifies the heart. We have on this district four thousand members, and three thousand do not pay annually $1,500 to the cause of Christianity. As a matter of course their Christian life is in harmony with their financial obligations to God. Five hundred enlightened Christians of the same means would do more for the church and the salvation of the world than the three thousand do.

Another and important suggestion to the General Conference, for their consideration, is the propriety of having compiled from our standard works four books of institutes, leaving out the Calvinism and issues long since passed away, and modernizing and meeting the issues now brought against us; at the same time connecting the first book with the fourth catechism, making it the book of reference for the Bible class in Sunday school, making the four books suited to the four years' study of our young preachers. I will not attempt to criticise Fletcher's Checks or Watson's Institutes. I am sure the Checks is the best book I ever read except the Bible, and yet all the important doctrines which the church now needs, contained in the two volumes, might be put in fifty pages. I cannot say as much for the Institutes as for the Checks. I am sure, with the present lights before the mind of the church, all the important points discussed might be embraced in two hundred pages. A young preacher has to make an outlay of at least $200 to supply himself with our standard works and a few outside commentaries. Straw, chaff and wheat all in a pile, the young man has neither the money nor the time to examine so large a bulk. If a man could live two or three hundred years we might dispense with concentrated books and thoughts; but life is so short and time so precious that we must adopt the shortest way to the best results. Thousands of our members, who are not able to purchase Clark, Benson, Fletcher and Watson, could spare the means to buy the four catechisms and four books of institutes.

To accomplish this great enterprise it will require a large outlay in money by the friends of the church. It will take time to complete such a work; and yet if it is never begun it will never be consummated. We think it most probable that other sections of the great Methodist family could be induced to take part in furnishing the church with such books. It would be a great point gained for all the Methodisms, as they have the same articles of religion, to have the Ritual worded the same. Decided improvement might be made in this direction. Strange that so much of the old monkish fossils should have been so long retained in the Protestant Church. The same hymn-book might be used by all the Methodists, the same catechisms and institutes, the same conditions of membership, the same ministerial training. We may be one without organic union. Individual enterprise can never accomplish what the church really needs in this direction.

S. P. RICHARDSON.

Difference of Opinion.

We had thought there was entire unanimity of opinion as to the execrable character of the rule now and for several years past exercised over the "reconstructed" State of South Carolina, not knowing that even those engaged in plundering the people under the forms of law ventured any vindication of their infamous conduct. It seems, however, that we were in error, and that the righteous soul of a Northern Methodist Bishop finds occasion for profound gratification in the condition of affairs as he finds it upon a visit to South Carolina. A correspondent of the Christian Neighbor, writing of the recent session of the South Carolina Conference of the Northern Church, held in Columbia, says:

"The Conference is almost wholly composed of colored men. The few whites who belong to it are from the North. The Bishops and Northern visitors occupied the pulpit and platform on public occasions. The home element had no showing. The prominent figures of the Conference were Dr. Dashiel and Bishop Haven. The first seemed to be a large-hearted and cultured Christian gentleman; for the second I regret that I cannot say as much. The missionary address of the one was a noble work of his church; the Church Extension speech of the other was an exhibition of too much hatred toward the whites of the South. Among other objectionable remarks Bishop Haven expressed himself as profoundly grieved with the present condition of South Carolina. That which is a source of mortification to the politicians of the North is a matter of exultation to this minister of the gospel."

As there is no reason to charge Bishop Haven with intfirmity of intellect, the above sentiment can only be ascribed to depravity of heart—a charge which it is painful to bring against one holding his high position. It would seem that to this reverend gentleman's moral perception the apparent if not real ascendancy of the negro condones any amount of flagrant sin necessary to its attainment and maintenance.—Southern Christian Advocate.

Livingstone.

Livingstone is dead. The hero explorer, who has opened to the Christian world so much of the mysterious interior of Africa, has finished his work in the midst of his chosen field. The report reaches us that in June last he succumbed to an attack of dysentery. It is also stated that his body was embalmed and forwarded to England. We may infer therefore, that the English relief expedition had reached him before his death.

David Livingstone was born in Scotland in 1817, and had not, therefore, lived to be a very old man. His parents were poor but pious, and with much self-denial, succeeded in giving their son a university education. Livingstone's taste was for medicine, in which he at last graduated. Offering himself to the London Missionary Society, he was accepted and sent to South Africa. Here he was associated with Moffat, whose daughter he subsequently married. Pushing forward to the country of the Makololo, he traversed the continent to the West, coming out at St. Paul de Loando; returning again he traced the Zambesi to its mouth on the east side of Africa. Here, leaving his faithful escort, he took ship for England. After receiving all the honors his countrymen could bestow, and writing the history of his expedition, he returned to the mouth of the Zambesi again, with the intention of exploring the rivers of the interior in small boats, propelled by steam. During this expedition his wife died, and Livingstone himself was prostrated with fever. Returning to England again, and publishing a second volume of travels, he set out on a third expedition, which was designed to trace the connection between several of the lakes of the interior of the continent and the Nile. A report having been circulated that he was murdered by the natives, a search expedition, under the charge of Henry M. Stanley, was organized by the New York Herald, which succeeded in reaching and relieving Livingstone. Since then little has been heard from him till the announcement of his death.—Methodist.

DR. VIRCHOW has been experimenting with reference to the influence of coal-gas on vegetation when diffused through the soil. He finds after a long series of carefully-conducted researches, that coal-gas is a active poison, trees, shrubs and ornamental plants being killed by it when it is allowed to permeate the soil about the roots.

MEDITATION is the life of the soul; action is the soul of meditation; honor is the reward of action; so meditate that thou mayest do; so do that thou mayest purchase honor, for which purchase give God the glory.—Quarles.

WE ARE INFORMED that Logan Dameron has again assumed the business management of the house of periodicals of the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, St. Louis, Missouri.

REV. DR. N. E. COBLEIGH, editor of the Methodist Advocate, Atlanta, Georgia, died on Sunday, February

A CURIOUS document relating to the massacre of St. Bartholomew is, says La France, about to be published. It is the journal of a German student, J. W. de Botzheim, who happened to be at Orleans at the time of the massacre, and who in simple language and with minute precision has recorded his recollections of the frightful scenes that occurred on that day. Botzheim was not only an actual witness of the massacres, but he narrowly escaped death himself on several occasions. This record of his experiences, which was lately discovered in Germany, occupies not fewer than sixty-one pages. It is in Latin; certain words and certain characteristic phrases are, however, found here and there recorded in French. The manuscript discovered is unfortunately not the original, but a copy very difficult to decipher, on account of its numerous abbreviations. The Latin is rather ungrammatical, and the spelling very defective.—Primitive Methodist.

THE style of writing required in the great world is distinguished by a free and daring grace, a careless security, a fine, sharp polish, a delicate and perfect taste; while that fitted for the people is characterized by a vigorous, natural fullness, a profound depth of feeling and an engaging naivete. We do not now speak of a still higher region—that of genius—for which there exist no boundaries of high and low, which embrace the most polished cosmopolitanism and the homeliest nationality.—Gothe.

NATURE is the Interpreter of the Bible, not only because it explains what is specifically metaphorical in it, but because it explains all its language. It is the mold in which its thoughts are cast—the basis upon which its sublimest revelations rest; not only the embroidery, but the very warp of its substance.—Hugh Macmillan.

PIANO AND ORGAN TUNER.—Mr. H. H. Haus, whose advertisement will be found in another column, is an experienced tuner, having been for many years engaged in the business in New Orleans and other cities in the South.

COOKING STOVES.—Our excellent neighbor, J. H. Campman, No. 133 Poydras street, advertises under full guarantee his Philanthropist cooking stove, for which he is the sole agent. Give him a call.

J. WOLF & Co., general dealers in crockery and queensware, cutlery, etc., No. 633 Magazine street.

HAIR STORE.—Mr. George T. Shilling, proprietor of that large and fashionable hair store, No. 381 Dryades street, maintains that he is a practical worker of human hair, giving his whole time and attention to the business, watching the market continually, and buying only when prices are low, and last, but not least, paying comparatively a small rent he can afford to sell his goods at very low figures, and defies competition in this or any other market. He requests the public at large to convince themselves of the truth of this assertion by calling at his store and pricing his immense stock, consisting of switches, braids, curls in fact everything in the hair line. Ladies should remember this. See advertisement in another column.

HARDWARE.—To any of our readers interested in purchasing hardware, cutlery, tools, agricultural implements or fishing tackle we commend the advertisement of Messrs. Rousset & [illegible], No. 239 Old Levee street, who propose to sell their large and varied stock of foreign and domestic hardware at cost. We quote the following from the New Orleans Times: "We are gratified to note the fact that the long-established business of the late Mr. A. Rousset, a most excellent citizen, is continued by his son, Mr. Paul Rousset. This is as it should be. This is the way to build up a house, whose name, despite the changes of time, shall go down from one generation to another, and always stand in the front rank."

BOOTS AND SHOES.—Mr. J. Estoup, No. 389 Dryades street, has a stock of boots and shoes that for extent and variety may surprise those who have not observed the rapid growth of that portion of the city and the enterprise of its merchants. We are informed by some who have priced his goods and compared with other houses that his rates are exceedingly low. See his advertisement which appears to-day.

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—Mr. J. W. Blackman, whose commercial college is located at No. 131 Carondelet street, is a most worthy and excellent citizen and a competent teacher. The influence of such a gentleman as Mr. Blackman upon the manners and morals of the young men and boys under his training will be favorable, and we take pleasure in calling attention to his advertisement.

BUGGIES AND CARRIAGES.—D. M. Hollingsworth, Nos. 54 and 56 Baronne street, whose card appears elsewhere, has been for many years connected with the business, is thoroughly acquainted with the trade and the demands of customers, and is one of the most clever and reliable merchants in our city.

LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S BOOTS AND SHOES.—Mrs. James A. Kelly, No. 365 Dryades street, advertises in these columns all styles of ladies' and children's shoes, which, having bought at wonderfully low prices, she is able to sell on such terms as to defy competition.

DRY GOODS.—Mr. Auguste Marx advertises fancy and staple dry goods, bought at Northern auctions, which he can sell at prices remarkably low, owing to the manner of purchasing. His establishment is located at No. 383 Dryades street. See advertisement in columns of this issue.

WOOD AND COAL.—Messrs. H. Mollegen & Co., No. 321 Rampart street, offer, at the lowest prices, all kinds of wood and coal, and guarantee good measure. They will saw and split the wood, for those desiring it, for one-fourth the usual charge. See advertisement in these columns.

THE BEST OF MEATS.—Dennis Bruza, at stalls 13 and 15, Dryades Market, advertises to supply families, steamboats and ships with beef, pork and mutton, wholesale and retail. Give him a call, and you will satisfy yourselves of the excellence of his meats.

PERIQUE TOBACCO.—Mr. E. Bourgeois, No. 19 Conti street, advertises the celebrated Perique tobacco, raised at Grand Point, parish of St. James, Louisiana, of which he has a stock constantly on hand to suit purchasers. See advertisement.

THE genuine Halford Leicestershire Table Sauce, now so generally in use in families, can be obtained of all good grocers. You have but to try a single bottle to become its reference. It is the cheapest, at the same time that it is the best. fe5 1t

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures
EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
FROM
The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder-humor.) He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

☞ ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Row and Inflamed,

Cure:

Prostration of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful. As no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly,
DONALD KENNEDY.
Price, $1.60 per bottle. For sale by all druggists.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE BEST ADVICE THAT CAN BE given to persons suffering from DYSPEPSIA, BILIOUS COMPLAINTS,
CONSTIPATION, COLIC, SICK HEADACHE,
Fever and Ague, Nervous Debility,

or of any disorder of the Stomach, Liver or Kidneys, is to tone, cleanse and regulate them by the use of

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills.

They act very mildly, yet thoroughly restore the functional action of the Digestive Organs and the Intestines, and renovate the whole system, imparting a good appetite and healthy assimilation of food. They produce neither Nausea, Griping nor Debility, and may be taken at any time, without change of diet or occupation.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

Dr. Tutt's Hair Dye

possesses qualities that no other dye does. Its effect is instantaneous, and is so natural that it cannot be detected by the closest observer. Being harmless and easily applied, it is in general use among the fashionable Hair-Dressers in every large city in the United States. Price, $1 a box. Sold everywhere.

SONG.—THE WINDS.

The South Wind sings of happy springs,
And summers hastening on their way;
The South Wind smells of cowslip bells,
And blossom-spangled meads of May;
But sweeter is her red, red mouth
Than all the kisses of the South.

The West Wind breathes of sunset heaths,
And yellow pride of woods grown old;
The West Wind flies from autumn skies,
And sun-clouds overlaid with gold;
But the golden locks I love the best
Outshine the glories of the West.

The North Wind sweeps from crystal deeps,
And Arctic halls of endless night;
The North Wind blows o'er drifted snows,
And mountains robed in virgin white;
But purer far her maiden's soul
Than all the snows that shroud the Pole.

The East Wind shrills o'er desert hills
And dreary coasts of barren sand;
The East Wind moans of sea bleached bones,
And ships that sink in sight of land;
But the cold, cold East may rave and moan,
For her soft, warm heart is all my own.

Chambers' Journal.

All About a Butterfly.

BY UNCLE SAMUEL.

THE SCALES—HOW THEY ARE UNITED TO THE WING.

"Why are the scales not alike, having the same number of notches?" asked James.

"Because each scale is designed to fit a particular place, and it must have the special tint which belongs to the portion of the wing it occupies. Any change in the form of the scales by the lengthening or shortening of a single tooth would mar the beauty of the marking and the perfection of the shading of the spots. In a single scale there is nothing which displays any great skill in outline, and there would be no difficulty in drawing a more accurate mathematical figure and one more in accord with our idea of the beautiful; but when we look upon the rich coloring of the wing, and the regularity of the spots by which each species is distinguished, and the perfect blending and shading of the various hues, we cannot help admiring the exquisite taste and admirable skill displayed in the structure of this wonderful mosaic."

"Mosaic! What do you mean by that word, uncle?" asked Mary. "Is it anything about Moses?"

"Mosaic is the name of a kind of inlaid work, like patchwork, made of very small pieces of hard substances, such as glass, marble, stones and gems, carefully laid together and cemented, so that the whole figure will represent some picture. These small pieces are of various colors, and generally cubical in form, and when put together look like stitches of different colors in worsted work. It does not receive its name from Moses, but from a Greek word which means polished, because the pieces are all polished, and fitted to their places perfectly. Now you can see through the microscope what kind of pieces are inlaid in the butterfly's wing to make up the beautiful picture which we so much admire. These pieces are very small and very carefully fixed in their places. They are so small and so closely put together that their number on a single wing is inconceivably great. In a mosaic human skill has put as many as eight hundred and seventy separate pieces in a square inch. This is regarded as a great triumph of art, and so it is. What, then, will we say when we count, in the same extent of surface, the astonishing number of two hundred thousand separate pieces, all put in their proper places without a single mistake to mar the beauty or destroy the symmetry of the picture? If we admire the modern mosaic, and wonder at the skill and patience of the man that constructed it, we ought to adore the wisdom and skill of the great Jehovah, who works with a matchless art even on a butterfly's wing."

"The most perfect workmanship of the most celebrated artist is but clumsy bungling when compared with the skill of the divine Architect. How wonderful are his works, and how much of their beauty and grandeur is brought to our knowledge by means of the microscope! The world is full of pictures of beauty, in the gorgeous tints of the delicate flower, in the bill and plumage of birds, and in the exquisite mosaic which displays its glory on the wing of the butterfly and moth."

"Uncle," said Mary, "Bertha says she thinks the scales must be put on the wings with very poor paste, they rub off so easily. Just look here; Henry has rubbed nearly all the scales off one of the wings. Do tell us how they are fastened to their places."

"I will take a piece of the wing nearly stripped of its scales by Henry, and put it under the microscope, so that you can all see for yourselves how the union of scale and wing is effected. As you examine the wing let me explain what you see. The part of the wing that is scaleless is clear and marked with ridges, which appear like small slots or holes. Into these ridges the stems of the scales are inserted, and thus are fastened to the wing. The ridges are in rows, and so close that the scales overlap like the shingles on the roof of a house, so that you might say that the wing is roofed with scales. The wing is very thin, and yet on each side you will find these ridges, each one holding its scale in its proper place. No scale ever misses the ridge it belongs to and exchanges places with some other one. If such a thing should occur the picture would be spoiled, and the butterfly would be so far deformed."

"I can see now," said Charley, "why the scales differ so much in size and outline. Like the different pieces of a mosaic picture, each scale is made for the place it has to fill—ent and painted just as the picture requires it to be. The stem must be made to fit the socket that holds it to its place. If it was too long or too short it would not answer the purpose. The other day I saw men at work on a bridge which required a great many pieces of iron, each made to fit exactly the place it was to be put. It happened that several of them were just a little too long, so the workmen had to cut them all off with cold-chisels and files before they could be used. I think that would be the way with the stems of the wing-scales if any of them were too long. They would be of no use till they would be made to fit. And the notches, too, would have to be cut just to suit the picture, and so they are. I understand it all now, and it is very wonderful."

"I read, in Ancient History, about a man called Epicurus, who lived about 342 years before Christ, and who taught that everything in the world came by chance. I don't think that, with all his knowledge, he ever knew how the scales were fastened on a butterfly's wing, or he would have been compelled to admit that blind chance could never do such work. It seems to me that the whole structure, painting and use of the wing, must have been in the mind of God before ever a butterfly was made, and that it was made according to this prearranged plan."

"Some of our wisest men have seen this subject in the same light," said Uncle Samuel. "It is well to look through nature up to nature's God. We should judge of the wonderful mechanism seen in the structure and uses of the different parts of animals as we do of the products of human genius and skill. If we were to see an engine for the first time, and observe how well it is adapted to the work it is required to do, we would reason that the inventor and builder meant it to do that very work, and we would not call in question the fact that it was built according to a preconceived plan. So the very existence of the engine would convince us that somebody existed before it did, to whom it was indebted for its structure and the power it possessed for acting with such apparent wisdom. Ought we not also to take for granted, from the wonderful mechanism of a butterfly's wing, the pre-existence of a Being capable of conceiving the plan on which it is made, and of putting its parts together for the very purpose for which it is used? There is such a Being, and that Being is God, the self-existent Author of all things."—Interior.

The Good Shepherd.

Once there was a flock of sheep in a little green field shut in by a hedge. There was plenty of good grass in the field, and a pond of clear water to drink, and the good shepherd had taken pains to stop all the large gaps in the hedge, that the sheep might not easily get out.

But one day a foolish little lamb said to itself: "Why should we not go outside where the grass is better? I will try to get out." So he managed to squeeze his way through a very small hole in the hedge. When he came to eat the grass outside he found it was not so good as he expected, so he said: "I will go a little farther; I know the way back, and can go home whenever I like." So on he went, farther and farther, and at last he strayed into a dark wood.

Here he quite lost his way, and, while he was trying to find it, the night came on. Now he began to wish himself safe back in his little field, and he could not help giving a little bleat for sorrow. Immediately he heard a wolf howl close to him, and in another minute the savage beast was upon him. Now, indeed, he bleated in good earnest; but he would have been torn to pieces if the good shepherd had not been passing by. The shepherd had heard him bleat the first time, and had run up to help him. So he attacked the wolf, and, though the wolf bit him, he drove the wolf away, and took up the little lamb in his arms and carried him tenderly back to the little field, telling him not to stray any more.

Jesus is the Good Shepherd; the wolf is the evil one; we are the sheep, and our little field is our duty. When we stray from our duty, and do what we ought not to do, we put ourselves in the way of the evil one.

But if we pray to Jesus he will help us and bring us back safe. We ought not to be discouraged if sometimes we stray from our duty. We must try to do better next time, and we must ask Jesus to guide us; but we must not be discouraged, for Jesus himself said: "I have come to save those that are lost."—Parables for Children.

A CHILD'S IDEA OF PRAYER.—Jennie Lee, who was only four years old, no sooner saw work laid aside than she ran to her mother's knee and claimed a seat there. Mrs. Lee lifted her to her lap, and went on busily thinking of her duties and cares, while she rocked herself and Jennie to and fro.

For awhile Jennie amused herself very quietly by winding a string in and out through her fingers; but presently she began talking to herself in a low tone:

"When I say my prayers God says: 'Hark, angels, while I hear a little noise.'"

Her mother asked her what noise was that.

"A little girl's noise. Then the angels will do just so (shutting her mouth very tight, and keeping very still for a moment) till I say amen."

Isn't this a sweet thought? I wonder if the children who read this story of little Jennie have ever thought how wonderful it is that God always hears their prayers. He is surrounded by thousands and thousands of angels, and all praising him with their golden harps; and yet, through all the music and all the praises, he hears the softest prayer of a little child kneeling by the bedside. He must be very loving and very kind to children. We should think he would sometimes forget, and be listening to the beautiful sounds in heaven, instead of the prayer of a little child. But he never does. There is never too much singing or too many praises there for him to hear a little girl's noise. Do you not wonder that children do not pray to him much more and much oftener than they do?—Christian at Work.

DR. BLANK attempted to defend himself against the facetious assault of a friend by saying: "I defy any person whom I ever attended to accuse me of ignorance or neglect." "That you may safely do," said his assailant, "for you know, doctor, dead men tell no tales."

Farm, Garden and Household.

Persimmons.

It is well known that we have growing all over our Southern States the native persimmon. It is also found as far north as central Ohio and in Indiana and Illinois.

In Japan it is unexceptionably the finest and most valued of fruits. The people use it as freely as we do the peach, and in almost as great a variety of ways. At all seasons of the year they may be bought preserved in the same manner as Smyrna figs, and looking not unlike them, and everywhere enter largely into the domestic economy, as well as internal commerce of the people. It has been crossed and grafted in and reerossed, until it is to Japan what the apple is to America, and in season is incomparably the best and most useful fruit in that country. We have seen the fruit in bearing, as large as ordinary oranges; the variety, too, is remarkable, though but two varieties to us seem to be especially desirable for cultivation here.

The first is a large, round-shaped fruit like an old-fashioned Rhode Island Greening apple—hard-fleshed—and is mostly eaten as one eats an apple, having many of its characteristics. Its color is rich golden, and the meat juicy, vinous and firm. It ripens in November, and keeps well until March. We have seen it three to four inches in diameter, and we think it in all respects a most delicate and splendid fruit; very desirable fruit to introduce into Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, and a part of Alabama, Mississippi and Texas.

The second variety is more oblong than round, resembling in its shape almost exactly a Minie rifle-ball. This is a deeper, darker shade than the other; soft, sweet and custard-like, and is usually eaten with a spoon, as one eats a custard. These we have frequently seen as large as an ordinary-sized teacup—two to two and a half inches in diameter, and from point to top from three to three and a half inches. This fruit ripens the last two weeks in October, and is the variety mostly dried and prepared like figs for market. It is a delicate fruit, and very much liked by those who are fond of sweet fruits. It keeps till Christmas.

Besides, there are many other varieties which, if introduced and grown here successfully, might be highly desirable—perhaps an invaluable acquisition to pomology and the country at large. We beg to commend this recommendation to our horticultural friends, and unhesitatingly predict for both these fruits an indorsement of all we may say in praise of them.—Farmer and Gardener.

BEES SWARMING.—A sure way to prevent bees from going to the woods when they come out and alight is to get a pail half full of cold water from the well; take a broom-brush and dip it in the water, and throw it up over the bees, and it will come down on them like fine rain, then hive them in the usual way, and sprinkle them while going in, and sprinkle the ground around the hive, to cool the air; in fifteen or twenty minutes do it again, and continue it until the day is cooler; keep the hive in the shade. There is no need of having any bees go to the woods—not at all. I had over forty swarms last summer, and saved all by sprinkling them.

The bee journals tell of men who make artificial swarms, and yet have bees go to the woods; there is no need of this if you use cold water. "But," says one, "my bees go to the woods without alighting." I don't dispute it in the least; but during the thirty-five years that I have kept bees I have never had a swarm come out and go to the woods without alighting first, and I am safe in saying that I have hived a thousand swarms. Bees sometimes come out undiscovered, and after awhile start for the woods, and are seen on the second start.—Rural New Yorker.

OAT MEAL IN DRINK.—It is suggested by the Medical Journal of Edinburg that oat meal stirred up in cold water, at the rate of two teaspoonfuls of meal to a half pint of water, would be a very healthful and grateful drink in the harvest-field. In England, at a recent plowing match, the only drink furnished was water with oat meal stirred into it, and it was found "mighty refreshing." We give corn meal in water to our horses for a drink with great advantage. Why should we not treat ourselves to the same healthful luxury?

POLISHING TINS.—To polish tins first rub them with a damp cloth, then take dry flour and rub it on with your hands, afterward take an old newspaper and rub the flour off, and the tins will shine as well as if half an hour had been spent rubbing them with brick-dust or powder, which spoils the hands.

FURNITURE POLISH.—Mix half a pint of olive oil with one pound of soft soap. Boil them well, and you will have an excellent furniture polish. Apply the mixture to your oiled furniture with a piece of cotton-wool. Polish with a soft, dry flannel.

LET THE PEOPLE SPEAK.

MANHATTAN, KAN., April 8, 1873.

R. V. PIERCE, BUFFALO, N. Y.—Dear Sir: Your Favorite Prescription has done my wife a world of good. She has taken nearly two bottles, and has felt better the past two weeks than at any time in the past two years. No more periodical pains; none of that aching back or dragging sensation in her stomach she has been accustomed to for several years. I have so much confidence in it that I would be perfectly willing to warrant to certain customers of ours who would be glad to get hold of relief at any expense. I have tried many patent medicines, but never had any occasion to extol one before. Very truly yours,

GEORGE B. WHITING.

Mrs. E. B. Daly, Metropolis, Illinois, writes, January 9, 1873:

Mary Ann Frisbie, Lehman, Pennsylvania, writes, May 29, 1872:

"DR. R. V. PIERCE: What I have taken of your medicine has been of more benefit to me than all others and hundreds of doctors' bills."

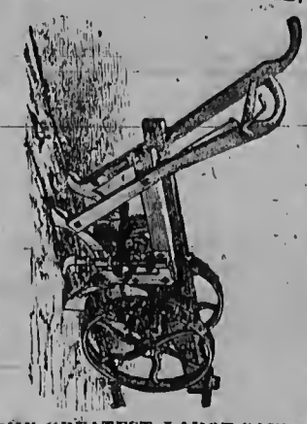
JUSTLY CELEBRATED.
THE DIAMOND COTTON CHOPPER AND CULTIVATOR.



THE GREATEST LABOR-SAVER OF the AGE with ONE MAN and ONE HORSE does the work of from SIX to TWELVE men and from TWO to FOUR horses. It CHOPS and BARS both sides, WEEDS and DIRTS the cotton at one operation. After which it is converted into a most excellent CULTIVATOR, for use between the rows throughout the season. This machine has been tested upon a growing crop, and proved a thorough, practical SUCCESS. It bears the highest TESTIMONIALS from our best cotton planters. It will soon become as indispensable to the cotton planter as the cotton gin or press. It has taken the grand sweepstakes prize, the GILD MEDAL, at the Georgia State Fair as the latest and most valuable improvement in agricultural implements, and the first premium wherever it has been exhibited. Active and reliable AGENTS are wanted in every town and county, to whom a liberal discount will be made. Applications for agencies should be made without delay. Retail price of machine, with attachments, $35 and freight. A most excellent COTTON PLANTER and GUANO DISTRIBUTOR has been added to the machine. Price, $12.50 extra. FROM A RECENT ANALYSIS BY Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Yale College, the following table will show the chemical composition of YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN:

Albuminoids	12.45	Sugar	13.06
Fat	5.21	Starch	55.62
Ash	8.59	Cellulose	2.95
	2.12

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. "These," says Youmans, "are the flesh-forming principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable to all requiring a large amount of nutrition and at the same time easily assimilated, and hence is used as an article of food in consumption in climates which occasion great waste of the system. "Almost all Asiatics, Africans and (aboriginal) Americans use it as a chief nourishment."—Louis Figuier, in his Vegetable World.

The hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN has all the nutritive qualities of the grain preserved. The grain is cut from the cob and filled in canisters with the rich juices (or milk) of the grain retained, and is then sealed air-tight in the canister subjected to steam heat, which fixes the albumen. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by this that all the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and as a nourishing article of food in the domestic circle placed within the reach of all.

AGENTS WANTED TO ENGAGE IN A permanent, lucrative and respectable business. None but energetic and responsible persons need apply. A. COYLE, se7 6m 119 North Sixth street, St. Louis, Mo.

FROM A RECENT ANALYSIS BY Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Yale College, the following table will show the chemical composition of YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN:

Albuminoids	12.45	Sugar	13.06
Fat	5.21	Starch	55.62
Ash	8.59	Cellulose	2.95
	2.12

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. "These," says Youmans, "are the flesh-forming principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable to all requiring a large amount of nutrition and at the same time easily assimilated, and hence is used as an article of food in consumption in climates which occasion great waste of the system. "Almost all Asiatics, Africans and (aboriginal) Americans use it as a chief nourishment."—Louis Figuier, in his Vegetable World.

The hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN has all the nutritive qualities of the grain preserved. The grain is cut from the cob and filled in canisters with the rich juices (or milk) of the grain retained, and is then sealed air-tight in the canister subjected to steam heat, which fixes the albumen. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by this that all the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and as a nourishing article of food in the domestic circle placed within the reach of all.

RECEIVED THE AWARD OF THE Exposition, American Institute, and Great Exposition of Cordova.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

The Spring Session of this widely-known and popular institution begins on the Twenty-ninth of JANUARY next, and closes on the Seventeenth of June, which is Commencement day. In view of the present financial depression we now make this liberal offer:

FOR ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS, paid in advance, we will give, for one entire session of twenty weeks, to any student in the Collegiate, Scientific or Business course, his board at the Ryans House (now reduced to $16 per month,) tuition, fuel, room-rent, washing, library and contingent fees. In the Preparatory Department the charges will be even less. Board at the Fulton House and in private families may be obtained at moderate though at somewhat more advanced rates. The advantages now offered here to those seeking thorough collegiate training and culture were never excelled in our previous history, as those best acquainted with the school will testify. On Saturday the market opened with a good demand, and a fair business was done during the morning, mostly at steady prices. Friday's improvement being fully maintained—some sales, in fact, being at a fraction more than could have been obtained previously—after which the movement became more animated, and resulted in a business of 10,300 bales. Low ordinary to ordinary sold at 9¾c., strict ordinary at 11¾c., good ordinary at 13⅛@13¼c., strict good ordinary at 14@14⅛c., strict good ordinary to low middling, benders, at 14⅛c., low middling at 14⅝, 14⅝@14⅞c., low middling to strict low middling at 15c., strict low middling at 15⅛c., strict low middling to middling at 15⅝c., and middling at 16c. On Monday, under the influence of an advance at New York of ⅛c. in spots, and some improvement in futures, and at Liverpool of ⅛d. in uplands and 1-16d. in Orleans, together with stiffer rates for foreign exchange, the movement commenced with an active demand, but the movement was checked by the more stringent pretensions of factors, many of whom claimed an advance of ⅛@⅜c. The sales during the morning were consequently of limited extent, partly at an advance of ⅛c., after which, buyers refusing to go on at the morning rates, factors met the demand more freely, and the movement again showed a fair degree of activity, resulting in sales to the extent of 9,950 bales. On Tuesday the demand continued fair, and, as factors met it rather more freely, the sales summed up 9,500 bales, at prices requiring no reduction in quotations, but indicating that the advantage was on the side of the buyers.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 29,750 bales, against 21,881 for the corresponding time last week and 24,750 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 878,249 bales, against 753,455 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 348,753 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 31,390 to Great Britain, and of 62,646 to France, and a decrease of 33,101 to other foreign ports. News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—A revenue cer, with a lle of United States diers, made a descent on a large elt distlllery on Barren Island, w York harbor, last night. A mplete destruction of the distillery s effected, and fifty thousand gal- s of mash, twenty hogsheads of lasses, forty-five barrels of rum l one schooner were selzed. Total ue of property seized, $12,000.

A special dispatch from Cincinnati, ing some details of the women's vement against the liquor dealers that State, says: At Waynesville order has been issued by its mayor, T. Dodson, to the marshal, requir- him to disperse all bands of men found congregating in the ets or on the sidewalks. He de- res it is his intention to have no residewalk or saloon prayer meet- s in his village; and the ladies, cked by the money of many weal- temperance people, are no less erminedly sincere in their inten- to hold just as many meetings offer just as many prayers as y think proper.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., Feb. 11.—N. Trist, formerly of Philadelphia, of clerk in the office of secretary State under Mr. Marcey during k's administration, negotiator of treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo, since the war postmaster here, this morning, aged seventy-four rs.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 12.—Bishop mlus, the founder of the Re- med Episcopal Church, delivered address to-night, in the Taber- le Presbyterian church, on the ject of the new church movement. e recited the labors of the general vention of the Protestant Episco- Church, which met in Philadel- a in 1785, and said if the prayer- k, as it was then revised, had re- ined with the church, the latter uld have by this time overspread land.

e charged upon Bishop Seabury, onnecticut, the want of restoring, 789, errors which had been taken the prayer-book in 1785, and that the church at this time uses prayer-book thus handed down, which came originally from the luted source of Charles the Second, whose days it had been revised, A. 641.

e justified his withdrawal from Protestant Episcopal Church on grounds that its prayer-book is upting; that reformation must egun outside the church, and not hin its pale.

e strongly contended and quoted upport of the position the action Luther, John Wesley and the Old holles.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 12.—A special dis- ch to the Appeal from Jackson, sissippi, says the Legislature of State to-day, by a vote of fifty- to thirty-three, passed a resolu- requesting Senator Alcorn to re- .

The Avalanche's Trenton, Tennes- special says: One-fourth of the dic square is in ashes from a fire night. Sixteen business houses, ding the new City Hall and ws office, were burned. Loss, ,000; insurance about $15,000. The originated up stairs in Byer's g store, and is supposed to have n the work of an incendiary.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 13.—The whisky r continues with farcical fury. At lby, Ohio, one hundred ladies re grossly insulted by the saloon- pers, and at New Holland they re assaulted with a poker by one the same fraternity.

TOLEDO, OHIO, Feb. 13.—An elec- held in Lucas county, yesterday, a successor to Chief Justice Waite, the Constitutional Convention, uited in the choice of General mes B. Steedman, independent mocrat, over William Barber, reg- r Republican.

RIPLEY, OHIO, Feb. 14.—The tem- rance movement is progressing re. One or two dealers who were ged to sell no more liquor have dertaken to renew their old busi- s quietly. The ladies have re- wed their efforts with these, al- ough new suburban saloons are w receiving the most attention. A lant eye is kept on dealers who ve surrendered.

JEFFERSONVILLE, IND., Feb. 14.— e action taken by the women of s place for the suppression of the uor traffic was fully developed to- . he organization, composed of about hundred ladies, met at the thodist church, and, after preli- ry arrangements, marched quietly the most prominent saloons. At first saloon they were refused ad- ttance, and services were held on pavement.

At two other saloons visited they re invited in; and the proprietors reed to quit the business if bought . An immense crowd congregated, drinking continued during the vices. The ladies will make an- er offensive demonstration on nday.

JEFFERSONVILLE, IND., Feb. 16.— e women's crusade against whisky ffic opened to-day. Devotional ex- rises were held at eight different oons, and the police protected the men from the jam of the im- nse crowd that congregated at each oon. Business is partially sus- nded, and the streets are filled with izens of every class. The saloon- pers refuse to sign the pledge.

The excitement over the move- nt in this city has reached Louis- le, and this evening at least two usand persons, mostly Germans, n that city arrived here. Exer- es on the street have been aban- doned for to-day. Divine services will continue in the saloons to-morrow.

RIPLEY, OHIO, Feb. 16.—The crusaders are still moving on the enemy's works. One more saloon has surrendered, and the only one which now remains is a wholesale liquor establishment. Some of the saloon-keepers who have been worsted are preparing to emigrate.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The State Department has advices of the death of Lunalilo, King of the Sandwich Islands, on the third instant.

Dispatches from the West show that the numbers of women raiding upon the saloons are not large, but they comprise a very determined class of the fair sex. The saloons close upon the approach of the women and re-open after they leave.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—Two hundred and fifty-four Conservatives and one hundred and eighty Liberals have been returned to the House from England, fifteen Conservatives and thirty-six Liberals from Scotland, and twenty-one Conservatives and forty-four Liberals and Home Rulers from Ireland. There was much rioting at Chesterfield and Barnsley yesterday, and many policemen were injured.

A Conservative has been elected to Parliament from Wigtonburg, defeating the Liberal candidate, Right Hon. George Young, advocate for Scotland, who held a seat in the late Parliament.

LISBON, Feb. 13.—The yellow fever is unabated in Rio. The cholera is raging in Buenos Ayres.

ROME, Feb. 14.—Cardinal Tarquini died last night.

MADRID, Feb. 14.—It is probable the form of government in Spain will be decided by a plebiscite.

BAYONNE, Feb. 14.—It is reported that General Dorregary, chief of staff to Don Carlos, has been murdered.

ST. PETERSBURG, February 16.—A grand dinner was given last evening by the Czar to his imperial and royal visitors. In his speech his majesty said that the Emperor of Germany, the Queen of England, the Emperor of Austria and himself would preserve the peace of the world. The Prince of Wales, as the representative of the Queen, bowed his thanks and the Emperor Francis Joseph responded, reiterating the sentiments of the Czar.

BERLIN, Feb. 16.—In the Reichstag to-day General Moltke, in the course of a speech in support of the new military bill, said: "What we acquired in six months we shall have to protect by force of arms for half a century to come. France, notwithstanding a majority of her people are convinced of the necessity of peace, is imitating our army organization."

He concluded: "We have become powerful, but remain peaceful. We require an army for defense, not for conquest."

The bill was referred to committee.

The deputy from Alsace moved that a plebiscite be taken in Alsace and Lorraine on the question of nationality.

LONDON, Feb. 17.—Dr. Beke, an English traveler, reports that he has discovered the true Mount Sinai; it is situated a day's journey northeast of the village of Akaba, Arabia, at an altitude of five thousand feet above the level of the sea. Dr. Beke says he found remains of animals that had been sacrificed; he also discovered Sinaitic inscriptions, which he copied.

The House of Commons now stands three hundred and forty-three Conservatives to three hundred Liberals and Home Rulers.

Mr. Gladstone was received by the Queen at Windsor Castle, and the resignation of himself and colleagues was delivered. Mr. Disraeli has been summoned to Windsor.

War with the Sioux Indians.

The following telegraphic correspondence has taken place:

NEW YORK, February 12, 1874.

To General W. T. Sherman, Washington, D. C.:

The trouble with the Sioux Indians, which for some time past we have been trying to avoid, seems now to be beyond a peaceable solution. In addition to the killing of Lieutenant Robinson and Corporal Coleman, the chief clerk at the Red Cloud agency has been killed.

The agent of Spotted Tail's agency reports that large parties of Indians from both agencies have left for general hostilities. General Ord has sent out scouting parties to warn the ranchmen, and to tell them to return to the railroad.

I will go home to-morrow to superintend any action that may be necessary.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieut. General.

GENERAL SHERMAN'S REPLY.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, February 12, 1874.

To General P. H. Sheridan, Commanding Military Division Missouri, Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York:

Your dispatch of this morning was received. Under call of the Interior Department of to-day, sent to your headquarters at Chicago, you will be justified in collecting the most effective force possible, even if you draw cavalry from Fort Riley, by rail, to Cheyenne, to march to the Red Cloud agency, striking every party of Indians that opposes. Every Indian who has marauded south of the North Platte should be demanded and held as an accomplice in the murder of Lieutenant Robinson. Their ponies must be very poor now, and the game must be scarce, and the occasion to give the Sioux a lesson long merited seems to me favorable.

My own opinion is that the Sioux should never again have an agency away from the Missouri river.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

Greensboro District, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: All is not lost. "There is life in the old land yet." In parts of Alabama, last year and the year before, the crops, especially grain, were moderately good, and the people in those regions are living, and perhaps doing as well as we ought to expect under Radical rule and negro domination. But in south and middle Alabama flood and drought alternately, worms and disaster of various kinds, swept corn, cotton, everything but fruit, until the people are reduced to circumstances of want and embarrassment unknown in almost any country. In numberless cases the land is under mortgage, but the mortgagee can't sell, for there are no buyers, and the planters have no supplies to run their farms another year, and the merchants, many of them, cannot and others will not make advances. And here we are, as many say, "stuck fast in the mud." Now is there any hope? Yes, there is one gleam even in this dark day. Multitudes of the negroes are leaving the country and going west, and this gives the country to the whites, and those who are left can't run large farms and feed scores of idle free negroes, as heretofore, and they are going to farm to live. And right here, I think, is not only a ray of hope, but floods of light and life. The people, I think, are going to work to make something to live on, and if they have no money with which to pay the preacher, they will divide with him the staff of life, and all together acknowledging their poverty and putting themselves upon the basis of strict economy, my faith is that they will come out of this slough. What has been the matter with us all this time? We have been trying to live as we did when we were rich; but we are learning the lesson which Providence has been trying to learn us ever since the war—that is, that we are poor, a very poor people.

We are getting back to the days of old clothes, Confederate jeans, mixed coffee, or no coffee at all, mere bread and meat, and the like of that. And the women (God bless them!) what an example of economy and privation are they setting the men. In multitudes of cases they are cleaning their kitchens of filthy, extravagant negroes, and doing their own work generally. How delightful to see the prints of the white fingers upon the biscuit, if forsooth, they have biscuit at all! My hope for the country is to get rid of the negro, or, at any rate, be independent of him. Don't let him ruin us by his idleness and dictation. Yes, there is hope in the old land yet. But I am wandering into regions which I did not intend to traverse; so I must return.

Now, while all this disaster, financially, has been upon the country, the church has prospered, I think, spiritually and numerically in the face of a large emigration. The statistics show a net increase last year, in the Alabama Conference, of nearly two thousand, the largest for many years; and since the Alabama Conference was set off, four years ago, our numbers have gone up from a little over twenty-four thousand to nearly thirty thousand. Numbers, however, are not half so important in the church as spirituality; and I think I see hope also in this direction. I am not much more than half round the district on my first round of appointments, and up to this time I can safely say I have heard more said in the love-feasts and in private circles on the subject of the higher life, holiness of heart, a growth in grace, etc., than in many months before. At Havana I found a faithful few who take the Home Altar, and who had been reading Wood's Perfect Love—and, by the by, from what little I have seen of the book, what a treasure it is on that subject! Here the love-feast glowed with aspirations of this delightful theme of purity, as seen in the countenances and dropping from the lips of the ardent worshipers.

My next appointment was at Prattville. At this place holiness was the absorbing theme again. The preacher's heart seemed full of the subject, and the people, catching the glorious inspiration, the theme glowed and swelled through the delightful hour allotted for the love-feast.

Thence I directed my course across the river into Bro. McCarty's diocese, where I found Bishop Marvin preaching to crowds in Montgomery; and such preaching! Here is a model preacher. Just as I stepped into the church I found the Bishop holding not what he called a special sanctification meeting, but what was really a first-rate meeting in that direction. The people—and there were crowds—were up talking in quick succession, one after another, and the theme was purity. O for the fullness of God's salvation! One would hardly wait for another to finish, so eager were the people to speak. One aged sister I noticed in particular, who made three honest efforts to be heard; but, like the lame man at the pool, she had to wait, for some one had stepped down before her; but when she did get a chance to speak she had something to say. For forty years, she said, she had been drinking at this fountain; still its waters were free and full as ever. Some asked for prayers for their children. Some stood up merely as witnesses for Jesus. Not one or two or a dozen, but scores, I venture to say, testified eagerly and willingly, and the burden of every heart seemed to be full consecration, the perfect love of God shed abroad in the heart, as the earnest, absorbing desire of all. There stood the Bishop, with words of encouragement for every aspiration after holiness, and a hearty amen for every request for an interest in the prayers of the church. And there sat the honest, faithful pastor, in full sympathy with the occasion, and seeming to say: "Well, thank God for his blessing upon my earnest labors among my own dear people." Altogether, Mr. Editor, it was a rare meeting; and what a power in the church would such meetings be if they were held all over the land! Holiness of heart, purity of life, full consecration to God—what a light would such a church kindle all over these benighted lands! O for the full baptism of the Holy Ghost, especially upon God's ministers, as the highest qualification for success in their work and labor of love!

These are some of the considerations which inspire hope for the future of the church in these ends of the earth.

More anon about Greensboro, Marion and some other parts of the district.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., February 5, 1874.

Hard Times and Going to Conference.

MR. EDITOR: During the past year especially, as well as during other years, we have been profoundly impressed with the habitual cry of hard times, both from preachers and people; so much so that we have been led to consider the question, to see if there is really anything in it, or whether it is for the most part the force of habit. Occupying a sort of medium position between the church and its pastor, we have been compelled to listen to the cry from two-sense-felt parties. Fortunately or unfortunately for us, we are fifty-five and well-nigh fifty-six years old, and that same cry has been sounded in our ears ever since we were born. When a boy it made such an impression on us that we never expected to live to be grown, but thought to perish would be the inevitable result of hard times.

Bishop Keener once said: "Who would have ever thought that the raft on Red river could furnish an excuse for not paying missionary money?" Hard times is the text used in justification for not giving to the Lord his proportion of the yearly income; then every imaginable thing is wrung in, such as the excessive rains, excessive drought, boll-worm, caterpillar, yellow fever, enormous taxation and the unreliable free labor, etc. Just as though all that had anything in the world to do with our making a just division of our income, and giving to the Lord his part, though small; then if that be not enough to serve his purposes, it is his concern, and not ours. If we have but $1, it is just as easy to give one dime on it as it is to pay $1 on $10, or to pay $10 on $100. What is the difference?

We were often asked during the past year: "Are you going to Conference?" Our reply invariably was: "Of course we have thought of nothing else." They would say: "We would like to go, but the times are so hard." We shared in pro rata division with our brethren; our receipts were not large, but we gave to the Lord his part, as many of the brethren did. When the time came we started to Conference, went to the stage office, and found that by accident the stage agent owed us enough to pay our way for twenty miles—as far as we wanted to go on that line; there a friend had made an arrangement to take us gratis to Red river, twenty miles farther, except $1 ferriage. Here a good lady gave us our dinner without charge. Soon a boat came along and we took passage for Baton Rouge, the seat of Conference; fare, $12. On this boat we made a traveling acquaintance with apparently a very clever gentleman, who, according to his own statement, claimed to be a High Episcopalian. He attached a great deal of importance to his claim to the tradition of the fathers. We asked him if he had ever read Dr. Bledsoe's Review of the Fathers. He said that he had. From this he seemed to infer that if we adopted Dr. Bledsoe we had but little sympathy with his creed. Soon he walked the cabin, and, passing the bar-room, he took a social glass. Here commenced another theme. We reproved him for setting such an example, professing, as he did, to be a Christian. He claimed that he had taken nothing in the world but a little pale sherry. What harm can there be in that? We argued, first, that there was alcohol in it, which was then affecting his brain; secondly, that that was the example which was making drunkards all over the land. We parted that night in a good humor. Next morning he complimented us with $5. Whether it was for our impudence or temperance speech or of his own benevolence, we can't say; but we got the $5, and that, taken from $13, left but $8. Now we are at the seat of Conference, five hundred miles from home, and only out $8. The Conference session, which lasted seven days, was unusually pleasant and profitable to us. What a gracious privilege it is to receive the warm greetings of sixty or seventy brethren after an absence of a year. The association of the preachers, their hearty songs and earnest prayers, and the opportune exhortations of the Bishops, inspired us with new life, and we felt just like going to our circuit and doing the best year's work of our life. A day after Conference we took passage on the steamer Southwestern, a Red river packet; fare to our place of destination, $12; but when we went to settle the clerk charged us only $7. Thanks to him and to his boat. Two days' pleasant travel and we are at our place of landing. A good brother sent us from the river to Pleasant Hill gratis. Here we borrowed a pony, and it was as small as a man is accustomed to ride; but as we had only twenty miles to ride, and five hours to make it in, we got along rather pleasantly. Our pony fell down fairly but once, and then we lost no time, as it got up wide-awake, and for awhile made better time. At seven P. M. on the eighteenth of January we got home and found all well. Just two weeks and two days absent. Expenses only $15. Don't you think that we are more than $15 better off than any member of the Conference, either preacher or layman, who stayed at home and nursed hard times?

J. P.

MANSFIELD, LA., January 19, 1874.

Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall.

Your committee, appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the feeling of the Sunday school relative to the resignation of Dr. C. K. Marshall from its superintendency, beg leave to report the following:

Resolved, That with the deepest regret this Sunday school takes leave of its beloved superintendent, Dr. C. K. Marshall, who has for the past year filled this important post with a grace and dignity all his own; fully realizing that his rare qualifications for the office, his brilliant talents, the breadth and warmth of his affections, and his deep piety, all of which, with tender heart but firm will, he brought to our service, leave a vacancy in the memories of officers and pupils which his successors will find it difficult to fill.

Resolved, That the Sunday school only accepts the resignation of its prized superintendent from a conviction that the present enfeebled state of his health renders it necessary for him to seek in rest and travel renewed strength and vigor; and that the prayers of this school for his restoration to health and usefulness shall follow him on his journey.

Resolved, That this Sunday school elect Dr. Charles K. Marshall a life member of its body, giving him at all times a vote in the deliberations of its officers, and begging him to make one of its number whenever his health and engagements permit.

J. E. GIBBS,
J. A. PEALE, Committee.

MOST SALABLE.—Mr. Editor: I see in the ADVOCATE of the fifth instant a notice of books "most salable." Permit me to add to the list Andrews' Family Government, Binney's Compend, Moral Lessons, Strictures on Howell's Evils of Infant Baptism, Duty of Giving Away a Stated Proportion of Our Income (at ten cents,) and Reasons for Not Joining the Baptist Church. The last three are pamphlets of great value, and in ordering them, if it be stated (at ten cents) you will get a differently gotten-up book, but can sell the three for twenty-five cents everywhere, and do much good. Yours, etc.,

J. L. FUTRELL.

BROOKSVILLE, MISS., Feb. 9, 1874.

DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—Bishop Marvin has given me notice that he will hold our District Conference, commencing April 17, at Gainesville, Alabama. The preachers in charge will please raise and bring with them the amounts assessed for the support of the Bishops.

CITRONELLE, ALA., Feb. 10, 1874.

A MISTAKE.—Mr. Editor: In the printed Minutes of the Mississippi Conference—in the Sunday school report—a mistake occurs. Where, under the head of moneys expended on the Columbia circuit, it says $550 it should be $5.50. Please make the correction. Yours, etc.,

DAVID A. GIVENS.

PEARLINGTON, MISS., Feb. 10, 1874.

THE NEW UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM MISSISSIPPI.—Bruce was formerly a slave, and was owned by Pettis Perkinson, who resided near Brunswick, Missouri, for a number of years. Blanch K. Bruce, when a slave, hired his time, as did several of his brothers, and were considered smart and reliable. Since the war B. K. Bruce was employed as a porter on the steamer Columbia for several years, and until she sunk. He then went to school at Oberlin, Ohio, and finally worked his way to Mississippi; was appointed sheriff by Governor Alcorn, and served two terms with honor. Previous to this he was sergeant-at-arms of the House of Representatives of Mississippi.

ONE MILLION BALES OF COTTON. The receipts of cotton at the port of New Orleans, up to date, are one million bales—one hundred and twenty-three thousand more than were received at the same date last year, and the largest receipts since the war. The value of this cotton will exceed eighty millions of dollars. The cotton presses are crammed to repletion, and overflow on the sidewalks. One house occupies two large presses with its consignments, and it is not the largest house in the city.—New Orleans Picayune, February 15.

THE ORIGINAL DOCUMENT has just been discovered among some old files at the Treasury Department to which Marquis De Lafayette made over to some Baltimore merchants his fortune in France to secure them for a loan to organize troops in defense of the United States. The contract is signed and in part drafted in Lafayette's own hand, and bears date July 1, 1781.

This is an excellent work, containing the most useful tunes, and designed to be used with any hymn-book for the congregation and the choir. A convenient 12mo of 151 pages. Price, $1 sent by mail, post-paid.

THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW, JANUARY, 1874.—D. D. Whedon, LL. D., editor. Contents: Life of Bishop Clark, Our Work at the South, The Position and Prospects of the American Union, The Baptism of Naaman, The Unity of the Physical World, Chamberlayne on Saving Faith, The Day-Year Interpretation, Synopsis of the Quarterlies, Foreign Religious Intelligence, Foreign Literary Intelligence, Quarterly Book-Table. This number of the Review has also a fine engraving of James Arminius.

THE BOOK-BUYER is the title of the monthly bulletin of the publications of Scribner, Armstrong & Co., and the importations of Scribner, Welford & Armstrong, of New York. It is almost a necessity to those who make it a point to keep up their libraries to the times, giving, as it does, in the catalogue of Scribner, Welford & Armstrong's latest importations, a long list of the most recent English publications; while to all of literary tastes the summary of current intelligence given each month, in Mr. Welford's letter, must prove highly interesting and valuable. The price is only twenty-five cents per annum, upon the receipt of which the above-mentioned publishers will mail it, post-paid, to any address.

THE TECHNOLOGIST OR INDUSTRIAL MONTHLY is a practical journal for manufacturers, mechanics, builders, inventors, engineers and architects. It is a valuable periodical, issued by the Industrial Publication Company, New York. Price, $1.50 per annum. We have received the January number.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for January has: By Still Waters, Musings at Odd Times, Notes from the South Pacific, Scenes from the Life of St. Jerome, The Kallirs and the Brandy Canteen, and other articles of great interest. Altogether a superior number of this always very superior publication.

WILSON'S HERALD OF HEALTH AND FARM AND HOUSEHOLD HELP is an excellent monthly, published by the Southern Publishing Company, Atlanta, Georgia. We have received the January number.

GOOD WORKS for January contains: My Mother and I, Days Near Rome, Charles Beaneoni, Novantia, The Children's Triumph, Luther, The Wrestling of Jacob, The Mariner's Compass, and other articles.

MORTON'S MONTHLY HOME AND SCHOOL, Southern Cultivator, Southern Methodist Home Altar, Woods' Household Magazine, Peter's Musical Monthly, all for February, have been received.

THE GARDENERS' MONTHLY for February is an excellent number of this valuable publication. Published by Charles H. Marot, Philadelphia. Price, $2 per annum.

CREME DE LA CREME, No. 3, is up to the usual standard. One of the very best collections of music published. Published monthly by J. L. Peters, New York.

WE HAVE ONLY, within a few days, received our Sunday school publications for February. They are all up to the usual mark of excellence.

APPLETON'S JOURNAL is, to our mind, the choicest literary periodical of the day, and the cheapest. Published weekly at $4 per annum.

OLD AND NEW for February has: The Way we Live Now, The Better Samaritan, Non-Proscriptive Schools in the South, and other articles.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the Minutes of the Western Virginia, the Holston and the Virginia Annual Conferences.

PETER'S PENCE.—It is well known that of late years the Pope has been very largely supported by contributions of "the faithful" throughout the world, which have been collected under the ancient and historic name of St. Peter's Pence. The Unita Cattolica gives the following statistics of the annual receipts: In 1861 the "Pence" amounted to 14,184,000 francs, in 1862 to 9,402,000, in 1863 to 7,047,000, in 1864 to 5,832,000, in 1865 to 6,445,000, in 1866 to 5,939,000, in 1867 to 11,313,000, in 1868 to 11,960,000, thus giving a total of 71,171,000 francs in eight years. The exact sums collected in the last four or five years are not given, but the same authority states that they are greatly in excess of previous years, and reckons that the total of "Peter's Pence" collected up to the present time cannot fall much short of 400,000,000 francs. The great falling off in the years 1863 66 is accounted for by the same authority and by Catholic opinion on the ground of the general belief that a prevailing that, after all, the temporal possessions of the Pope were safe, and that consequently he had less urgent need of external subsidies.—Swiss Times.

RELIGION is not confined to devotional exercises, but rather consists in doing all we are called and qualified to do, with a single eye to God's glory and will, from a grateful sense of his love and mercy to us. This is the alchemy which turns everything into gold, and stamps a value upon common actions.—J. Newton.

A HEART PICTURE.

BY H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

Tenderly inscribed to the memory of Miss Lizzie Chadwick a friend of my boyhood days, who died in Montgomery county, Tennessee, early in the year 1870, at thirty years of age.

Engraven on th' eternal tablets of
My memory, the fair and lovely face
And graceful form, of one I loved in days
Forever flown, stands, still encas'd in Love's
Strong arms, by fond Affection's piercing eyes
Still gazed upon. Her tall and queenly form;
Her intellectual forehead fair, and crown'd
With long, luxuriant auburn hair; her lips,
Illumined ever with a smile, which spoke
The angel in her soul—all, all are now
As fresh upon my memory as in
The cherished days long gone. Her voice, so sweet
And angel-like, oft breaks in melody
Upon my memory's ear, like love-songs from
The spirit-land; and, stamp'd upon my life,
I find her counsels, more mature than one
Would look for at her years, so young she seemed.
She bore an angel carriage, angel form,
Spoke with an angel voice; but, grander still,
Within that heart which heaved her bosom dwelt
An angel soul, with God's own image stamp'd.
Too pure to dwell amid the scenes of earth,
Too lovely for so gross a sphere as this,
God plucks the fairest flowers for himself;
And so he sent a heav'nly angel down
To bear this earth born angel home. And earth
Since then has seemed more closely link'd to heav'n.

Mary of Bethany.

She hath done what she could.—Mark xiv, 8.

There is a peculiar beauty standing pre-eminently out in the character of Mary of Bethany—an unusual degree of earnestness displayed in everything she did. Her deportment showed that she appreciated the grand fact that "Life is real, life is earnest,

And the grave is not its goal;
'Dust thou art, to dust returnest,'
Was ne'er written of the soul;"

or, at least, that her life was a stern reality. Whatever she did was done with her might, in all humility deeming her mission as important as any other. If she desires to hear the glorious gospel of the Master she does not come, scribe-like, to him in a throng, where she may display her learning by her questions, so well put and rhetorically constructed; but she seeks an occasion when at her own house the weary Master rests and refreshes himself, and then comes and sits at his feet (the Oriental posture for a pupil,) and, looking earnestly up into his face, drinks in every precious word of his sublime teaching. There she sits, in the very posture of humble teachableness, gazing with all the child-like simplicity of intensest interest up into his face, fearful, it seems, that one precious word might be lost, one golden idea marred by her inattention. O that all the Master's servants had such hearers! There the earnest, sublimely child-like Mary sits, while Martha, her sister, is busying herself about the kitchen, much more interested about what the Master is to eat for his supper than aught else just now, so housewife-like solicitous is she. She is honest in it all, and I don't blame her for wishing to set a good table for the Master. (How much like some good old Methodist sisters, who set such nice dinners for the preacher when he comes!) She would like to hear what Mary is hearing; but to her the immediate importance of hearing is so far less than that of a good supper, just now, that she defers the sermon till a more convenient season. O how natural! Not so with Mary. The uppermost desire of her heart is to hear—to learn those golden truths—and everything else must bend to this, and every other stand in abeyance to this one sublime desire.

If she desires the raising of her brother Lazarus from the tomb, she dares not come, like Martha, arrayed in all the dignity the well-defined conventionalities of Oriental society required, and begin a well-worded dissertation on his Messiahship and omnific power, and her hopes of the final resurrection, closing with a very polite request that he would display this omnific power in bringing about the immediate resurrection of her brother; but in all the intense earnestness of grief-quickened desire she rushes to meet him, and falling at his feet, with the large tears gushing from her eyes, and chasing each other rapidly down her sternly beautiful face, cries out: "O Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died!" Such earnest pleading will prevail; and he, though God, melts down before the scene: "Jesus wept."

A third time Mary of Bethany figures conspicuously in the chain of events that go to make up the thrilling story of Jesus. This time she performs her part in the divine tragedy. Her part! How small a part it seems to some who see it! She only breaks an alabaster-box and pours the ointment on the Master's head. Small part! so say the disciples—one that had better been left undone. But, no; the Master, who sees deeper into the gradually unfolding mysteries of the tragedy than they, reproves them, and commends the humble, loving Mary: "She is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying." Was the baptizer John commissioned by Heaven to baptize the Savior for his sublime mission? Then Mary of Bethany was commissioned by the same majestic sovereignty, in as full and as lofty a sense, to anoint him for the tomb. Was the Master's three years' ministry important, and his initiation into it proportionably so? His death, by which he became a sacrifice for the sins of the whole world, was far more important. Then may we not say that his anointing thereto was at least not unimportant? It was a link in the predestined* chain of circumstances that made up the most important tragedy earth ever saw. "Unimportant," think the disciples. But the Master knows better, and rebukingly to them pronounces the glorious commendation: "She hath done what she could." There is more contained in this short commendation than in all the lofty panegyrics earth ever heard, coming, as it does, from such a one as Jesus. Posterity says of the immortal Luther, who revolutionized the corrupt Church of Rome, and set all Europe afire with the blaze of Heaven's glory, that his capacity was broad, his designs lofty, his work grand and his reward glorious; but no voice divine speaks in the ears of admiring posterity, saying: "He hath done what he could." The heroic apostle to the Gentiles kept the faith, finished his course, fought a good fight, and received a crown of glory; but of Mary of Bethany alone it has been said by One who knows all things: "She hath done what she could." Mary of Bethany stands to-day as high in glory and as near the great white throne as any heaven-born saint from earth. Her robe is as white, her crown as bright, her harp as melodious as any Heaven knows; for the great Judge has said: "She hath done what she could."

Endow the Pulpit.

Why not? Millions are bestowed annually in the endowment of colleges. Permanent provision is made for education. The existence of institutions of learning is placed as nearly beyond contingency as can be done by human skill, aided by accumulated wealth. Tract societies are endowed, and thereby rendered more permanently and extensively useful. Associations for church extension receive donations and bequests, the principal of which is not to be consumed. A large and growing "sustentation fund" is held by a worthy branch of the church as a means of support for the present and security for the future. Indeed almost all institutions which are designed to continue their existence and usefulness, through many generations, of men, seem to require endowment in order to their proper constitution and efficiency.

Why, then, should not the pulpit be endowed? Are there not thousands who would give for such a purpose? An endowment of from $5,000 to $20,000 for each pulpit would place the ministry beyond the reach of those contingencies which often hamper their operations or destroy their usefulness. But some will be ready to object that the churches would thereby become rich, and therefore corrupt and powerless for good. Yet why so? Does any one suppose that the excellence of the Bampton Lectures, delivered annually in Oxford, England, is in any degree impaired by the fact that that lectureship is amply and permanently endowed? Why should it harm a man less to be educated at an endowed college than to hear the gospel preached from an endowed pulpit? Yet all men think that colleges should be endowed. If all churches would endow their pulpits with sums whose interest, when supplemented by the annual contributions of the congregations, would guarantee the ministry against pecuniary embarrassment and want, the efficiency of the gospel would, we think, be greatly enhanced.

Why should not Christians remember the church, too, when they are preparing to die, as well as the college? Hundreds bequeath a part of their estates to colleges; how few leave anything to the church! Is there any more necessity that men, when about to leave the world, should provide for the future maintenance of education than that they should endeavor to aid in the promulgation of the gospel among the generations that are to follow them? A friend said to me the other day: "I have for twenty years had a clause in my will donating $1,000, in trust, for the support of the gospel in N." "The idea is a good one," said I, "and I'll write about it." This man supports the church liberally while he lives, and intends, when dead, still to speak. Would that all the Lord's people would do likewise. Even small sums thus bestowed, by many persons, might be the means of greatly facilitating the progress of the gospel.

Agriculture in Louisiana.

FENCING.

MR. EDITOR: In your paper of the fifteenth instant, in answer to the views of Agricola, Prairie asks, How can these things be? and suggests that fencing alone would defeat the entire plan. We are not surprised that such an objection should present itself to one accustomed to the regime under which we live, nor is it surprising that the freedman should turn a deaf ear to all entreaties to cut and split rails. We always imagined that we would be a little deaf upon that subject ourself, and that, if they could speak, even the mules and oxen would cry out at the enormous amount of useless and remorseless labor.

Our plantations were fenced in order to let the stock run upon the range. This is surprising when we consider the value of this stock in comparison with the amount of labor expended in making the fences; and that we never discovered that it would have required less than one-half of the fencing to have fenced the stock, instead of the fields. We had the poorest stock that could be found among civilized people, and yet through the fencing they cost us more than it would have cost to have kept under fence Ayreshires or Durhams in sufficient numbers to have furnished abundance of milk and butter, and to have replenished our teams with oxen. Our hogs were of the same order. In addition to the enormous cost of fencing, one-half of the hogs we raised were lost, and a large per cent. of the cattle perished from starvation in winter. We will say nothing of this half worthless stock being turned into the fields in winter to tramp up the land, and plant and perpetuate the seed of every noxious weed and grass.

That which the South most needs to enable her farmers to repair their fences is a stock law requiring every one to keep his stock under fence, so as to dispense with fencing his field. Such a law enforced would be equivalent to millions of actual capital distributed throughout the country. The months of labor now spent in building or repairing what ought to be useless fencing might then be employed in putting on fertilizers, draining and thorough plowing at a time most important.

Again, its advantages to emigrants, and men with very small means, can hardly be appreciated. But there is still another advantage not less than those mentioned. In every portion of the country there are fields lying waste which could be planted in oats or rye or barley, or converted into hay meadows, the crops on which would each year pay more than the present estimated value of the land. All such crops could be planted in the fall, and reaped or gathered in the spring and summer with machinery.

But, notwithstanding we might thus dispense with two-thirds of the fencing now required, we have not dispensed with the question of fencing as an important one in agriculture; but we protest against confining ourselves to rails for fencing. It has long appeared to me that the people of Louisiana, and especially of the valleys of the Mississippi and Red river, have, on the subject of fencing, been blind to the gifts of nature, and deaf to her most obtrusive teaching. She has literally fenced up their paths, so that they would have to be opened every year with the ax and pruning-hook. I allude to the honey locust (Gleditschia triacanthus.) No water, whether from rain or overflow, will destroy it. No drought will kill it, and, even when cut up, will remain an impassable barrier for years. This plant possesses that most desirable of all qualities in a hedge plant. While it will grow to any size, even to twenty or thirty feet high, by topping and trimming three or four times it can be dwarfed to any sized hedge, and will remain a hedge as long as it exists. When topped and trimmed it becomes impenetrably thick, not only with branches, but with thorns so sharp and penetrating that man himself will not dare to scale it. After it is matured it would be a labor of great difficulty with ax and pruning-hook to cut a way through such a fence.

Another great advantage in this plant is that it can be planted from the seed, and to hedge an hundred acres with it would not be more labor than to plant and cultivate an acre of corn, with this difference in the mode of planting: the line of fencing ought to be subsoiled fifteen or eighteen inches deep, fertilized and thrown into a bed six feet wide, with a double team and plow, and the seed or beans planted in three rows about fourteen inches apart. When up sufficiently it ought to be hoed out to a stand, leaving the plants about fourteen inches apart, but the plant in the middle row, so as to be in the center of the square formed by the four plants near it in the two outside rows—like the middle man in a game of marbles. In three years a hedge thus planted would be impassable to every domestic animal, and in four or five years would be sufficient to protect orchards and gardens, and horse lots and pastures, and sheep cots and poultry yards from marauders.

There is another kind of fencing which we ought to get rid of on account of its dreadful expense, which is greater than rail fences split by reluctant freedmen, and hauled by exhausted teams, and that is—the fencing or barrier which old ideas have erected around us. If the people of Louisiana could be induced, as it were, to lift up their heads and look abroad upon the bounteous gifts which a kind Providence has bestowed upon them, in a country unsurpassed in soil, climate and variety of production, they would have everything to hope and nothing to fear. If they could be induced to stretch forth their withered hand, it would be made whole as the other. If they could be made to believe that there are other and higher means of developing their glorious soil and climate than the ignorant negro, with his mule and jack-plow and club-ax, and maul and wedge, and their scrub stock upon the range in summer and on the fields in winter, we would hear nothing more about our success depending upon the caprices and industry of the negro. We would no longer regard our destiny at the mercy of his masterly inactivity. It would then be a matter of indifference whether he would split rails or not. Let us but strike the right vein—and there is one—to the mines of wealth around us, and our soil and climate will raise up willing laborers, as did the mines of California. The foundation of all this must begin by an abandonment of old ideas—scrub stock and rail fences—and the adoption of husbandry, properly so called; that system of farming which makes other and less favored countries than ours rich; that system of agriculture which feeds and clothes its own producers, and domesticates and beautifies and makes glad all the comforts of rural life. Instead of applying the putrid panacea of politics to remedy a bad government, we will then apply the omnipotent power of soil and climate, which forms and fashions the liberties and destinies of every people.

AGRICOLA.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., January 25, 1874.

THE JUDGMENT.—The final judgment on individuals will take form and measure from their office and position upon earth. The great and illustrious shall be asked whether they had sought to employ their high prerogatives on promoting God's glory and the kingdom of Christ. The wealthy shall be asked whether they had regarded themselves as stewards, and used riches in the relief of the miserable and the instruction of the ignorant. The learned shall be asked whether they had hallowed their science by rendering it subservient to the making themselves and others "wise unto salvation." The poor shall be asked whether they had borne poverty with contentment, and meekly struggled with those difficulties which God had been pleased to weave into their portion. Yea, and all shall be asked what they have done with the soul, that precious deposit which, redeemed at the inestimable cost of Christ's blood, may be and is flung away by thousands; by conquerors who conquer all but themselves; by scholars who study everything but themselves; by preachers who preach to every one but themselves; by multitudes who care for everything but the one thing needful, have time except for eternity, and room in the heart except for God.

"Our Work at the South."

This is the title of an article in the Methodist Quarterly Review for January. Dr. Summers, in the Nashville Christian Advocate, notices the article as follows:

Then comes "Our Work at the South," by a Dr. Fox, of Columbia, South Carolina, which opens with a prodigious falsehood:

"At the close of the rebellion the religious condition of the South was one of destitution. Of the white population a large portion of those who had assumed to be its ministers were either slain in battle or had returned to a secular life."

The General Minutes for 1860 report 2,815 effective traveling preachers. The Minutes for 1866 report 2,314, a difference of only 301; and this difference can be accounted for without supposing that any—except a few—were "slain in battle." Of course some had "returned to a secular life." But the rapid rehabilitation of our wasted church, including the ministry, after the war, which had driven the plowshare of ruin through our territory, was and is the admiration of the world. Some of the Northern Methodist editors have spoken of it as a wonderful fact, evincing the singular vitality of Southern Methodism. But false statements of this sort are put forth to justify the intrusion of the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church into our territory, and the outlay of the vast amounts which it has squandered in this schismatical enterprise. This writer says: "The grand aggregate of the cost of our Southern work since its inception to the present time is a little over one million of dollars—in figures, $1,052,200." Just imagine what would have been the result if that vast sum had been devoted to legitimate missionary work! But Dr. Fox says: "We have at the South fifteen Annual Conferences, 1,091 traveling preachers, 2,306 local preachers, 1,800 churches, over two millions of church property, and nearly a quarter of a million of church members." He says, too, that all has been realized without preying upon other churches. Now all the world knows, or ought to know, that these figures—which we have good reason to believe are highly exaggerated—represent negroes, the most of whom were under our care before the war. Some of the property belongs to us by the Plan of Separation, which he repudiates, and by repudiating virtually claims every stone and stick and brick which belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States before the separation! Dr. Fox says that the Congregationalists have spent exclusively among the freedmen no less than two million six hundred and forty-two thousand and thirty-eight dollars—nearly three millions of dollars! And what, under the sun, have they to show for this prodigal expenditure? What will they have to show for it after the next decade? This writer adds insult to injury. He twits the Southern Methodist Church with want of enthusiasm in not going among the negroes, as if they were negroes, or the negroes were whites, and for not going into destitute places to evangelize the "mean whites." We do not so speak of those who live in destitute regions. Gladly would we go to them with the gospel if we had the means. Is it our fault that we have been ruined and impoverished by war, pestilence, famine, floods and worms, and, worse than all the rest, misrule and oppression? We ought to have done more than we have done; but the world looks on with wonder in seeing what we have accomplished, and what we are now accomplishing and devising, with an humble dependence on the great Head of the church, who deigns to employ us in his work, and who is opening to us "a great door and effectual," though "there are many adversaries." The reviewer closes his truthful and brotherly paper—for he is, after all, very brotherly toward us—with this suggestive paragraph:

"Nor are the whites to be forgotten. There is a work to be done among them, to the accomplishing of which we are called of God. The Methodist Episcopal Church South is not doing this work; it has not enough enthusiasm; it confines its ministry chiefly to cities and a few larger villages; it imagines its necessities compel it to this course. That immense multitude of poor people, scattered through the barren regions of the South, called "mean whites," "sand-hillers," "crackers" or "clay-eaters," than whom a more deplorably neglected class is not to be found in the United States, of whose existence the outside world has but recently become aware, and for whose souls no man seems to care, needs our poor man's religion. In our cities there are large bodies of mechanics and laborers who are not invited or welcomed to any church, but are rather repulsed from all. These are asking for a home—a church-home. Let the societies of the North and West send into our pine barrens, into the tents of our turpentine gatherers, into our rice and cotton fields, where plowmen and hoe-hands swelter under a semi-tropical sun; into our cities, where stevedores, cartmen and mechanics crowd wharf and street and church—let them send men who, like our fathers, counted not even their lives dear unto them. Let them send their young, heroic men to preach in our log-cabins, our bush-arbors, our cane-brakes and rice-swamps, and, with a modicum of their fathers' unction, a fragment of their fathers' zeal, they will reap results ten-fold greater than have ever been reaped before."

THE following dialogue is said to have taken place in a school near Salisbury, England: "Now, then, the first boy of the grammar class, stand up!" First boy stands up, blushing: "Here I be, zir." Examiner: "Well, my good boy, can you tell me what vowels are?" First boy: "Vowls, zir? Ees, of course I can." Examiner: "Tell me, then, what are vowels?" First boy, grinning at the simplicity of the question: "Vowls, sir? Why, vowls be chickens!"

Foreign Missions from a New Standpoint.

BY R. S. GREEN.

1. Missions pay financially.

From a business standpoint, facts show it. It has cost $1,225,000 to evangelize the Sandwich Islands. We now have a yearly trade with them of $4,500,000. A profit of fourteen per cent. would, in two years, more than pay the entire cost of the mission.

The simple item of plows sent to the Zulus has of late more than covered the expense of that mission.

But are these results due to missions? Decidedly, yes. A savage knows nothing of the value of productive soil, of mines, etc. Give him enough to eat, protect him from excessive cold and heat, and that is enough.

But let the Spirit of God change his heart, and filth gives way to cleanliness, idleness to industry. The soil is cultivated; houses are built. With civilization come the wants of civilized people. Thus in no heathen country has the missionary been long before orders have come back to us for agricultural implements, wagons, harness, furniture for houses, cooking utensils, manufactured cloths, books, etc. This demand increases, of course, with every year. If the first fruits are such, what will be the harvest when China and Japan and Africa and many other nations shall be fully opened up to civilization and commerce? According to the Washington Bureau of Statistics, poor Africa has already, through missions, afforded us a trade of $3,000,000.

The Sandwich Islands were formerly the dread of trans-Pacific navigation. Ships wrecked there were plundered, and the crews murdered. But the gospel has made a change, and it is estimated that the amount of property thus saved from plunder has been greater than the cost of missions. Besides, cost of insurance has become less with the smaller risk; thus every one who drinks tea, or uses any of the commodities which come to us from across the still ocean, is directly benefited.

Counting all the returns (many will, however, escape the most careful statistics,) and they will mount up for $1 spent on missions, $10 in our pockets.

2. Missions pay scientifically.

"Few are aware," says the late lamented Agassiz, "how much we owe the missionaries, both for their intelligent observation of facts and their collecting of specimens. We must look to them not a little for aid in our effort to advance future science."

Take geography, for instance. Our missionaries go out into countries uncivilized, and for the most part unknown. They fill up the blanks on the maps, and correct the mistakes of adventurers. The honored name of Livingstone will occur to all. The problem of the source of the Nile, which has troubled the world from the time of Herodotus, is solved by a simple herald of the cross. Nor is he the only example. So much has been done that Karl Ritter, an eminent German geographer, and others, admit that more information has come from heathen lands, through the missionaries, than through all other sources combined.

Take philology as another instance. The first thing for the missionary is to master the language of the country. Often he is the first to reduce it to writing, to form its grammar, to arrange its dictionary. This has been done with the Sanscrit, with the languages of India, Syria, Arabia, Africa, China, South Sea Islands, American Indians, etc. Materials were thus afforded for the study of comparative grammar, and thus the problem of one original language has been solved. God's word is true when it says: "The whole earth was of one language and of one speech." The faith of Christians is strengthened; infidels and skeptics are silenced.

Every department of science has been enriched by the contributions of missionaries. Comparative geology, mineralogy and botany, like comparative grammar, began with the mission era. Missionaries are acute observers, and, as a class, enthusiastic scholars. Their books are in our libraries; their specimens are found in abundance in our cabinets—specimens which no money could secure. Now compare the vast amounts of money spent by private societies and governments for scientific purposes, with the amount spent on missions, and who will say that the latter, from a purely scientific standpoint, do not pay a hundred-fold?

3. Missions pay religiously.

The reflex influence of missions upon us is worth more than they have cost. They have developed the spirituality of the church. Fifty years ago the church was splitting hairs so fine that the common eye couldn't discern them. All was doctrine, abstract, intellectual, controversial. Faith was preached so much that works—the proof of a true faith—were nearly forgotten. Then God started missions. An era of practical Christianity was begun, which has been growing constantly more intense. With increased spirituality came more entire consecration, both of self and property, which is worth a thousand times what it has cost. And God is rewarding us for it. He is giving us in missions a practical illustration of what in his word he so often tells us, "The liberal soul shall be made fat," and thus in this sense we may say: "Freely ye have received, freely give."—Interior.

A FELLOW coming from the top of the Alleghanies to New York, in winter, was asked whether it was as cold there as in the city. He had probably been at some march-of-intellect school, for he glanced at a thermometer.

"Horribly cold," said he, "for they have no thermometer there, and, of course, it's just as cold as it pleases."—National Baptist.

A WORTHY old farmer, who was being worried in his cross-examination by a lawyer in Maine, exclaimed: "Look here, squire, don't you ask a good many foolish questions?"

MRS. MATTIE MAGEE.

DR. WILLIAM M. ROBINSON, the subject of this notice, was born in Marion county, Alabama, October, 1834. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1852. In June, 1854, he married to Miss Elizabeth C. Mun. On the twenty-fourth of January, 1874, he died of pneumonia, in Claiborne parish, Louisiana.

Bro. Robinson's entire religious life was spent in this community, and in connection with the Flat Lick church, on the Minden circuit. Deeply will the church and the community feel the loss of such an example of a Christian life.

"If can his brethren spare him."

Thousands bewail a hero, and a nation mourneth for its king; but the whole universe lamenteth the loss of a man of prayer. Bro. Robinson leaves a wife and seven children to mourn their loss. May the dispensation of Divine Providence be sanctified to the good of all, and may we imitate his life in faith, hope and charity.

JOHN A. MULLEN.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, November 30, 1873, COURTLANDT LEGRAND GOODRICH, who was born December 6, 1849, at Marion College, Mississippi, and was married to Miss Mary L. Rodgers, of Pulaski, Tennessee, December 28, 1865. Bro. Goodrich was the son of Rev. H. P. Goodrich, D. D., president of Marion College, and a prominent minister of the Presbyterian Church. He joined that church at twelve years of age, and after his father's death removed to St. Landry parish, Louisiana. He, with his wife and mother, united by letter with the Methodist Episcopal Church South as soon as they found it practicable that they would not have the opportunity of uniting with the Presbyterian Church—there being no Presbyterian church in the vicinity. In an experience of twenty-three years as a pastor I have never found a more faithful man than Bro. Goodrich. It is not saying too much to assert that his overwhelming spiritual gravitation was too strong for earthly; hence his entrance to the companionship of heaven. He left an aged mother and a bright little boy. They, however, cannot mourn as the hopeless mourn, for they are well assured that he has gone to join the companionship of his sainted wife, and to await the coming of mother and son, in the mansions of the blessed.

B. F. WHITE.

DIED, at Port Hudson, East Baton Rouge parish, Louisiana, September 26, 1873, ELLIS CHASE DIXON, son of Thomas F. and S. A. Dixon, aged seventeen years, nine months and twenty-seven days.

He embraced religion, at a protracted meeting in Jackson, Louisiana, about two years previous to his death; but, removing soon after with his parents to Port Hudson, Louisiana, where church privileges are seldom realized, he did not give his name as a church member, but was united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in sentiment. He was indeed a noble boy—affectionate and obedient to his parents, manly in his deportment, ready and willing to perform any act of kindness within his power. He was beloved by all who knew him. The hopes of his parents for his future usefulness were all being centered upon him, when his health began to fail, and after a few weeks passed till he was confined to his bed, and in less than a week cerebral congestion took place, and soon he was gone, in spite of all the physicians could do.

In the early stage of his sickness his parents talked with him upon the subject of religion. He expressed a desire to see a minister and to unite with the church; said he could trust in Jesus as his Savior; and late, when scarcely able to speak, said to one of his brothers: "Meet me in heaven." When his mother asked him if he knew he was dying, he answered: "Yes." She continued: "Are you going to heaven?" He said: "Yes."

Our dear boy is gone. But we sorrow not as those who have no hope: for he that liveth and believeth in Jesus shall never die. We hope to meet him again by and by where

DR. NELATON, the eminent French surgeon, lately deceased, came prominently before the public in connection with his attendance on Garibaldi, after the latter had been wounded in the foot by a rifle-ballet at the battle of Aspromonte. In the consultation held on the case, at which the most eminent surgeons of England and France attended, Dr. Nelaton stood almost alone in the opinion that the bullet was still imbedded in the foot, the other surgeons maintaining that it had passed out, as the most careful probings had failed to discover its whereabouts. To ascertain its location Dr. Nelaton constructed a delicate probe, consisting of a small rod, working by a screw in an outer tube. To the end of the rod a piece of soft porcelain was attached, on which a leaden substance like a bullet would make a black mark. With this instrument Dr. Nelaton discovered the place where the ball had lodged in his patient's foot, and then extracted it. The probe is now used exclusively in cases of gun-shot wounds, and is known as the Nelaton probe.

DIO LEWIS says the neck should be dressed lightly. From the many movements which are made by the larynx in speaking it is inferred that it is a matter of great importance that the neck in health should be always loosely dressed. Tight cravats are sure to obstruct the proper function of this organ, and bring on irritation, which may lead to bronchitis or consumption.

th what cool, unblushing ase some men carry on their of lying and stealing, and but y there have been several reble detections of criminals of es.

How is it defended? Thus:

1. "Others do it—great men, men revered in the church, and whom we revere as fathers and believe to be now in heaven, have done it." It is true. But that great and good men have done any one thing does not by itself raise even a presumption that it is right. So strange are the workings of human nature that many great and some good men have done almost anything that can be named. He who takes refuge in such a statement as that now refuted usually has no other mode of defense.

2. "It cannot be sinful to extend the influence of a good sermon by preaching it." What! Not if a man becomes a liar in so doing? One might favorably affect many minds by detailing an experience which he does not possess. He might give a fictitious death-bed scene great vividness and impressiveness by pretending to have witnessed it. Is it right thus to "do evil that good may come?" It is not merely that which is said by the minister which moves the people; it is the character speaking, the relation that the orator, pastor and friend sustains to the people, and if they know that you are not uttering your own matter you know that they will not be moved with anything higher than contempt for you. Such a man cannot say that he has "renounced the hidden things of dishonesty and does not walk in craftiness," for his whole movement is a sham; intellectually he is a whited sepulcher.

3. "That it is better to preach another's wisdom than one's own foolishness."

We will at once admit that no man should preach who cannot preach a sensible sermon, and also that we are not authorized to expect miraculous assistance. But what a paradox is this, that a man is called by a holy God to preach his word and cannot accomplish it without stealing sermons and parts of sermons and passing them off as his own! But it is said that "young ministers cannot prepare two sermons a week, and yet the demand is made of them." If they cannot prepare two sermons let them prepare but one, and attempt only to talk at the other service. Many of the people will think that the discourse which the minister calls "talking" is the discourse of the week, and those who can discriminate are willing to indulge a true man. Besides, let him exchange frequently, and persist with iron will against remaining more than one or at most two years in the first pastorate. By such means these difficulties may be overcome. But it is said that "we have a course of study in hand at the same time, and we cannot prepare the sermons and pursue the studies at the same time." This is a grievous error. He who studies doctrine should prepare a doctrinal sermon each month, quoting his authorities, memorizing them, and especially memorizing his Scripture proofs, attaching to the whole the practical applications which he considers appropriate. If he does this and preaches them to the people, he will not forget them until the revolution of fourscore years has made his mind a wreck or disease has ruined his faculties. If he studies church history, let him give the church a half dozen lectures a year on different phases and periods, arranged in his own order and expressed in his own language. By so doing he will be better prepared for his examination than if he mulls over his books without incorporating what he learns with the general work of the ministry. But whether these methods be employed or not, it is better to wear homespun paid for than to steal broadcloth to make a false show with.

In nimost every case detection follows this vice. It may arise and expose the first offense, or the sinner may fancy that he has secured impunity by frequent repetition of the crime. There are several cases at present in which a few gentlemen who have absolute proof at command have suspended sentence of exposure, hoping that the guilty whom they really love will reform. Could they but know that conscious manhood is worth all the fine passages that they can steal, and that if a man keep his mind active, study, read, think, observe, converse, he will have no difficulty in producing all he needs. But many young men through sheer indolence have reached the state described by the satirist:

> "A common place, and many friends,
> Can serve the plagiary's ends;
> Whose easy vamping talent lies,
> First wit to pilfer, then disguise."

Such should be warned that the true method is to involve by constant thought, reading and observation, and afterward evolve their own conceptions, which will then come forth resembling their parents, and not excite suspicion that they imitate the woman convicted before Solomon of having stolen the living child of another as a substitute for her own dead offspring, or, as in this case, to hide their own sterility.

Contemptible as this crime is, it is an old one. Jeremiah xxiii, 30: "Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my words every one from his neighbor." It is true that in that case they were false prophets, and were destitute of a revelation from God, but they were endeavoring to make the people believe that they obtained the matter for their utterance in the usual and legitimate way.

That this vice is increasing among the ministry I do not at all believe. Some of the so-called fathers made many of their sermons from sketches and books of outlines. This is an evil, and was excusable in them only on the ground that many of them sprang from the plow, the wagon and the work-bench into the pulpit.

There are, however, notwithstanding the improvement gladly recognized, some in this country whose wealth, like that of the members of the late "ring," consists principally of "stealings." And it is to be feared from the half defense or faint condemnation of the practice which some indulge in that "conscience, which makes cowards" of men who would otherwise be brave, is not easy. As every new generation of ministers passes through the temptations to which a love of indolence and vanity, propensities common to our race, give rise, it may be profitable to discuss subjects of this nature once or twice a century.—Methodist.

Half-and-Half Churches.

There is a verse in Revelation that presents a nauseated Christ: "Because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spew thee out of my mouth."

After we have been taking a long walk on a summer's day, or been on a hunting chase, a draught of cold water exhilarates. On the other hand, after standing or walking in the cold air and being chilled, hot water, mingled with some beverage, brings life and comfort to the whole body; but tepid water, neither hot nor cold, is nauseating. Now Christ says that a church of that temperature acts on him as an emetic; "I will spew thee out of my mouth."

The church that is red-hot with religious emotion, praying, singing, working, Christ having taken full possession of the membership, must be to God satisfactory. On the other hand, a frozen church may have its uses. The minister reads elegant essays, and improves the session or the vestry in rhetorical composition. The music is artistic and improves the ear of the people, so that they can better appreciate concert and opera. The position of such a church is profitable to the book-binder who furnishes the covers to the liturgy, and the dry goods merchant who supplies the silks, and the clothiers who furnish the broadcloths. Such a church is good for the business world, makes trade lively, and increases the demand for luxuries of all sorts, for a luxurious religion demands furs and coats and gaiters to match. Christ says he gets along with a church, cold or hot.

But an unmitigated nuisance to God and man is a half-and-half church, with piety tepid. The pulpit in such a church makes more of orthodoxy than it does of Christ. It is immense on definitions. It treats of justification and sanctification as though they were two corpses to be dissected. Its sermons all have a black morocco cover, which some affectionate sister gave the pastor before he was married, to wrap his discourse in, lest it get mussed in the dust of the pulpit. Its gestures are methodical, as though the man were ever conscious that they had been decreed from all eternity, and he was afraid of interfering with the decree by his own free agency. Such a pulpit never startles the people with the horrors of an undone eternity. No strong meat, but only flour and water, mostly water. The church prayer meeting is attended only by a few gray heads, who have been in the habit of going there for twenty years, not because they expect any arousing time or rapturous experiences, but because they feel only a few will be there, and they ought to go. The minister is sound. The membership sound. The music sound. If, standing in a city of a hundred thousand people, there are five or ten conversions in a year, everything is thought to be "encouraging." But Christ says that such a church is an emetic. "Because thou art neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth."

Better warm up or freeze over. Better set the kettle outside in the atmosphere at zero, or put it on the altar of God and stir up the coals into a blaze. If we do not, God will remove us. Christian men are not always taken to heaven as a reward, but sometimes to get them out of the way on earth. They go to join the tenth-rate saints in glory, for if such persons think they will stand with Paul and Harlan Page, and Charlotte Elizabeth, they are much mistaken. When God takes them up the church here is better off. We mourn slightly to have them go, because we have got used to having them around, and at the funeral the minister says all the good things about the man that can possibly be thought of, because we want to make the funeral as respectable as possible. We never feel so much tempted to lie as when an inconsistent and useless Christian has died, and we want in our final remarks to make a good case out for the poor fellow. Still it is an advantage to have such a man get out of the way. He is opposed to all new enterprises. He puts back everything he tries to help. His digestion of religious things is impaired, and his circulation is so poor that no amount of friction can arouse him.

Now it is dangerous for any of you to stay in that condition. If you cannot be moved, God will kill you, and he will put in your place those who will do the work you are neglecting.

Friends! Let all arouse! The nearness of our last account, the greatness of the work to be done, and the calls of God's word and providence, ought to stir our souls. After having been in the harvest-field so long it would be a shame in the nightfall of death to go home empty-handed. Gather up a few gleanings from the field, and beat them out, that it may be found that Ruth had at least "one epha of barley."—Christian at Work.

CORNISH people have always been, until brought into closer contact in later years with the rest of the world by the railway, very unsophisticated. During the Crimean war a lady went into a shop in Penzance to purchase groceries. While she was there an old woman from the country came in and asked for some candles, for which she had to pay a higher price than usual.

"Why should you ask more for the candles than I have always paid?" inquired she.

"It's owing to the war," says the shop-keeper, "that the price is raised, for candles are become dearer."

"Lor!" ejaculates the poor old woman, holding up her hands. "Well, I never knowed afore that they fight by candle-light! Well, to be sure!"

MANY PEOPLE act as if they thought that because they have special need of patience therefore they may do without patience altogether.

The Eucalyptus.

Mr. Frederick Law Olmstead, says the New York Observer, in reply to an inquiry concerning the Eucalyptus, or fever tree, of which it is said that plantations of it destroy malaria, makes some suggestions which are interesting. He says:

"Several species of the Eucalyptus—the globulous among them—have been raised from the seed presented to the park commissioners, and have been used in the summer decorations of the city parks. They have, however, always been kept under glass in the winter, so that no knowledge has been gained as to their hardiness in this climate. It is possible, though hardly probable, that they would grow here, if exposed. They flourish in the south of France, Italy, the Crimea, Algeria and the West Indies. In California also, under a wide range of conditions. I have seen them sprinkled with snow, and hung, for a short time in the morning, with icicles. Apparently they grow almost equally well in dry and in moist situations. They are probably about as hardy as the fig; some of the species perhaps more so. They might be tried with some confidence anywhere south of Philadelphia, and with entire confidence south of Richmond.

"The statements of the article which you inclose, and which I herewith return, in regard to the effect of dense plantations of the Eucalyptus in abating malarious influences, are entirely credible, but it is unnecessary to account for this effect by reference to an 'emission of antiseptic camphorous effluvia.' The influence of all trees on climate and health, through their drainage of the soil simply, is much greater than is popularly recognized. Careful experiments of Pettenkofer with an old spreading oak in the park at Munich, led to the conclusion that the discharge of water through its leaves during the summer was eight and a half times greater than the amount of water falling in rain during the same period upon the ground covered by its branches. The drainage effect of a young and rapidly growing tree, especially under conditions of higher temperature of the air, would be much greater proportionately to its extent of leaf surface.

"A swamp is a basin in which water collects from surrounding higher ground. After heavy rains there may be an overflow from it, and a certain quantity of water per acre remain, determined by the depth of the basin. This water being stagnant, the soil containing decaying matter, at a certain temperature the conditions are established under which the poison called malaria is disengaged and carried by winds to the adjoining highlands. You will readily see that a close plantation of young, rapidly growing trees would draw up and discharge harmlessly into the air all the water which would lie within a certain distance of the surface; that they would further act to delay stagnation of the water in the superficial stratum of soil again by maintaining, by the effect of their shade, a lower temperature of this stratum; that this effect would be increased by the great evaporation constantly going on at their leaves; and that after all, through their action as a screen or sieve, any malaria that might be disengaged would be much less likely to be spread abroad. Any plants of rapid growth would have all these effects—the sunflower, the ailanthus, the pride of China or the willow. The average growth of the several species of Eucalyptus which have been introduced in California during six months of summer, even in cool situations, and on poor and dry soil, is more rapid than that of any of these; and in this, I imagine, consists principally, if not altogether, any advantage it may have.

"It should be known that the effects of removing a large number of trees has frequently been to cause a very virulent form of malarial disease to break out where it was before unknown. Augusta, Georgia, furnishes a marked instance of this, but examples are not wanting in the immediate vicinity of New York. The disappearance of fever and ague soon after the springing up of a dense growth of young trees has also been noticed in various localities.

"Proper provision for a thrifty growth of common trees along the principal avenues of New York would, as Dr. Stephen Smith has observed, besides saving many sunstrokes, add appreciably to the wealth of the city through the increased capacity for work which would follow both to horses and to men and women. Trees cramped and starved at the root, as are most of those now seen in the city, are of little value.

"One species of the Eucalyptus attains a greater height than any other known tree, the sequoia of California not excepted. The Eucalyptus forests are said to be very gloomy, and, except on account of their height, uninteresting. The young trees are striking in form and colors, but in general planting for landscape effect not at all desirable."

AN UNEXPECTED SERMON.—The Richmond Christian Advocate says that some time since, as the performances of a popular traveling circus in North Carolina were about to close, the clown stepped forward and informed the vast assembly that they had taken in about $600 that day, more money, he ventured to say, than any minister of the gospel in that county would receive for a year's service. He then plainly told them that the large portion of the audience were church members, who would plead their poverty when asked for money to support the gospel, and severely exposed their inconsistency. The writer adds that a few Sundays after he preached in the same community, and made a strong appeal for missions, when a collection was taken amounting to $4.38.

THE editor of a Newark paper heard the other day that a new pass had been found in the Andes. He immediately wrote to a man in South America that the pass was his, and he would be much obliged if the man would forward it at once.

Religious Intelligence.

THERE are thirty-eight religious periodicals in the German language printed in America.

THE Canadian Wesleyan Missionary Society raised last year more than $105,000—an increase over the receipts of the previous year of over $14,000.

THE missions of the American Baptist Union in Europe and Africa, with the single exception of Spain, are carried on wholly by natives of the respective countries.

DURING the forty-seven years of its history the total receipts of the American Home Missionary Society have been $6,500,000, and it has added 229,585 members to the churches.

THE Rev. R. H. Williamson, rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal church at Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, has resigned his charge and announced his allegiance to the Reformed Episcopal Church.

THE Pope received a numerous deputation of Irishmen January 5. A large amount of money was presented to his holiness, who praised the "constancy of the Irish people," who had preserved the faith for three centuries.

BY THE generosity of Miss Baxter, of Dundee, the London Missionary Society has been provided with the small steamer Ellengowan for the New Guinea mission, upon which recent beginning the blessing of God so richly rested.

ULTRAMONTANISM is triumphant in France. What is known as the Gallican Liturgy, which has been in use in Paris and other parts of France, has been replaced by the full Roman Liturgy. The change means the absolute submission of the French Catholic Church to the Pope.

HOW FAR Jesuit theology has become the ruling teaching of the Church of Rome may be seen from the fact, recently stated, that the treatise of Perrone, a distinguished Jesuit theologian, on Dogmatic Theology, has passed through no less than one hundred and twenty-two editions.

CHURCH AND STATE, edited by Rev. John Cotton Smith, D. D., speaks of Bishop Cheney, and says: "We see no reason, on any church principle, why he is not truly a bishop. And if he is truly a bishop, in the line of apostolic succession, we do not see how it helps the matter to withhold the title from him."

THE Old Catholic bishops in Holland, as well as in Germany, have signified their complete independence of the Pope. Hitherto episcopal consecrations in Holland have been always notified to Rome. In accordance with that custom a document was recently drawn up for forwarding. But when it was seen by Bishop Reinkens he refused to allow it to be sent. Bishop Rinkel, consecrated at the same time to Harlem, concurred.

IT IS reported that some real estate speculators have offered $2,000,000 for old St. Paul's church, on lower Broadway, New York, and that the offer has been refused. The church occupies an entire block of the most valuable land in the city. The square is filled by the church, a cemetery and the business-rooms of Trinity Corporation. Anybody, rich or poor, who needs clerical services for sickness or death, bridal or burial, during winter or summer, night or day, can find some one ready to respond. The service is without money and without price.

THE work of the Christian press in India is growing in importance. During 1872 the eight principal societies issued about 850,000 copies of vernacular books, tracts and handbills. Several missionary newspapers are published in native languages. Over 150,000 vernacular copies of Bibles, Testaments and Scripture portions were issued. Colportage is becoming an active arm of the missions, and where in former times Bibles and other books were only given away they are now being largely sold, and therefore more highly valued by those who possess them.

THE foreign missions of the Southern Baptist Convention are situated mainly in China. Here the Southern Baptists have four stations, and employ eight ordained missionaries and nine missionary ladies and twelve native assistants. The board employs a missionary and a number of evangelists in Italy. It reports ten missionaries in Liberia, but we are unable to state the precise nature of their connection with the Home Society. The estimated annual expense of the Southern Baptist missions is $40,000. One-half of the board's contributions come from Maryland, Virginia and Kentucky. The rest are distributed over the remaining Southern States.

THE Baptist Missionary Magazine gives a resume of the work of the Eastern China mission of that denomination. This mission is situated in the middle of the Chinese coast and includes a population estimated at 6,000,000. The field is occupied by several missionary societies. The principal station of the Baptist mission is at Ning-po, which has a population of over 300,000. The native church here numbers 100 members, has 3 native preachers, 2 students for the ministry, and 2 Bible women. In the whole field the Baptists have 12 principal stations, 15 chapels, 7 churches, 14 native preachers, 1 colporteur, several Bible women, and a total membership of 218 communicants.

IN THE Washington Territory nearly forty of the Indians on the Chehalis reservation united with the Methodist Episcopal Church lately; 48 were baptized; 23 united with the church October 23, and 21 more were baptized. Arrangements have been made to build a church for these people. The Southern Presbyterians continue to report progress in their Brazilian mission. Mr. Smith has begun a regular Sunday service in Portuguese at Pernambuco. At Socorro and Barranquilla inquirers are constantly coming to the missionaries, saying that their minds have been deeply impressed by the preaching, while the missionaries themselves thought that no good impressions were being made. Reinforcements are called for for both stations.

THE value of the medical missions in opening the way for the gospel is well known. For thirty years efforts of this kind have been making in China. Hospitals and dispensaries have been established in the large seaports and other cities of the empire. A vernacular medical literature has been placed into the hands of the Chinese, and many young men, having received sound training in the advanced medical science of the West, have become useful helpers to the missionaries. Religious services are regularly held in the mission hospitals, and not a few patients have had their souls healed by the Good Physician. The Chronicle of the London Missionary Society gives an encouraging statement of the progress of the Peking medical mission. The out-patients treated at the dispensary in 1872 were 18,280, and a considerable number of acute cases were attended to in the hospital. Missionary medical practice is extending its influence among the higher classes of the community, and is reaching diseases which were formerly reserved for the Celestial doctors. There has been a great demand at the hospital book store for translated scientific works, as also for the magazines of the society. Thus much is done to break down that Chinese conceit and arrogance which, as long as it lasts, will prevent the Christianization to any large extent of the empire.—Independent.

THE United Presbyterian Missionary Record announces the conversion of a learned Mohammedan teacher at Ajmere, India. Imdad Hussein, although a preacher of the Mohammedan religion, had for some years been seeking the truth. His faith in Mohammedanism was first shaken by some Christian books on the points of controversy between Christians and Mohammedans. Then he began to read the New Testament and pursued his study of the word of God for seven years. The result of his inquiry was a visit to Ajmere, with a view of having some remaining difficulties solved and of being received into the Christian church. Having two wives, he passed through a hard struggle in giving up the second and favorite one, and was on the first Sabbath of August, 1873, baptized. Since his residence with the missionary he has received news from his father of the death of his first wife, and thus the way is opened for his reunion with the one whom he had only given up for Christ's sake, and who is also asking for the way of salvation. In the earnest and able confession of faith which he wrote when urging his application for baptism, Imdad Hussein shows that his longing for years had been for an intercessor. He had carefully examined into the character and words of Mohammed, and found him wanting in this particular. Then he had inquired for years into the divinity and sufferings of Christ, until he found peace and pardon in believing.

WOMAN'S UNION MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The agencies of the Woman's Union Missionary Society of America for Heathen Lands are varied. They comprise six centers of missionary work, called "American Homes," where thirty representatives direct the labors of seventy-one native Bible readers or teachers. They train 116 children who are supported specifically; instruct 1,000 high caste women in the zenanas of India, beside those of lower caste; and maintain boarding and day schools containing 1,500 scholars. The society have established an orphanage in Calcutta for 48 children, and teach 76 in the Foundling Asylum, of those girls who have been rescued from famine. They opened the first child's hospital in India, and the only American mission in Calcutta. Miss Higby, their representative in Burmah, teaches 100 Karen girls, to prepare for instructors to their own people. Miss LeFevre has the charge of 70 Burmese girls to be teachers. In Peking, China, a boarding school for girls, a woman's class and a mother's meeting are sustained. In Japan Mrs. Pruyn tells us we have the largest free school for girls ranging from six to twenty years of age, several of whom are married. In Greece Miss Kyle conducts a school for higher classes numbering 97, a Cretan school of 56 and a mother's meeting. The school in Smyrna is under the charge of two sisters, the Misses Seragnums. The work of this society is carried on by voluntary laborers. Its receipts for 1872 were $48,000.—Christian Intelligencer.

DENOMINATIONAL STATISTICS.—We are able, says the Methodist, by means of the recently published tables of Prof. A. J. Schem, formerly of the editorial staff of this paper, to present the statistics of the religious bodies in the United States. The tables of this careful statistician are prepared from the official publications of the churches. They differ from those of the United States census, in that the latter comprise church sittings, not communicants. Prof. Schem brings his returns up to November, 1873. According to these tables the Methodists of all branches number 2,525,408, Baptists 1,725,101, Presbyterians 736,973, Disciples (Campbellites) 500,000, Lutherans 487,195, Congregationalists 318,916, Protestant Episcopalians 247,613, Reformed Church (German) 132,195, United Brethren in Christ 125,464, Evangelical Association (Albrechts) 83,195, Reformed Church (Dutch) 64,214, Universalists 60,000, Unitarians 30,000. There are ten branches of Methodism: the Episcopal churches North and South, the Methodist Church, the Methodist Protestant, the African, the African Zion, the Colored Methodist Episcopal, the Congregational, the Primitive, the Free and the American Wesleyan. Here are divisions enough in all conscience. What they distinctively represent it would puzzle a metaphysician to tell. Yet these churches all agree in doctrine, and fall into two groups, Episcopal and non-Episcopal, in regard to polity. It is a question worth considering whether some effectual means cannot be devised to bring these numerous bodies into closer relations with each other.

Readiness.

Every careful Bible reader has been impressed with the frequency of the admonition to watch and to be ready. The Savior again and again admonishes: "Be ye therefore ready also;" "let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning;" "blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching." The epistles abound in exhortations to the same effect: "But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer;" "let us not sleep, but let us watch and be sober." Complete preparation for the end would seem to be the general import. The reference is chiefly to our spiritual condition, the state of grace in the soul, and the account to be rendered.

Now there are multitudes of Christians who have a painful sense of not being ready. It is not entire loss of hope, nor a very well-defined doubt of final acceptance. They are prayerful in a degree, keep up the ordinary round of religious duties, and are fain to be persuaded that they are of God's children. But when they come to the point of absolute and full preparation for eternity, there is a shadow of uneasiness, and the consciousness that something is lacking. If the misgiving does not amount to a sense of condemnation, it takes the form of a deep conviction, that a deeper work is needed to enable the soul to meet the final hour with perfect composure and satisfaction. Most believers expect to be better before they die, and for the reason that they regard their present attainments as below the standard of meetness for heaven. Their work for Christ has been little in comparison with their gifts and opportunities, and they shrink from appearing in the presence of God with such a meager account. They must do more, and bring the goods bestowed by their Lord to a higher improvement, before they can be satisfied to meet the reckoning. Their inward experience is also defective, purity of heart is not clear, and holiness needs to be perfected in the fear of God. This is the secret conviction, but half expressed to themselves, and seldom or never disclosed to others, that there is a lack which they purpose and hope to make good before the summons comes.

Another aspect of the want of readiness is seen in those who practically believe in an extreme unction which is administered by the Holy Spirit in sickness and in the article of death. Besides the multitudes of sinners who are risking all upon the chances of death-bed repentance, there are not a few professed Christians, living carelessly and carnally, who scarcely look for anything better until a crowning grace shall be given at the close of the earthly career. They do not feel themselves to be prepared, nor do they regard it as a present privilege, but they expect all defects of character and all guilt will be graciously removed in death. It is an extreme unction to which they look forward, and which shall make them perfectly ready for the judgment. There are, at least these two refuges of lies to which religious people resort: the purpose to be better and to experience a deeper work in their hearts, and the persuasion that absolute readiness is impossible until the peculiar grace of the death-hour shall be imparted. Of the Christians who feel the need of a closer communion with God, and of greater faithfulness in his service, how many will carry out these purposes? Unless there is an immediate and vigorous effort made to come fully to Christ, and to give themselves up wholly to him, they are likely to live dissatisfied and to die unready.

It is enough that the warnings to be ready are mostly addressed to Christians. To them Christ and the apostles direct the frequent admonition to watch, and to have the loins girded and the lights burning. If it is anything, it is a present readiness that is enjoined—a readiness so complete, as to faithful service and spiritual experience, that the soul may at any moment meet God in the judgment. No Christian should so live as to make it possible to be taken unawares. He may be in the very midst of business, the stay of his family, and rejoicing in his prime and health, even as a strong man to run a race. His enjoyment of life may be complete, his ties to it many and strong, and he may be justified in the conviction that death is to him far off. But still he should be as ready as if he were certain of dying in a few days or hours. This readiness is anything but a morbid and gloomy brooding over death and the grave; it is not a dark and distempered cynicism, nor an austere and self-righteous contempt for the present world. It consists perfectly with active business, cheerful spirits, and a healthful tone of mind and body. It does not suppose invalidism, old age or peculiar peril, but hale in health, exuberant in spirits, successful in affairs, and yet having the conversation in heaven, and the wedding garment on. In reference to their temporal interests and domestic relations, it is difficult to put things in a shape or to so adjust matters that there should be readiness for death. At best there will be more or less loss, sorrow and derangement of plans. But in our relations to God and in the character there need be no catastrophe.

There may be readiness for heaven, and there should be. To be conscious that we are not prepared, fully prepared, should be sufficient to arouse the soul to its danger, and to send every one who has misgivings with unwonted boldness and earnestness to the throne of grace. If you are not satisfied with your spiritual state, if persuaded that something more is needed, as you value your soul do not repress the conviction, nor quiet it with a languid purpose to mend your ways, but instantly call upon God for a full salvation. For the comfort and guidance of the troubled and awakened believer we would direct him at once to Christ, especially to that apprehension of him which makes him an all-sufficient Savior. It is purity of heart that is needed, perfect love that casts out all fear, and a sense of devotion and trust without one wicked doubt. "Ye are complete in him." He is alike our sanctification and our redemption. There can be no spiritual character, no holiness of heart and no boldness in the judgment apart from Christ. When the Spirit has wrought in us his perfect work, and when we have reached the utmost consecration, this must still be our comfort: that we are complete in him. Readiness for death and eternity, but it is readiness in Christ. The victory over sin and death is through Jesus Christ, and the largest consolation and assurance flow from his precious blood—his atoning and cleansing blood.

Havana and Vera Cruz.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

HAVANA—THE SEA.

AT SEA, January 25, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: We entered the beautiful gates of this port on the morning of the twenty-first. Moro Castle is on one side, and a fort at the distance of half a mile on the other, reminding one of the entrance to the harbor of San Francisco. As soon as you see the castle, and sooner, indeed, you see a line of warehouses and elevated hillsides crowned with walls, suggestive of hidden armaments, which rise round and above the city. In a moment the steamer glides fairly into the harbor, which is full of vessels, at anchor, of various nationalities. The shores rise gradually, as an amphitheater, from the edge of the water. The harbor looks about two miles square in area. Large sugar factories, a few church domes, and rows of white three-story houses, with a long line of coasting vessels, their prows touching the wharves, are the principal objects which first strike the eye. To this city we pay annually $55,000,000 in gold (for sugar and coffee and tobacco) in excess of all that we sell to her. This state of things has existed for ten years past; and, as the sugar crop of Louisiana is ceasing to be profitable, will not soon change.

We spent but a day in Havana. In the evening a friend drove us out to a hill that overlooked a most beautiful panorama of city, palm-trees, cocoanut groves and the ocean. The sun had just gone down; curtains of crimson, beryl and gold hung over the sea when his fierce rays had been quenched; the air was empurpled, and inclosed land, sky and ocean in its tinted haze. Surely Italy never surpassed the gorgeous scene.

On the twenty-second we found ourselves on the Corsicana, of the Royal British mail line. The captain is intelligent and good-natured; has been so long following the sea that he has become rheumatic, and may be somewhat gouty. He is of large, full frame, which has become much of a barometer—his pains gave the first distant notice of a norther. And I should not be surprised if he had studied the charts, and taken observations, and watched the compass until he was also very nearly quadrant and sextant; at least enough so to make a very good guess of his whereabouts at any point on these seas, from the Leeward and Windward Islands to Vera Cruz.

The thoroughness of John Bull is seen in everything—in the way the vessel is stopped and soundings taken twice over, the way the crew is mustered on Sunday, all neatly dressed for service, and their names called twice over. Everything on system, and nothing abated through haste. This line is quite famous for the strength and regularity of its vessels. No passenger has been drowned or buried on it for twenty years. Indeed the captain assured me that by calculations recently made it was found that there was more danger to life on land than on sea; that the risk was in staying on shore. As there was a heavy sea rolling, the wind rising, and I was staying myself with some difficulty against the lurching of the vessel, I was much pleased with his statement; and, as the greater part of my life has been spent upon land, I had accustomed myself to feel safe there.

But the sea is a study which will never end. From New Orleans to Havana it was the most harmless-looking expanse of gently-moving force that ever greeted the eye or waited on the service of man. It toyed along with the vessel's course, and received into its bosom, at ten thousand points, the sun's earliest light. Nothing could be gladder in its mood, or more cunningly chased than were the lines of beauty all over its face. The waves just raised their heads, laughed a little, and modestly retired.

Now and then only was there discovered a suggestive depth, a scarcely perceptible movement as of mighty pulses and currents under restraint. I was almost in love with it, and wished that I had even more wealth ventured on its surface, so that other eyes might see what I saw and enjoyed. This state of things continued until we had been out two days from Havana. Then came the captain's rheumatism, and with it the sea began to take on some of its ancient spasms. The waves became at first merely reckless and threatening, but presently put on a majesty and volume that for two days regarded our large ship as a boy's boat, made of a shingle. Last year I was shut up in a tavern, riding out a Texas norther which blew for a week. Now we are just about through a norther at sea, and feel thankful to the Father of mercies for safe deliverance. Fortunately I am saved the pain of seasickness, but cannot but feel for many fellow-passengers. The crews, waiters and officers of steamers are understood to be above any weakness of this kind. Early this morning, while in bed, I overheard the following—an outburst from the steward:

"Where is that boy David?"

"Sick, sir; been sea-sick for two days."

"Who says he's sick? Does the doctor say so? No man is sick till the doctor says he's sick. Call him."

"What's the matter with you, sir?"

"I've been sick—throwing up."

"What have you been doing to yourself?"

"I put my finger down my throat."

"You've no right, sir, to put your finger down your throat unless you know where you are putting it."

David is a light mulatto boy, just shipped as a start for cabin work. He is very spindling and tall for a boy of fifteen, his legs and his head making a large part of his person. The doctor says of him that he will never do; that he wants "feeding." The head waiter, a very stout, short man, says the boy gives way too much to his feelings; that he ought to stir about and work it off; that without exercising he can be sick for a month; that he doubts if he is fit for this service, which is much like the army.

JANUARY 26.

But here is Vera Cruz—the pilot-boat as a speck is on the water. As we approached the coast we had a fair view of the peak of Orizaba. Beneath its top were gigantic white clouds, rolled as turbaned Turks kneeling before the Sultan; above them towered, grand and immovable, the hoary summit of this monarch of the Cordilleras.

The ship has dropped her anchor. O how delightful to find myself safe "within the vale" after life's tempestuous voyage! The sea is a good place to pray. Few sailors are atheists. I never know one while on the trip. I read an English work on the law of storms, and learned that it was not enough only to know where the center of the storm would pass, but to be safe one must also heave to on the right tack. We were put ashore in a boat. The waves were running high, and made it no uneasy thing. We barely escaped being drenched in the surf at the very instant of landing.

What a pity it is that one has to go full four days out of the way to reach this port from New Orleans. Our people seem to be so intent upon protecting iron that they are abandoning the sea, and especially the rich opening trade of Mexico, to Great Britain. To-night at two A. M. we leave for the City of Mexico.

Another Plan.

The Western Methodist gives a plan for the reorganization of our missionary affairs. The salary supplemental board recommended is very much the same as the church sustentation fund and committee of the Presbyterian Church. Almost any plan will develop friction at some point, but the changes indicated by the parent Board of Missions, at its meeting in May last, are probably as good as any. That board passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to memorialize the General Conference at its next session on behalf of this board, praying for such changes in our missionary system as shall require all collections for missions to be paid to the treasurer of the parent board, and giving all authority in the matter of appropriations, both for the domestic and foreign fields, to the parent board.

The plan of the Western Methodist is as follows:

Let there be a Board of Missions at Nashville, having charge of the foreign work, including the Indian Mission Conference, the missions to people speaking foreign tongues in our own country, and the missions in such Annual Conferences as are too weak to provide for the destitute in their own bounds. To these several departments let appropriations be made by the Board of Missions, the Bishop and the presiding elders in the Annual Conferences aforesaid to fix upon the amount to be applied for the benefit of each and every missionary, and the whole thereof not to exceed the appropriations made by the Board of Missions.

For the Board of Missions, as above, let there be, as now, a missionary contribution in each and every charge, the amount obtained to be forwarded directly to the treasurer, or, if not, to be taken to the Annual Conference, and by it to be forwarded to the treasurer through a committee on missions, which also should report and transmit to the Board of Missions the amount collected for missions in the Annual Conference, statistics and other facts, as is now done by the Conference Board of Missions.

Let the Conference Board of Missions be done away with altogether, and let the domestic missions—i. e., to the destitute who speak our own tongue, in city and country—be put upon a separate and distinct footing in such Annual Conferences as are strong enough to provide for them without aid from the Board of Missions. But how would they be provided for?

Let another board be organized—it might be called the "Salary Supplement Board," until a better name could be found for it. This name is sufficiently definite for the present purpose. Let a collection be made in each and every charge, and paid over to this board during the meeting of the Annual Conference. Let the funds thus obtained be appropriated for the benefit of that class of appointments now known as domestic missions, the amount appropriated to them severally to be determined by the board in consultation with the Bishop and presiding elders, under suitable regulations. Thus there would be sufficient provision for the home work; and if in any Annual Conference the funds of the board should increase beyond the wants of its field, the surplus could be transferred to a similar board in a needy Annual Conference.

The important advantage of the plan here sketched consists in the fact that, if adopted, it would put the cause represented by the Board of Missions—the work of missions proper—upon its own merits. This we believe to be necessary in order that our church may realize a high degree of success in the evangelization of the nations of the earth. After a little needed training, we doubt not, there would be a marked increase of interest in and contributions to the Board of Missions.

While we are satisfied the home work would prosper more than it does now under the workings of our missionary machinery, the "Salary Supplement Board" would be a popular institution, and would not lack for funds. Besides, under its workings we would get rid of phraseology, which, though the objections to it are not well founded, is very repulsive to many people, and by the use of which the work is retarded and even set back. Methodists, we think, will never cease to object seriously to the calling of the charge of which they are members a mission. This plan dismisses, for the most part, the objectionable phraseology.

BISHOP ISAAC LANE, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, gave us a call last week. We are glad to learn that his church is generally growing and prosperous.

The Week of Prayer.

Chancellor Howard Crosby, D. D., does not think well of the week of prayer as a permanent institution. We quote his views, as published in the Independent:

But are we right in arguing from good results? No one will say it is a safe method. We all know that God brings most happy issues out of very evil and sorrowful events. The issues do not make the events desirable. Our only safe way to judge of a religious scheme is not by its results, but by its correspondence with God's revealed truth. And to this must we bring our "week of prayer" if we would know its merit as a means of grace. It is very fair and beautiful to our eyes. It appeals to our warmest sympathies and has received the approbation of the great body of Protestant believers belonging to the non-prelatical churches. But its beauty and acceptance are, equally with its results, false arguments for its maintenance if it be inconsistent with the general teaching of the word of God. By making the "week of prayer" a stated observance, at a fixed period of the year, we add to the ecclesiastical calendar. Those who can see the way clear to Easter, Whitsuntide, Christmas, Good Friday, and the saints' days need not object to this. If Romanists and Episcopalians can have Lent, why may not Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists, etc., have the week of prayer? But I am one of those who are satisfied with the fifty-two Lord's days in the year, that God gave us to keep holy. I think he knew how much man could stand in that direction. We should know that a priori. But, if we wish a posteriori proof, we have only to notice the invariable fact that exactly as churches have used man-made holy days God's holy day has been disregarded. Christmas and Good Friday are far holier than the Sabbath in most of the countries of Europe and in thousands of families in this country. Lent is made more of by its observers than any forty Lord's days. A dinner-party in Lent would shock the religious feelings of many who would not hesitate to attend such a social gathering on a Sunday out of Lent. Yet all these man-made fasts and feasts of the church started from laudable motives. Pious hearts originated them. They were honest schemes for elevating the religious standard and mingling a true Christianity with the life of the people. The founders of the system had no idea that it would be so sadly perverted and prove the basis of a formalistic or merely sentimental Christianity. It was with them as with the God-fearing Gideon, who set up the ephod at Ophrah (Judges viii, 27) with the pious purpose of diverting the people's attention from himself (for they would make him a king) to God. But all Israel at length "went a-whoring after it." If an "ecclesiastical year" had been desirable, we should have had injunctions regarding it in the New Testament, as the Jews had in the Old Testament for Passover, Pentecost, the Day of Atonement and the Feast of Tabernacles. Or, at least, we should have had some hints looking that way. But in vain do we search for any special day of worship, except the "first day of the week." It will not do to say that the Jewish customs should be followed by us, for the Jewish church was pre-Christian, and, therefore, typical. Its whole plan was self-consistent. A robed priesthood, a sacrificial cultus, an elaborate temple, a system of external purifications were all parts of a grand typic whole, of which the three great festivals and the great fast formed another part. The New Testament church has none of this. It is post-Christian, and reads in history what the ancient Jews had to read in type. If we follow the Jewish customs in part, we ought to follow them in all. Rome tries to do this, and is in this consistent.

The "week of prayer" has become a new Lent. It is fastened upon the churches as a set holy time. Its founders, with purest motives, would shrink from making it like the abused feasts and fasts of which we have spoken; but its users in course of time will not care what its founders intended. Human nature will have its own way. It is a man-made scheme set in the midst of the church, and must have the unfortunate results which all man-made schemes when established in perpetuum have been known to effect.

There can be no objection to the appointment by Christians of special seasons of convocation and prayer, according to occasion; but when these seasons are stereotyped—put into the ecclesiastical year—then the evil comes in. The occasion is a significant token from God; but the stereotyping runs beyond the occasion and is entirely human.

But is not the New Year a very appropriate time for a special service? Did the Lord Jesus or his apostles think so? If they did, why did they not say so? Who made the New Year? Why does it begin in January, rather than March or September? I think we shall find it a trick of the enemy to make one part of the year more important than the rest; which is really to make the rest less important than the one part. God scattered his Sabbaths through the year to prevent this.

One other thought. Are we not making a new doctrine of this matter of cotemporaneous prayer? There is no such notion in Scripture. We find there united prayer, the prayer of Christians gathered together in one place; but this idea of having Christians in many places praying at the same moment seems to me to be mere sentimentalism or else false doctrine. We bungle, moreover, in carrying out the idea; for we forget that there are twelve hours' difference between New York and China, for instance, in the record of time. Let us beware of these fancies, which are not scriptural.

A CHILD thus beautifully expresses his faith: "Jesus has promised to carry the lambs in his arms, and, as I am only a little boy, it will be easier for Jesus to carry me."

Religion of Our Literary People.

The Independent says:

Our literary men and women [illegible] hardly help putting some little [illegible] their religion into their writing, [illegible] their religious sympathies are [illegible] secret. The following facts on [illegible] subject we think are accurate: [illegible] ant is a Unitarian, and one of [illegible] vice presidents of the American Unitarian Association, and a similar office is also held by George William Curtis, who occasionally reads sermons in the church of that denomination on Staten Island. Dr. Holmes is likewise a Unitarian of a somewhat earnest type, and other believers in the same faith are John Gorham Palfrey, the historian, who was once a clergyman, Francis Parkman, Senator Sumner, Motley, Bancroft, Whipple, Howells, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. Spofford, Bret Harte, J. T. Trowbridge, and Mr. Godkin, of the Nation. James Freeman Clarke and Edward E. Hale are almost as well known as clergymen as men of letters. Lougfellow and Lowell are Unitarians of a conservative type. What that body is also to be associated probably, Bayard Taylor, Charles Dudley Warner and Mark Twain are Congregationalists, attending the same church in Hartford; and other Congregationalists are Dr. Holland, Lucy Larcom, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Gail Hamilton, Horace E. Scudder, and Wendell Phillips, who used to attend the Old South, Boston, which sanctuary he still frequents, we suppose, for postal purposes. Higginson, Parton and Crane are Free Religionists, Colonel Higginson having once been a Unitarian minister and Mr. Cranch being a graduate of the Harvard Divinity School. Emerson and A. Bronson Alcott are, of course, Transcendentalists, and Miss L. M. Alcott's sympathies are also with this school. Epes Sargent and Robert Dale Owen are Spiritualists, Edward Eggleston is a Methodist and a doctor of divinity, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney is a Swedenborgian, John Boyle O'Reilly is a Roman Catholic, and the Episcopallans are represented by R. H. Dana, Jr., John Hay and Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Whittier is a Quaker of liberal tendencies, although he does not, we believe, call himself Hicksite. Turning from literature to scholarship, using both terms in a free sense, of Congregationalists must be mentioned Presidents Woolsey and Porter and Profs. Whitney and Dana, of Yale; Prof. Young, of Dartmouth; President Hopkins, Drs. Horace Bushnell and J. P. Thompson, Prof. Bartlett, of Chicago, and Prof. of Andover; George P. Marsh; Hammond Trumbull, of Hartford, and Prof. Asa Gray, of Cambridge, who is also an earnest Darwinian. President McCosh, Dr. Hodge, Dr. Philip Schaff, and, we suppose, Prof. March are Presbyterians; Ezra Abbot, F. J. Child and Prof. Peirce are Unitarians, Dr. Abbot standing by Lowell, with the Evangelical party. Prof. Sophocles attends the Appleton chapel (Unitarian) of Harvard College, though no great Unitarian we believe. Dr. H. B. Hackett is a Baptist.

Camp Meeting.

We learn that the trustees of the Seashore camp ground are actively engaged in improving the ground and getting ready for the next camp meeting, which is to commence on Friday, the twenty-fourth day of July next. We desire to call attention to the subject thus early that those intending to erect tents may not postpone it to a late day, when time will be more valuable and the cost of building far more expensive.

Commence your preparations in time and in earnest for a large and profitable meeting. Correspondence can be had with either of the following officers: W. H. Foster, president; Philip Hallaran, secretary; G. W. Goodwyn, treasurer.

To the Louisiana Conference.

Conference, by resolution, directed the preachers to take a collection for the expense of delegates to General Conference during the month of March and to forward the same to R. J. Harp, New Orleans.

REV. THOMAS B. SARGENT, D. D., reached New Orleans from Galveston on Saturday, February 14. We are glad to report him in improved health, and able to do full work in the pulpit. The congregations of Felicity Street and Carondelet Street were edified by his ministrations on Sunday last. We trust that his stay among us may be protracted.

DR. J. B. WALKER arrived in company with Dr. Sargent, and preached twice on Sunday. His many friends are delighted to see and hear him. He is looking in good health, and not the worse for his manifold labors, pastoral and editorial.

WE HAVE RECEIVED tickets to the jubilee of the Felicity Street Sunday school. There is to be a concert of exercises by the children, and presentation of prizes. The jubilee is to be held at the church on Friday night, February 20, at six P. M.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH, after a few days spent in the vicinity of Thibodaux, Louisiana, reached our city on Monday, the sixteenth. Mrs. Kavanaugh is with the Bishop, and we are glad to state that both are in good health.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—Citizens of the Fourth District should bear in mind that the "Lady Cheap John" is receiving a fresh supply of boots and shoes direct from the best manufacturers of the North and East. Having made her purchases for cash, she is offering them at remarkably low prices.

DRUGS, MEDICINES AND SPECIALTIES.—Wholesale and retail purchasers will consult their own interest by calling at the extensive establishment of J. L. Lyons, successor to Ball & Lyons, so long and favorably known in the trade. See their advertisement in another column.

STAPLE AND FANCY DRY GOODS. Great inducements are offered by the St. Philip store, No. 240 Royal street, and purchasers, in our opinion, will do well to visit that large and extensively-assorted establishment, and make the acquaintance of stock and prices.

LOCK-STITCH SEWING MACHINE. Our esteemed fellow-citizen, M. S. Hedrick, No. 103 Canal street, so well and favorably known to the public, advertises the Domestic Lock-Stitch Sewing Machine of Willcox & Gibbs. See advertisement elsewhere.

HAIR STORE.—Miss C. C. Mathews, having a large assortment of braids, curls, switches, etc., on hand, in order to reduce stock is offering bargains in the above line of goods. Those interested will bear in mind No. 282, Camp street.

COTTON GINS, PRESSES AND CORN MILLS.—We know of no better place to obtain the best of the above articles than at the machinery depot of Mr. W. L. Cushing, No. 61 St. Charles street. See advertisement.

THE genuine Halford Leicestershire Table Sauce, now so generally in use in families, can be obtained of all good grocers. You have but to try a single bottle to become its reference. It is the cheapest, at the same time that it is the best. fe5 4t

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

J. L. LYONS,

SUCCESSOR TO BALL & LYONS,

Wholesale and Retail

DRUGGIST AND IMPORTER,

Corner Camp and Gravier Streets,

NEW ORLEANS, LA.,

offers to the city and country trade, at the lowest market prices, a complete stock of DRUGS, Foreign and Domestic Chemicals, Patent Medicines, Perfumery, Paints, Oils, Window Glass, Fine Wines and Liquors, Surgical Instruments, and all articles appertaining to the Drug business.

Special attention is called to the Retail and Prescription Department of the business, which will be found equal in all respects to any Pharmacy in this country, and the public may rely upon Prescriptions being compounded, at all hours, with perfect accuracy, of the best materials and by the most competent Pharmaceutists. French, German and Spanish spoken.

SOLE PROPRIETOR OF

ABRAMS' CHILL TONIC,

a most effectual, reliable and entirely safe remedy for Chills and Fever, etc. Sold under full guarantee.

BRODIE'S ASTRINGENT CORDIAL.

This medicine, for the cure of Diarrhea, Flux, Cholera and all diseases of the bowels, is without exception the most valuable and indispensable remedy known, being so mild in its action that it can be given to infants with impunity, and yet so certain in its effect that it controls the most acute attacks. For infants its use is recommended in preference to the death-dealing "Soothing Syrups," etc. No household should be without it.

LOCOCK'S COUGH ELIXIR.

A preparation invaluable to persons suffering from Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis and all Pulmonary affections. It is specially adapted to the relief of Hoarseness, and all diseases of the Throat caused by excessive use of the voice. It can be administered with perfect safety to infants, and is really the only known alleviator in Whooping Cough.

Bull & Lyons' Cod Liver Oil and Lacto-Phosphate of Lime, for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Scrofulous and Tuberculous affections, Rickets and all complaints characterized by deficient nutrition. In this preparation the disagreeable taste and odor of the oil is completely masked, and the Lime, instead of being presented to the stomach in an indigestible and inert form, as in the old preparation of oil and phosphate of lime, is here held in solution and is readily assimilated. Given to delicate and puny infants and children, its use is soon followed by marked improvement. This combination was suggested to us by a number of our prominent physicians, and has been perfected only after long-continued labor and experiment.

Bull & Lyons' Elixir of Calisaya Bark, with Pyro-Phosphate of Iron.

An excellent tonic, combining the medicinal properties of Iron, Phosphorous and Peruvian Bark. Particularly adapted to women and children suffering from General Debility, Want of Appetite, Dyspepsia, Impoverishment of the Blood, etc.

ABRAMS' COMPOUND FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU.

Abrams' Compound Fluid Extract Sarsaparilla, with Iodide Potass, for purifying the Blood, Rheumatism, Gout, Scrofula, Old Sores, Pimples, Blotches, Cutaneous Eruptions and all diseases requiring alterative treatment.

Abrams' Compound Arnica Liniment.

This popular preparation well merits the reputation it enjoys. It is unrivaled as a rubefacient, and is employed with success in Cholera and Cholera Morbus, in which cases the extremities should be rubbed with it, and it should be used as a compress on the abdomen. Applied by rubbing, or in compress around the head, it is a sovereign remedy for Neuralgia and Sick Headache. In Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Cramps, Colic, Pain in the Back, Sprains, Bruises, and all cases where external remedies are applicable, it is very successfully used. It is equally good for man or beast, and can be given to animals internally for Colic or Cholera. All families should keep it on hand.

Abrams' Tetter and Ringworm Ointment.

A CERTAIN CURE for Ringworm, Tetter, Itch, etc.

Brodie's Vegetable Liver Pills,
Hutton's Worm Candy,
Creole Hair Oil,
Quinidine Oleine Hair Tonic.

All of Ball & Lyons' well known Proprietary Medicines are owned and prepared solely by

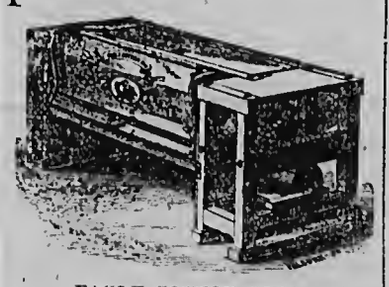
IMPROVED



EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

Splendid and Unparalleled

TRIUMPHS

OF THE

WHEELER & WILSON

Sewing Machine Co.,

NEW YORK,

OVER EIGHTY-ONE COMPETITORS,

AT THE

World's Exposition, Vienna, 1873,

ETC., ETC.,

1. The Knight's Cross of the Imperial Order of "Francis Joseph," conferred by his apostolic majesty the Emperor of Austria upon the Hon. Nathaniel Wheeler, President of the Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine Company, as the founder and builder of Sewing Machine industry.
2. The Grand Diploma of Honor, recommended by the International Jury for this Sewing Machine Company only, for their important contributions to the material and social welfare of mankind.
3. The Grand Medal for Progress, awarded for their New No. 6 Sewing Machine, being for progress made since the Paris Exposition of 1867, at which the only Gold Medal for Sewing Machines was awarded to this Company. Hence the Vienna award marks progress not from a low level or inferior medal, but from a Gold Medal, the highest award made at Paris.
4. The Grand Medal for Merit, for the development of needle industry, and excellence and superiority of manufactured samples exhibited.
5. A Grand Medal for Merit, for excellence and superiority of cabinet work, the only award of the kind in this section.
6. Medals for Several Co-Operators of the Wheeler & Wilson Company for superior ability.
7. The Official Report, published by the General Direction of the Vienna Exposition, signalizes the supremacy of the Wheeler & Wilson Company for quantity and quality of manufacture, and position in the Sewing Machine business, as follows:

OFFICIAL REPORT, VIENNA EXPOSITION, SEWING MACHINES, ETC.

(GROUP 13, SEC. 2, II.)

"The greatest Sewing Machine Manufactory in the world is that of Wheeler & Wilson, New York, which alone has brought already over nine hundred thousand of their Sewing Machines into practical use. The complete production of the parts by machinery is so regulated that each complete machine may be used as a sample for exhibition. This firm produces six hundred well-adjusted machines daily.

"The latest production of this firm, and which is the wonder of the Vienna Exposition, is their New No. 6 Sewing Machine. This universal machine sews the heaviest leather harness and the finest ganzes with a truly pearl stitch.

"Wheeler & Wilson have received the highest prizes at all World's Expositions, and at the Vienna Exposition were extraordinarily distinguished."

Further Distinguished Honors.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15, 1873.

THE GRAND MEDAL OF HONOR

OF THE

AMERICAN INSTITUTE, NEW YORK,

Was unanimously recommended by the Judges of Sewing Machines for

WHEELER & WILSON'S

NEW NO. 6 SEWING MACHINE

as being "a decided improvement over all other machines in the market," and which "must revolutionize certain branches of industry, especially in Shoe and Harness Manufacturing."

"BALTIMORE, MD., October 31, 1873.

"The Maryland Institute has awarded WHEELER & WILSON the GOLD MEDAL for their New No. 6 Sewing Machine. Other Sewing Machines received nothing."

"SAVANNAH, November 1, 1873.

"At the Georgia State Fair a SILVER MEDAL, the highest and only premium for Leather Stitching, was awarded to WHEELER & WILSON for saddles done on their New No. 6 Sewing Machines."

THE GREATEST

MEDICAL

DISCOVERY

OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder-humor.) He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the Skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from short and fretful naps to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a fountain of blessing to your husband and household. In the more advanced stages of

Canker

it extends to the stomach, causing

Dyspepsia,

which is nothing but canker in the stomach; then to the intestines and

Kidneys,

creating a sinking, gone feeling, and an indifference even to the cares of your family. Your stomach is your food distresses you, and you can only take certain kinds, and even of that your system does not get half the nourishment it contains, as the acrimonious fluid of the canker eats it up; then your complexion loses its bloom and becomes sallow or greenish, and your best day is gone. For want of nourishment your system becomes loose and flabby, and the fibers of your body become relaxed. Then follow a train of diseases which the Medical Discovery is peculiarly adapted to

Raw and Inflamed,

Cure:

Palpitation of the heart, pain in the side, weakness of the spine and small of the back, pain of the hip-joint when you retire, irregularity of the bowels, and also that most excruciating of diseases,

The Piles.

How many thousands of poor women are suffering from this disease and pining away a miserable life, and their next-door neighbor does not know the cause. I wish to impress on your mind that good old proverb: "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." In you have both the preventive and the cure, with this great and good quality: that it will never, under any circumstances, do you any injury.

No change of diet is ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one tablespoonful per day; children over ten years, dessertspoonful; children from five to eight years, teaspoonful. A no directions can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day. Yours truly,

DONALD KENNEDY.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE BEST ADVICE THAT CAN BE given to persons suffering from

DYSPEPSIA, BILIOUS COMPLAINTS,

CONSTIPATION, COLIC, SICK HEADACHE,

Fever and Ague, Nervous Debility,

or of any disorder of the Stomach, Liver or Kidneys, is to tone, cleanse and regulate them by the use of

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills.

They act very mildly, yet thoroughly restore the functional action of the Digestive Organs and the intestines, and renovate the whole system, imparting a good appetite and healthy assimilation of food. They produce neither Nausea, Griping nor Debility, and may be taken at any time, without change of diet or occupation.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

Dr. Tutt's Hair Dye

possesses qualities that no other dye does. Its effect is instantaneous, and is so natural that it cannot be detected by the closest observer. Being harmless and easily applied, it is in general use among the fashionable Hair-Dressers in every large city in the United States.

A BABY INTERVIEWED.

TO A LITTLE ONE JUST A WEEK OLD.

Only a baby, 'thout any hair,
'Cept just a little, fine here and there.

Only a baby, name you have none,
Barefooted and dimpled, sweet little one.

Only a baby, teeth none at all;
What are you good for, only to squall?

Only a baby, just a week old;
What are you here for, you little scold?

BABY'S REPLY.

Only a baby! what should I be?
Less o' big folks has been little like me.

'Aint dot any hair? 'es I have, boo:
'Spose'n I haven't, dess it 'ood grow.

Not any teeth! wouldn't have one;
Don't dey my dinner by growling a bone.

What am I here for? 'at's pretty mean:
Who's dot a better right, 'at ever you seen?

What am I dood for, did you say?
Kiver so many good things, every day.

'Tourse I squall sometimes, sometimes I hawl;
Zey dassant spank me, 'cause I'se so small.

Only a baby! 'es, sir, 'at's so;
'N if you only could, you'd be one too.

'At's all I have to say; you're 'most too old:
Dess I det into bed, 'oos dettin' cold.

Life in a Tree.

BY C. S. PEASE.

"Wouldn't it be jolly fun, Mollie, if you and I could just go off and live in a tree, like birds?"

Four-year-old Mollie opened wide her blue eyes.

"But we couldn't, Tommy. Who'd be our mother and hear our prayers?"

"There! that's just like girls. Why don't you know birds don't have mothers and say prayers, as chillens do?"

Tommy's six years of observation carried conviction to the mind of his little sister. There was silence for a moment; then a grave doubt crept in, which found expression thus:

"But what 'ud we eat? Mary don't cook things for birds."

"Birds don't have to have things cooked for 'em. When they get hungry they just fly down and eat berries and things. I think it must be awful nice."

"Well, Tommy, let's try it. Mother won't be back in a good spell. Let's go off a good ways, so't nobody can find us, and live in a tree and eat berries always." Then, meditatively: "Berries are good, ain't they, Tommy?"

"I'll bet they are," enthusiastically. "And we'll get lots of them."

So off went our little adventurers, down through the back gate, across the meadow, where the tall grass almost covered their heads, bound for the woods beyond, where the prospect of life with the birds led them.

"Oh! dear me, this hay is awful to get through," groaned Mollie. "I wish we could just fly over it, don't you?"

"It isn't hay, it's grass," asserted the superior masculine wisdom. "And if we should try to fly over the meadow our folks would see us and call us back; and then we couldn't live in the tree, you see."

"Well, let's go on."

And on they went, though poor little Mollie lost her shoe in the mud, and got tangled in the long grass, and had to be helped out several times before they reached the edge of the woods.

At length the cool shade was reached, however, and then the bird-life began.

"Now, Tommy, if we're going to be birds, I s'pose we'll first have to chipper, like they do, and not talk any. Won't we?"

"Oh, fudge! We ain't going to be birds, but to just make believe we are, and to live like 'em and have fun, you know."

Little Mollie's inmost conviction, I fear, must have been that it had not been so vastly funny so far; but she said nothing.

"Now, then, Mollie, let's hunt us a place to live—a real nice shady tree."

So, hand in hand, they plodded through the woods, looking for a favorable spot.

"Here's a nice one. I'll go up first. Let's off with our shoes and stockings, though. You know we've got to have our toes to hang on with."

Mollie laughed. The idea was a new one to her, but novel and charming.

Up went Tommy, with all a boy's agility, and was soon perched on a nice stout limb.

"Now, then, Mollie, come on. I've got a perch picked out." But poor Mollie essayed the task in vain.

"I can't get up," was the pitiful reply, after a half dozen futile attempts.

"Oh, botheration! Glad I ain't a girl!" was the comforting crumb he threw her from his limb.

"I guess girls can't help being girls. I don't want to be one more'n you do," was the sobbing reply.

"Oh, well! Stop blubberin', and I'll come down and help you," was the very unbird-like rejoinder.

By dint of great exertion on the part of each, little Mollie soon reached the perch, and by the side of her brave bird brother "held on" with fingers and toes.

But the little bare feet were unused to the rough bark, and soon she ventured to change her position, when crash! down through the green leaves and waving boughs went the little form.

Even Tommy forgot his bird nature so far as to scream loudly as he saw his little sister's danger; but fortunately their perch was not a high one, and she was but little hurt. Tommy hastened from the tree to the rescue, but they were both soon laughing merrily over it.

"That's just the way little birds tumble around when they first begin to fly," suggested he. "I've seen 'em tumble out of the lilac bush enough to kill 'em. But it never seems to hurt 'em any.

"Hurrah! Let's up and try it again. It's awful jolly bein' a bird. Ain't it, sis?"

"Yes," was the dubious answer. "But I'm hungry. Ain't you, Tommy? I guess it makes little birds hungry to tumble out of trees. Don't it? Let's go and hunt some berries before we get up again."

"All right, Mollie. Here we go. I wonder where the berries are. But we'll find 'em. Come on."

And off went they. But the berries seemed only to exist in their imagination. None were found, and they both felt very, very hungry.

"Oh! dear," groaned Mollie, "I wish't I had a cookie. Don't you, Tommy?"

The "cookie" would have tasted very good indeed to Tommy just then; but the reply came out characteristic of boyhood.

"Oh, pshaw! Birds don't eat cookies."

"Well, chillens do; and I think it's better to be chillen 'n 'tis to be birds," was the positive reply. "Let's go home. I'm tired."

"I don't want to go home; but, if you're bound to, I suppose I'll have to. I ain't so sick of bein' a bird as that all comes to," replied Master Tommy with spirit, while in his inmost heart he was glad enough to go.

Home they started. But, alas! their wanderings in the woods had confused their little heads; and now, with the dark night coming down about them, the little ones found they were lost.

"Oh! dear, Tommy, I'm afraid. Ain't you?"

"No, Mollie, I ain't exactly afraid; but I didn't think about birds having to stay outdoors all night in the dark. I wish mother'd come."

"I'm so tired I can't walk another step," moaned Mollie.

"Well, you just lie down here on the moss and rest, and I'll sit and watch you," said the little brother, anxious now to make amends, as far as possible, for having led his little sister into trouble.

The dark night settled around them. The little girl, thoroughly disgusted with bird-life, tired and hungry, soon sobbed herself to sleep.

Quivering with fear at the slightest sound, the little brother sat beside her, holding her little hand in the dark. It seemed to him like ages before he heard some one shouting: "Tommy! Tommy!" And with a glad shout he answered: "Here we are, papa."

Little Mollie soon woke with the lights and voices, and was instantly nestled in papa's loving arms and being carried rapidly toward poor, distracted mamma, who was almost wild with anxiety about her little ones.

"I tell you, papa, birds don't have such awful jolly times, after all. Do they? Ain't it awful to live outdoors in the night?"

And as Mollie knelt to repeat her little prayer that night she prayed: "Please, God, don't ever let me be a bird any more; but just mamma's good little girl."—Independent.

A Lesson from a Bee.

"There's a bee hummin' in that clover-head yonder; you can't hear it when you're talkin'; but if you jest keep still a minute Uncle True made a little pause) you can hear it as plain as a church bell, and I think it's jest as purty a noise—leastways it tells me more."

"Indeed!" said I. "I should like to know what it tells you."

"Well, in the first place, it shows me that honey's to be got out o' all the flowers, even the leetlest and homeliest. The bee gets it in the onlikeliest places, you see; he don't turn up his nose at a mullein-stalk no more'n he does at a garden-pink; and I shouldn't wonder if the Lord had put just as much honey in one as t'other. But if he was a bee with an aristocratic turn o' mind, and wouldn't look for honey anywheres but in garden-pinks and damask-roses, it's my opinion that he'd go home to his hive empty-handed the biggest part o' the time. And I suppose the Lord has put about as much honey in one man's road as another's, if he only knew how to look for it, and didn't despise mullein-stalks.

"Then the bee shows me it's a man's business to hive up honey—not jest to go round amusin' himself with the flowers, and takin' only what tastes good and what he can eat at the time, but to store it up against the winter of old age and trouble. I mean the honey of wisdom, marm, that begins in the fear of God. And, besides all that, the bee shows me that a man should go to his honest day's work with a joyful spirit, singing and making melody in his heart, and not be agoin' round with a sour face and a grumblin' tongue and a cross-grained temper, jest as if he thought the Lord who made him didn't know what was good for him.

"But it's time for me to jog along, marm, for this old chair and I haven't been late to church since we took to goin' thar together, and we shouldn't like to begin now, though, to be sure, people that's got legs and horses to get 'em thar don't seem to mind being late much."—Without and Within.

THE BOOK OF THANKS.—"I feel so vexed and out of temper with Ben," cried Mark, "that I really must"—

"Do something in revenge?" inquired his cousin Cecilia.

"No; look over my book of thanks."

"What's that?" said Cecilia, as she saw him turning over the leaves of a copy-book, nearly full of writing, in a round text hand.

"Here it is," said Mark. Then he read aloud:

"'March 8—Ben lent me his hat.'

"Here again: 'January 4—When I lost my shilling Ben made it up to me kindly.' Well," observed the boy, turning down the leaf, "Ben is a good boy, after all."

"What do you note down in that book?" asked Cecilia, looking over his shoulder with some curiosity.

"All the kindnesses that are ever shown me; you would wonder how many there are. I find a great deal of good from marking them down. I do not forget them, as I might do if I only trusted to my memory, so I hope that I am not often ungrateful; and, when I am cross and out of temper, I almost always feel good-humored again if I only look over my book."

Farm, Garden and Household.

The Cracking of Fruit by Rain.

Almost every one has noticed that juicy fruits, such as plums, peaches, grapes, tomatoes, etc., will be cracked by a rain. The phenomenon has been of painfully frequent occurrence the past season, and the losses to some growers have on this account been heavy. The cracking has been explained in various ways, but we think it is properly attributed by Rossingnult to osmose. If a bladder filled with sirup be immersed in a vessel of water the water will, after awhile, become sweet; the sirup passes through the membrane of the bladder into the water, and correspondingly the water passes into the interior of the bladder. But this interchange is not an equal one; the lighter liquid—the water—passes in many times more rapidly than the heavier liquid—the sirup—passes out. The consequence will be that the bladder will be distended to its utmost, and at length burst. This is a general law, that where two liquids of unequal densities are separated by a membrane, whether animal or vegetable, they will interchange, the weaker liquid passing more rapidly than the denser one, and this will be kept up until the liquid upon both sides of the membrane is of the same density. A ripe tomato or plum may be considered in the condition of the bladder of sirup. The rich juices of the fruit correspond to the sirup, and the thin membrane which forms the skin of the fruit represents the bladder. When the ripe fruit is kept constantly wet with water by a rain osmose takes place, and the water passing through into the fruit distends the skin, which, not being very strong, is soon ruptured. If the fruit were to be surrounded by a liquid denser than its juices it would, instead of expanding and breaking, shrink, and the skin become shriveled. When strawberries or currants are sprinkled with sugar a sirup is soon formed by some of the juice of the fruit, and this being considerably denser than the juices of the berries they are soon flabby and shriveled.

THE Boston Journal of Chemistry gives the following receipt for that beautiful and instructive parlor experiment known as imitation frost-crystals: Dissolve four hundred and fifty-six grains of nitrate of lead in six fluid ounces of water. If the solution is turbid filter through paper. Place the solution contained in a glass vessel on the table where it is intended to remain, and drop into it two hundred grains of sal-ammoniac—chloride of ammonium—in long, fibrous crystals. Soon small crystals of chloride of lead will form, and ascend through the denser liquid, presenting the appearance of an ascending snow-storm. When the bed is all precipitated the crystals will begin to descend as a genuine miniature snow-storm, forming grotesque masses resembling a winter's landscape. If the vessel containing the crystals is not disturbed, it often preserves its beauty for weeks.

SAVE THE LARGEST GOBBLER.—In selecting the male turkey to preserve for breeding purposes, the necessity of picking out the largest and most perfect, as regards form and vigor, may well be urged upon everybody who keeps this very profitable farm stock. Let it constantly be borne in mind that size is a great desideratum in a gobbler kept for breeding. We are aware that the American passion for size has sometimes operated to the detriment of poultry. But in turkeys size can be secured without danger.—William Clift, in Poultry World.

HOW MR. BEEKMAN FEEDS HIS COWS IN WINTER.—His bill of fare for winter is twenty pounds of clover hay, one peck roots and four quarts fine corn meal. That will be the average; if any cow wishes more she gets it. A good cow always pays for what she eats.

CONSUMPTION.

the scourge of the human family, may in its early stages be promptly arrested and permanently cured.

RAVENSWOOD, W. Va., Oct. 2d, 1872.

DR. R. V. PIERCE—Sir: For the last year I have been using your Golden Medical Discovery. I owe my life to it, having been afflicted for years. Did not use it but a short time before I was benefited; at that time I was very bad; not able to sit up much, was suffering greatly with my throat, was getting blind, had a dry cough, and much pain in my lungs. I have used twelve bottles of the Discovery and am almost well

KATE T. WARDNER.

A son of Mr. J. H. Mosack, of Chatham Four Corners, New York, has been cured of Consumption by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. So says Mr. C. B. Caulfield, editor of the Goldsboro Courier.

S. R. Egbar, druggist, of West Union, Ohio, writes to state that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has effected a wonderful cure of Consumption in his neighborhood.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

JUSTLY CELEBRATED.

THE DIAMOND COTTON CHOPPER AND CULTIVATOR.
THE GREATEST LABOR-SAVER OF the AGE; with ONE MAN and ONE HORSE does the work of from SIX to TWELVE men and from TWO to FOUR horses. It CHOPS and HARS both sides, WEEDS and DRIFTS the cotton at one operation. After which it is converted into a most excellent CULTIVATOR, for use how on the row throughout the season. This machine has been tested upon a growing crop, and proved a thorough, practical SUCCESS. It bears the highest TESTIMONIALS from our best cotton planters. It will soon become as indispensable to the cotton planter as the cotton gin or press. It has taken the grand sweepstakes prize, the GOLD MEDAL, at the Georgia State Fair as the latest and most valuable improvement in agricultural implements, and the first premium wherever it has been exhibited. Active and reliable AGENTS are wanted in every town and county, to whom a liberal discount will be made. Applications for agencies should be made without delay. Retail price of machine, with attachments, $35 and freight. A most excellent COTTON PLANTER and GUANO DISTRIBUTOR has been added to the machine. Price, $12 50 extra. AGENTS WANTED TO ENGAGE IN A permanent, lucrative and respectable business. None but energetic and responsible persons need apply. A. COYLE, oc21 6m 419 North Sixth street, St. Louis, Mo.

FROM A RECENT ANALYSIS BY Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Yale College, the following table will show the chemical composition of YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN:

Albuminoids	12.45	Sugar	13.06
Gum	5.21	Starch	55.62
Fat	8.59	Cellulose	2.95
Ash	2.12

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, gluten, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. "These," says Youmans, "are the flesh-forming principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable to all requiring a highly nutritious and at the same time easily assimilated diet, and hence is used as an article of daily consumption in climates which occasion rapid waste of the system. "Almost all Asiatics, Africans and (aboriginal) Americans use it as their chief nourishment."—Louis Figuier, in his work on the Vegetable World.

In Hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN all the nutritive qualities of the grain are preserved. The grain is cut from the ear and placed in tin canisters with the rich juices (or milk) which exude from it, and is then sealed air-tight and the canister subjected to steam heat, which coagulates the albumen. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by this that all the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and the most nourishing article of food in the domain of nature placed within the reach of all.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

The Spring session of this widely-known and popular institution begins on the Twenty-ninth of JANUARY next, and closes on the Seventeenth of June, which is Commencement day. In view of the present financial depression we now make this liberal offer:

FOR ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS, paid in advance, we will give, for one entire session of twenty weeks, to any student in the Collegiate, Scientific or Business course, his board at the Byars House (now reduced to $10 per month,) tuition, fuel, room-rent, washing, library and contingent fees. In the Preparatory Department the charges will be even less. Board at the Fulton House and in private families may be obtained at moderate though at somewhat more advanced rates. The advantages now offered here to those seeking thorough collegiate training and culture were never excelled in our previous history, as those best acquainted with the school will testify. If you desire more information write to

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales...	22,005
Lake		42
Tennessee		3,887
Arkansas		3,018
Mobile		1,929
Texas		167
Total		31,676

On Saturday the market opened with an active demand, and although many factors were more stringent in their pretensions and the movement was checked by light supplies of the better qualities, yet 3,500 bales changed hands during the morning at very full prices, after which the movement exhibited still more activity and the sales summed up 8,800 bales, mostly at an advance of ⅛@¼c. Low ordinary sold at 9c., ordinary at 11c., strict ordinary at 12c., good ordinary at 13⅛@13⅜c., good ordinary to strict good ordinary at 14c., strict good ordinary at 14⅛@14⅜c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 14⅝c., low middling at 14⅞@15⅛c., strict low middling at 15⅛@15⅜c., and middling at 15⅝@15¾c. The upward tendency of prices was stimulated by an improvement of 4-10 per cent. in sterling exchange. On Monday the market opened with an active and general demand, but, owing to the light supplies of the better qualities, and the stringent pretensions of factors, many of whom asked ⅛@¼c., and even ½c. above Saturday's figures, the sales during the morning were of only moderate extent, after which factors met the demand more freely, but still asked an advance of ⅛@¼c., and the movement became quite lively, resulting in sales of 7,650 bales, partly at previous rates and partly at an irregular improvement of ⅛@¼c. On Tuesday, owing to the general observance of the holiday, but few factors were ready to offer their stocks, and only five or six brokers were looking around to complete their orders. The sales were consequently confined to 550 bales, at prices indicating no variation.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,000 bales, against 27,000 for the corresponding time last week and 20,800 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 928,413 bales, against 791,627 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 327,350 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 14,820 to Great Britain, and of 59,164 to France, and a decrease of 16,394 to other foreign ports. VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1874. NO. 9.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—At noon today Delmonico, who will dispense James Gordon Beunett's $35,000 contribution to the poor, will open four soup houses in different parts of the city.

WORCESTER, MASS., Feb. 19.—Stephen and Abbie Kelley Foster, with Miss Sarah Wall and Miss Marietta Flag, refused to pay their taxes because ladies cannot vote. Their property is advertised for sale to-morrow.

A convention to protest against the law is in session here to-day. The Smith sisters, of Glastenbury, were present this morning and made addresses.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—General Louis T. Wigfall, of Texas, is dead.

Admiral Davis to-day succeeded Admiral Sands as superintendent of the Naval Observatory. Admiral Sands retired under the longevity act.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—Late advices from Yeddo, Japan, state that political disturbances are apprehended in Japan.

Minister Iwakura has tendered his resignation, but the Mikado refuses to accept it.

The people clamor for war against the Coreans; this or a civil war is inevitable.

Nagasaki, Japan, advices state that a serious insurrection has broken out in the district of Fizen. The telegraph lines have been destroyed.

It is said three thousand women in this city have offered their services since Sunday to conductors of the Union Temperance Prayer Meeting to fight against king alcohol.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—The war upon liquor dealers appears to be taken up by Trinity Church. Many old members, especially women, have remonstrated with trustees against letting property of the church for the sale of intoxicating beverages, and it has been decided that in future the property shall not be let for such purposes, and as fast as present leases expire holders engaged in objectionable business must vacate. Under this rule about forty dealers, some of them keeping well-known places, will be constrained to retire on the first of May.

It is also stated that lady members of the Methodist Episcopal Church are making inquiries to ascertain if any members of the church own houses used for the sale of liquor, gambling or more nefarious purposes, that a change may be effected.

Advices by steamer Ontario from Buenos Ayres says Asiatic cholera is raging there with intensity, claiming from thirty to forty victims per day.

GALVESTON, Feb. 21.—The funeral of the late General Louis T. Wigfall was largely attended this evening. The service took place at the Episcopal church. The surviving members of the First Texas (Hood's) Brigade, of which General Wigfall was first commander, attended as mourners. The Galveston Artillery Company and Washington Guards formed a military escort, accompanying the remains to the cemetery.

OMAHA, Feb. 23.—Generals Sheridan and Ord, with escort, left Cheyenne this morning for Fort Laramie. Troops left Cheyenne to-day. Weather at Cheyenne very cold, with three inches of snow. Information received from Laramie says it is reported there the Cheyennes are debating whether to stay on their reservation or go south and keep out of trouble. It is thought they will not coalesce with hostile tribes. Many Indians continue to go north for the purpose of joining war parties. Crazy Horse's band has declared for war. Employes at agencies at Red Cloud and Whetstone are apprehensive of trouble.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Feb. 24.—A State temperance mass meeting convention assembled in the City Hall this evening. About one hundred delegates, from all sections of Ohio, were present. Dio Lewis presided. On invitation, about fifty ladies from various towns that have been engaged in the crusade took seats on the platform. J. C. Van Pelt, of New Vienna, known as a reformed saloon-keeper, made a few remarks that were not very forcible or correct.

Short speeches were also made by Mrs. Timmons, of Clarksburg, and Mrs. Laura Findlay, of Xenia.

A telegram from Lancaster, announcing that one thousand women were out on the war path, was received with cheers.

A letter was read from Mrs. W. J. Reese, of Lancaster, sister of General and Senator Sherman, expressing warm sympathy with the movement.

A State bureau, through which speakers and organizers may be obtained for work in all parts of the State, was organized.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 24.—No trains have arrived here on the Memphis and Charleston railroad since Saturday, owing to heavy rains. The Mississippi Central is badly washed north of Grenada. A number of excursionists from the New Orleans carnival are here en route North, being unable to get beyond Grenada by the Mississippi Central.

A number of saloon-keepers have received postal cards signed "committee," asking them to quit the "devil-dealing business," and saying that in the event of a refusal they will be visited and prayed for.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—A correspondent of the Standard, on the Gold Coast, writes that a treaty of peace has been signed by General Sir Garnett Woolsley and the King of Ashantee.

A special to the Times from Calcutta says: Two hundred and eighty thousand persons are distressed from want of food in the districts of Terhoot and Boglipoor, presidency of Bengal.

The same dispatch says that but for the aid furnished by the government five hundred thousand persons would perish.

Sir Charles Sheerlo Brooks, famous English novelist and dramatic author, is dead.

All Along the Line.

The Conferences patronizing the Publishing House at the New Orleans Depot, having held most of their sessions in mid-winter, the preachers are just now beginning to feel settled in their new fields of labor, and we anticipate a liberal response to the proposition of the book agent.

The following are the names entered upon the list at the New Orleans agency, not heretofore reported:

Trinity Conference.—S. J. Hawkins, L. F. Palmer, W. F. Easterling, E. T. Bates, Charles E. Lamb.

Little Rock Conference.—A. R. Winfield.

Mississippi Conference.—Robert B. Downer, W. E. Ballard, C. G. Andrews, W. B. Lewis, B. T. Pearson.

Texas Conference.—J. S. Clower.

Louisiana Conference.—C. R. Godfrey, H. G. Hocutt, J. D. Harper, J. S. White.

East Texas Conference.—W. N. Bonner, E. P. Rogers.

Northwest Texas Conference.—E. A. Bailey, J. S. Davis, R. B. Womack, F. O. Dannelly, Thomas Stanford.

West Texas Conference.—John W. DeVilbiss, Thomas R. Atkins.

North Mississippi Conference.—W. S. Ashford.

Alabama Conference.—William M. Winn.

ROBERT J. HARP, Agent.

The following is from the Nashville Christian Advocate of February 21:

A presiding elder writes us: "I am working for the sale of books all over my district. I think we will come near averaging the $100 to each charge in the district. I take with me a catalogue, and when I get a person to agree to take a book, or some books, I give the name and amount to the preacher in whose charge the party lives. I think I can by this means accomplish more for the sale of books in the district than to make orders myself."

The above may answer well in some places, but, as a general thing, we would prefer that the presiding elder sell the $100 worth.

Memphis Conference.—R. L. West, David Leith, J. M. Maxwell, F. B. Davis, H. B. Avery.

Holston Conference.—William S. Brown, T. F. Smyth.

North Mississippi Conference.—T. P. Ramsey, W. L. Peebles, B. H. Bounds, W. Ira Smith, W. D. Matthews, J. M. Mitchell.

Tennessee Conference.—Wellboru Mooney, S. A. Ellis.

North Carolina Conference.—W. B. Maness, S. V. Hoyle, G. W. Ivy, F. D. Swindell.

South Carolina Conference.—A. Nettles, J. M. Boyd, G. T. Harmon, C. C. Fishburn.

North Alabama Conference.—T. P. Roberts, C. L. Dobbs, W. T. Pattillo.

Alabama Conference.—A. M. Jones, J. M. Johnston, R. F. Perdue.

Virginia Conference.—W. E. Judkins.

Kentucky Conference.—S. W. Speer, George W. Smith.

Louisville Conference.—F. M. Rose, W. Alexander, G. W. Young.

Western Virginia Conference.—C. W. Shearer.

St. Louis Conference.—John C. Duncan.

Little Rock Conference.—W. R. Gardner, I. Z. T. Morris, A. D. Jenkins.

Northwest Texas Conference.—S. D. Akin.

East Texas Conference.—Samuel Weaver, J. C. Burgamy.

Pacific Conference.—J. H. Neal.

Columbia Conference.—E. G. Michael.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

MR. SPURGEON on the last New Year's eve introduced the Methodist watch-night services with success at his Metropolitan Tabernacle in London. About six thousand persons assembled. Mr. Spurgeon preached from the parable of the "Ten Virgins," and at five minutes from midnight bade them repair to the throne of grace, and in silent prayer beseech the Almighty to bless them with a rich and special blessing in the new year on which they were about to enter. An impressive silence fell upon the assembled multitude, and as the last stroke of twelve sounded Mr. Spurgeon advanced to the rails, and gave out the hymn, "I raise God, from whom all blessings flow." A benediction followed, and all was wound up by the pastor in his own cheerful tones exclaiming: "I wish you all a happy New Year, my friends." The response that came from the rejoicing thousands was something to be remembered: "The same to you."

King and Priest in Germany.

In a long and ably-written letter published in the Watchman and Wesleyan Advertiser, the Rev. William Arthur deals with the conflict between king and priest in Germany. Archbishop Manning declared that "the Falk laws are the Tudor laws," and that "the Catholics of Germany are simply refusing a Protestant reformation." A person in the position of Dr. Manning may be excused for being over-zealous. He is a pervert from Protestantism; he was very active and very anxious about the Vatican council and its definition; and he expects yet higher honors in the church. Under these circumstances it is only natural that he should stand out the champion of his new faith, and write severely of the Protestant dynasty of Prussia. But there are people less pretentious, who know quite as much about the German question, and who will defend Prince Bismarck and his ecclesiastical laws, which were absolutely necessary after the change which was made in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church. In a few days a great public meeting will be held in London to express sympathy with the Prince. Similar meetings should be held in all the principal towns in England. Mr. Arthur's letter ought to be reprinted separately and scattered over Great Britain and the United States. If the "Falk laws are the Tudor laws," as Archbishop Manning asserted, they would cut off all who acknowledge the spiritual supremacy of the Pope from the endowment and status of an established church; they would require solemn renunciation of the authority of his holiness as a condition of national privileges; they would appoint a reformed book of prayer and enforce worship in the vulgar tongue; they would proscribe and denounce many of the cherished doctrines of the Roman Catholics; and they would hand over all cathedrals and churches to those who conform to the articles and offices of religion specified by law, and turn all others out, laying them under exceptional disabilities, civil and religious. All these changes, Mr. Arthur asserts, lie within the scope of Dr. Manning's statement; but nothing of the kind has occurred in Prussia. We quote from Mr. Arthur: "The disciples of the new Vatican faith in an infallible man, and the old Roman faith in an infallible church, are both accepted as established churches. So far from the Prussian government having made haste to disestablish, disendow and proscribe the new form of Romanism, or to shackle its priests in their spiritual functions, it long left it in doubt whether it was prepared or not to protect its own subjects in the enjoyment of official and civil rights, acquired as adherents of the old faith against the persecutions of the new. It delayed so long, indeed, as to incur many reproaches, because the multitude whose conscience rebelled against the change of belief submitted from fear of the results of protest. Only when forced by conflict of authorities did government interfere." This government which, we are told, is never done persecuting the Roman Catholics, never attempted to reform that church; never prescribed any form of faith for it. All it is doing is simply to define the relations between Church and State, and to shield its subjects from the intolerance of ecclesiastics. It has taken to itself power to expel the Jesuits, to whom it was formerly friendly; but, as Mr. Arthur properly observes, it is justified in so doing "on the ground that the freedom enjoyed by the Jesuits had been long, and was being habitually used to break up the country again into detached States, and expose it once more to conquest by France. Of this proof runs over, and if Dr. Manning challenges it he has only to read clerical journals, without looking at one word written by Protestants. The words of Bamberger in the Reichstag briefly express what every German knows as to that anti-national press: 'In Poland it is anti-German Polish; in Alsace, anti-German French; in Austria and Bohemia, anti-German Czech; in the Tyrol, anti-German Italian; in presence of German interests, always something else.'" Yet Prince Bismarck is called a persecutor because he tries to combat this anti-German power which drove France into war and destruction, and which seeks to destroy the unity of the empire. Bismarck is, forsooth, a persecutor, because he will not let the court in Rome rule the court in Berlin, and the Pope dictate terms to the Emperor. He is very harsh for attempting to control the education of the country, and take the power over the schools out of the hands of the priests; but he was forced to take this step also when he found that in the schools the Roman Catholic children were taught to be disloyal to the State. The proofs of the disloyalty of the ecclesiastics were abundant before the State interfered with the schools. The church is not forbidden to accept any existing article of faith, or to hold that the Pope has authority to issue new ones next week; it is not hindered from sending temporal gifts and receiving spiritual ones in return. The only thing the Emperor and his government do is, as Mr. Arthur puts it, to "permit Prussian subjects to appeal to Prussian law when a foreign power attempts to deprive them of office in a national establishment, or of the civil and social rights connected with membership in it." The authorities in Berlin said to the authorities at the Vatican that they would protect from injury any Roman Catholic who did not choose to learn the new catechism or accept the new doctrine of the Pope's infallibility. The syllabus had fixed the relations of Church and State on a basis which the Emperor and his government could not accept, and it was the revived pretensions of the papacy which rendered necessary the new ecclesiastical laws of Prussia. Mr. Arthur says that the Vatican decrees "were in effect that, whenever civil authorities differed from those of the church, the ultimate decision rested with the latter. That, in fact, obeying the Pope rather than the King is obeying God rather than man. This assumption underlies the whole of the Jesuit writing and reasoning of late years. In some Catholic countries of Germany greater precautions against encroachments were taken in previously existing laws than in Prussia." The Prussian government was liberal in its dealings with the Roman Catholics previously to the Vatican definition; but when that definition made the ecclesiastics supreme, when the agents of the Pope ceased to recognize the rights of the State, it was time for the State to interfere to protect itself. This is all that Prince Bismarck has done, and he has the sympathy of Europe for doing it. He has simply said that if there is to be supreme power in Prussia it must be in the hands of the Emperor and his government, who are responsible for the protection of Prussian subjects, and who only have the right to make laws for that purpose. On all these points the argument of Mr. Arthur is very forcible, and it would be well to have his letter in the hands of every man in the United Kingdom. It puts the conflict in its true light, and demonstrates that Prince Bismarck is protecting the State, not persecuting any of its subjects. OBSERVER.

I Bring to Thee.

The following verses were read by Richard Jones to his class some two years before his death. A brother who obtained a copy of them at the time supposes that Bro. Jones was the author of them. They certainly express sentiments which were often in his prayers and religious addresses.

I bring my sins to thee,
The sins I cannot count,
That all may cleansed be
In thy once open fount.
I bring them, Savior, all to thee,
The burden is too great for me.

My heart to thee I bring,
The heart I cannot read,
A faithless, wandering thing,
An evil heart indeed.
I bring it, Savior, now to thee,
That fix'd and faithful it may be.

To thee I bring my care,
The care I cannot flee,
Thou will not only share,
But take it all from me.
A living Savior, now to thee
I bring the load that wearies me.

I bring my grief to thee,
The grief I cannot tell,
No words shall needed be,
Thou knowest it all so well.
I bring the sorrow laid on me,
A suffering Savior, all to thee.

D., The Gilded Age, The International Review; Record of Progress—Tax Exemption Chronology, A Note, Church Home, Social Science, The Quarrel at Rugby, The Princess Mary Villages; Musical Review.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for March is splendidly illustrated. Table of contents: The Great South; Among the Mountains in Western North Carolina; The Flower of Love Lies Bleeding; The Credit Mobilier; To Christine Nilsson; Following Footsteps; "Ajeliak Allah," or The Women of the Arabs; Agassiz; The Heiress of Washington; Gabrielle; Katherine Earle; The Tachypomp; Earthen Pitchers; The Autobiography of an Atheist; A Dream Story; Topics of the Time; The Old Cabinet; Home and Society; Culture and Progress; Nature and Science; Etchings.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the New York Tribune Extra, pamphlet form, containing Prof. Proctor's astronomical lectures, recently delivered in New York, and Prof. Agassiz's lectures at Penikese. The Tribune is doing a valuable service for the country in furnishing these lectures in a cheap and convenient form for general circulation.

SCHEM'S STATISTICS OF THE WORLD is a semi-annual publication. G. J. Moulton, publisher, New York. Price, fifty cents. We have received the November number. It is a valuable work, and contains the latest and most reliable statistics of all countries and on all important subjects.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for February has a fine table of contents. We note especially: Rejoicing in Hope; Principal Forbes, of St. Andrew's; The Poetical Books of the Old Testament; Bible Synonyms.

GOOD WORDS for February has: My Mother and I, The Tree of Knowledge, The Healing of Malchus' Ear, The Vision of St. John in Patmos, Seven Aspects of Christian Character, and other capital articles.

APPLETON'S JOURNAL, February 21, is finely illustrated, and contains the usual amount of choice reading matter.

The New Movement.—Women and Whisky.

Our readers will find in the news columns of the ADVOCATE the latest developments of this rather singular movement. The Independent thus explains and approves:

The Ohio temperance revival has come to be no obscure or local movement. It is spreading rapidly all over that State, into Indiana, and has made the leap to Massachusetts. We will give its characteristics.

Perhaps most prominent of all is the fact that it is a woman's war. The men keep mainly in the background. The women take the advantage of their sex to do what men could not do. A crowd of men going to a saloon to interfere with its business would be met with cudgels or bullets, and would think they had no reason to complain. The women, trusting partly in masculine forbearance, partly in their knowledge that the men in the community sustain them and would avenge any insult, and partly in God, we suppose, enter the rumseller's saloon, and sit down till he agrees to leave the business.

The next feature is that it takes a religious form. They do not merely urge the dramseller to give up his trade; they pray and sing, and sing and pray till he consents. They are absolutely certain, with all the certainty of the highest faith or fanaticism, that the Lord is on their side, and then they keep up their praying till the Lord hears them. Meanwhile they take the means to answer their own prayer. They stop the trade. They occupy the premises and by every means but violence prevent sales. Even if their prayers were to fail, their persistent interference with the business would be enough to drive any money-loving man out of it. The class that buys whisky does not feel attracted to a prayer meeting. It is not their style. Meanwhile the praying and singing go on day after day on the very premises, or in a booth opposite the door, until the worn-out vender yields.

Is it wise? On the whole, yes. We believe utterly in prayer; but we are sure that a considerable element besides prayer enters into the success of this movement, as it is right that it should. The only danger for it that we fear is that it will give the opportunity to ridicule religion; but we would a thousandfold rather see religion ridiculed for uncouth ways of doing good than ignored because it does no good at all. Religiously it is a favorable sign when Christians take hold earnestly of the problem of doing good or crushing evil; and if it takes them into a spot where the associations are discordant, where oaths and ribald abuse meet them, and where their skirts are spattered with the loathsome filth of a bar-room floor, all that is a mere matter of taste, and in the presence of a principle is not worth considering.

The Central Christian Advocate, St. Louis, speaks of its origin and plan as follows:

It had its origin in Hillsboro, Ohio, beginning on the advice of Dr. Dio Lewis, of Boston, that the women would do well to organize a temperance league, and devote themselves to personal efforts for the suppression of the liquor traffic. Dr. Lewis says, in a letter to the Cincinnati Commercial: "They—the rumsellers—are not the moral monsters temperance people represent, but good-hearted fellows generally, who are engaged in a money-making business against which their neighbors have made no earnest protest." So the plan is for a committee of the league to wait upon the liquor seller, state the injury that arises from the traffic, and beg him, in the interest of humanity, to give up the business. If he hesitates, the women engage in prayer in the saloon; or, in some instances, while the committee plead within the league remain without praying. At the same time often a prayer meeting is held in one of the churches, in which all, men and women, who favor temperance, engage.

A writer in the Cincinnati Gazette describes a scene in Hillsboro, where the movement began:

"Turning a corner on last Saturday forenoon, I came unexpectedly upon some fifty women kneeling on the pavement and stone steps before this store. A daughter of a former governor of Ohio was leading in prayer. Surrounding her were the mothers, wives and daughters of former Congressmen and legislators, of our lawyers, physicians, bankers, ministers, leading business men of all kinds. Indeed there were gathered there representatives from nearly every household of the town. The day was bitterly cold. A piercing north wind swept the streets, piercing us all to the bone. The plaintive, tender, earnest tones of that pleading wife and mother arose on the blast, and were carried to every heart within their reach. Passers-by uncovered their heads, for the place whereon they trod was holy ground. The eyes of hardened men filled with tears, and many turned away, saying they could not bear to look on such a sight. Then the voice of prayer was hushed, the women arose and began to sing softly a sweet hymn—some old, familiar words and tune—such as our mothers sang to us in childhood's days. We thought: Can mortal man resist such efforts? The effect upon the spectators is indescribable. No sneer is heard, scarcely a light word is spoken. The spirit of devotion is abroad, and those who would scorn to pray themselves, yet feel that here is something which they must at least respect. Many a 'God bless them' falls from lips accustomed to use the name of the Deity only in blasphemy."

From the Western Christian Advocate, published at Cincinnati, we gather the following concerning details and results:

In the brief space allotted we can hardly go into the details of this great popular uprising. It is only possible to give a summary of results as they are apparent at the present writing. In short, then, the Washington Courthouse plan, so called, has been begun in probably twenty-five towns in Ohio and Indiana, of from one to five thousand inhabitants. One or two attempts to inaugurate it in the larger cities, like Dayton and Springfield, have thus far proved unsuccessful. In these twenty-five places it is probable that from seventy-five to a hundred saloons have been closed. The patronage of the other saloons in the same places has no doubt been diminished fifty per cent. under the influence of the popular excitement, and a general depression given to the whisky business throughout the State, which will not encourage any new enterprises in that direction. The wholesale liquor trade in this city has been a severe sufferer. Whisky already sold on time has been shipped back, and fresh sales materially curtailed. Add to all these results the awakening of popular sentiment, the thousands of signatures to the temperance pledge, and the influence exerted upon thousands of individual cases, and we will have an approximate estimate of the good so far effected.

There have been some important developments of a legal nature since our last number, the final result of which will have a marked bearing upon the cause. In Hillsboro the leading women in the movement have been sued by one Dunn, a druggist, for damages to the amount of $10,000 for forced intrusion upon his business and defamation of character. The ladies sued belong to families of the most wealth and influence in the community. The highest legal talent has been secured on both sides, and the trial will be looked for with great interest by both parties. There is, however, no possible doubt as to the main result of the suit. We venture to say that no jury can be found in that whole section of the State, in the present condition of popular feeling, who would award damages to a liquor seller against women who were praying with him.

One of the most interesting cases developed by the campaign is that of J. C. Van Pelt, of New Vienna. After every other saloon-keeper in the place had surrendered, he obstinately held out. He used against the women the most awful threats, and treated them in the most shameful manner when in his saloon. On one occasion he stipulated that he should be allowed half the time to pray; and then, after each prayer by the ladies, he began, in a most blasphemous tirade, in the form of a mock prayer, until the blood of the listeners ran cold. But the ladies were never for a moment discouraged. Day after day they continued their persistent prayers and pleadings, and at last they were rewarded. One day last week he gave notice that he would meet all interested, before his saloon, at two o'clock, and give his final decision. The bells of the town rang out the news, and by the time appointed a large crowd had come together. He then came out, and in a trembling voice announced that he surrendered for the good of temperance, not because forced by the law, but through the labors of love of the women. His liquor was then rolled out by two ministers, and with the ax which he had used to terrify the women, he knocked in the heads of the barrels, and formally poured the contents into the street.

This was received with great rejoicing by the friends of temperance, who straightway made up a handsome purse for his benefit, and will endeavor to establish him in some respectable business. The influence, too, upon the workers in neighboring towns was very marked; and the laborers, as they heard the news, thanked God and took courage.

Space will not permit further quotations. We simply give the items as indicating a rather curious and perhaps most significant movement in the cause of temperance. It is at any rate a rare phenomenon, and an uprising, social, moral and religious, against an evil which has become intolerable. We are disposed to question the means and methods, but at the same time the women of the land have reason for a vigorous and forcible protest against the whisky sellers. It is a thing that should be branded as the vilest and most disreputable of pursuits. Whether the women are adopting the wisest measures or not, we might excuse even a madness and desperation on their part when we reflect that they are the most hapless and miserable victims of the liquor traffic.

DOCTOR OF SCIENCE is the new degree to be conferred by Harvard College. A nice letter of recommendation and a check for fifty dollars will not answer. In fact a thorough and satisfactory examination is requisite. So our incipient "scientists," who have long ago demolished the Bible and are busily engaged in demonstrating the evolution theory, will have to wait a little.

AN ADVENT MEDITATION.

BY REV. W. M. PENSHON, LL. D.

Then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh.—Luke xxi, 28.

When Winter, in his grasp of cold,
Does prostrate Nature captive hold;
When Death is on the blackened field,
And silver springs are "fountains sealed;"
Beneath the snow, like Etna's fire,
Burns in the Earth the strong desire,
When the stern months are past and gone,
To put her fair spring emeralds on.

So we, when in such weary time
Of languid work and lusty crime,
When Faith her prophet-gaze has lost,
And Love lies bound in prisoning frost,
And Hope—lone watcher on the hills—
Scant sustenance of dew distills,
Raise from the depths our troubled eye,
To feel: "Redemption draweth nigh."

When in the night some peril waits,
All mute—all silent at the gates—
Herald of darker vision near,
While loved ones toss on beds of fear,
Or rouse from feverish sleep appalled,
As if some ghostly summons called:
How the wild heart, with anguish torn,
Heeds not of rest, but prays for morn!

So we, round whom the shadows roll
In deeper midnight of the soul,
Oppressed, like slaves, with wrong and care,
Hardly redeemed from long despair,
For days without our sun or star,
Long for the morn's first streak afar,
And, while it yet is darkness, cry,
Rejoice: "Redemption draweth nigh."

When sailors, on the wintry main,
Have steered the sunward course in vain,
And the fierce winds and angry clouds
Do battle through the wailing shrouds,
They long for calm, but long the most,
Through the dim haze, to sight the coast,
Eager to rasp the shallows o'er,
And anchor by the golden shore.

So on the stormful sea our bark
Is launched, and labors through the dark.
Through weary years, in cs'm or gale,
We ply the oar or spread the sail,
Still pressing toward the shining strand,
Still listening for the cry of "Land,"
Upheld, as through the foam we ply,
By this: "Redemption draweth nigh."

Jesus, to thee our hearts we bring:
Thou art our shore—our morn—our spring!
Our home in thy strong love we find;
With thee no night our souls can blind;
With thee we tread upon the flowers
Of endless springs through endless hours.
Our all in all! Content we lie
Till thou shalt bring redemption nigh.

Letter from Mexico.

BY THE REV. J. T. DAVES.

CITY OF MEXICO, January 16, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: I have heretofore neglected to acknowledge my indebtedness to the Southwestern Bible Society. Rev. Dr. Doremus kindly presented me a Spanish Bible and a Spanish and English Testament. I thank him very sincerely. Speaking of Spanish Bibles reminds me of an interesting fact. It is this: Our mission here has been, so far, liberally supplied with Bibles and Testaments by the New York Bible Society. I believe the timely donation was secured, in part, through the kind offices of Rev. Dr. Deems. Bro. Hernandez makes good use of his books. A Bible is placed in each pew. Announcing his reading lessons distinctly, he quietly waits until each hearer finds them, and they follow him through the entire reading. It is a good idea. Would it not be well to practice the same rule in some of our home congregations? I could mention several good things resulting, in many instances, from such a rule.

Still again, while on this subject of Bibles in Spanish, I ought to refer to another interesting fact. The British and Foreign Bible Society has in this city a large Depository. Rev. William Parks, an English Congregational divine, is the efficient superintendent. The Bibles are furnished him from the Madrid office. In addition to the work being done much cheaper there than in London, the Madrid reprint forms a recommendation to these people. Your readers will understand that the British and Foreign Bible Society is, like the American, unsectarian. It has done and is still doing a grand and glorious work. It was founded in 1804, and expended the first year $3,455. Last year it expended $1,026,066.52. And in the sixty-nine years of existence it has expended $36,521,942.50. It has printed and circulated the Bible and portions of the Bible in 193 languages and dialects. It issued from the home and foreign depots last year 2,186,186 copies. Counting the working hours of each day, it issues 1,000 copies per hour. Mr. Parks is an earnest, efficient worker. He has now employed nine native colporteurs. He has been here about one year, and has issued about 14,000 copies of the word of God. His colporteurs not unfrequently act as pioneers. Going into towns and neighborhoods in advance, scattering the Bible here and there, they prepare the way for the missionary. In the old Tlascalan republic, where the flag of Cortez still waves from the church, and in advance of any missionary, a colporteur issued 829 copies. If there is any one point in Mexico where historic interest culminates it is just here. If Cortez had failed in his contest with the brave and determined Tlascalans, his name would have gone down to the ages covered with the stigma of a brainless adventurer. But, conquering here, he conquered Mexico, and high upon the roll of fame stands his name. May not a favorable augury be drawn from the success of this humble distributer of God's word in the same territory? May we not feel that in conquering Tlascala we conquer Mexico? "When the Bible comes in at the door, images fly out at the window." Yes, the precious word of God is pressing and kindly urging its way to the hearts of the people. The bonds are broken. The galling chains have fallen to the ground, and the millions may now read. Thank God.

"Salvation! let the echoing
The spacious earth around,
While all the armies of the sky
Conspire to raise the sound."

I had designed to give you a somewhat specific mention of missionary work in general. But I am still short of the necessary data as to names, dates, numbers, etc. But in the absence of anything in the way of particulars, I am ready to say this much just now, and repeat it in the future, as I believe I will be able to do, and that with an emphasis, that I regard this as the most important and interesting—so far as direct results can make it more important—mission ever inaugurated by the Christian church. And while I make the above observation as applying to the Christian world in general, there are special reasons why it is the most engaging field ever entered by the Methodist Episcopal Church South. But of these things more anon.

Allow me, please, to make this observation just here: that it is not the business of a missionary to write as a mere traveler. He is to write as a missionary. My personal friends may expect too much of detail—of descriptions of country, towns, cities, of mountains, lakes, temples, of styles, habits, fashions, etc. Five hundred letters would hardly suffice for these things. They must be relegated to their proper place. However, as I have hardly entered upon my work, and as this letter will be followed by one devoted entirely to missionary matters, I may please myself, and them too, by some account of this great city and its inhabitants.

Mexico is a noble, grand, solid old city. It is about 8,000 feet above the level of the sea—2,666 yards, or about one and a half miles. It looks solid. You feel its solidity. It seems to bid defiance to the overlooking, exhausted volcanoes. Historic interest, like a thick vail, hangs about it. Every stone in its houses and streets invites to a retrospection. You find yourself looking back, instead of to the present or future. I am now writing in a massive stone building, as large if not larger than the custom-house in your city, occupying space that in the time of Cortez formed a part of the famous lake upon which floated his rude vessels, though ministering abundantly to his success. The house fronts a broad, solid street that offered the conqueror a passage from the city on the memorable "dark night" when he and his little army came so near perishing. And, if I mistake not, it also stands near the place of the fatal bridge. It is true the city has in a great measure been modernized. Still there is an air of uniqueness and antiquity about it that ever invites a backward turn of the eye.

The streets generally are sufficiently wide, and run at right angles. They are roughly paved with stone. Each block forms a street—that is to say, that while the street traverses the length of the city, there are as many names or streets as there are blocks or squares. To the stranger this creates some confusion. Yet the difficulty in finding your whereabouts is not so great as you would imagine. The government plaza, the Alemeda, the surrounding mountains, some of them snow-capped, immense churches, etc., give you ample bearing-points. The sidewalks, with a few exceptions, are wider than those of Havana or Vera Cruz. They are paved with stones of variable lengths, thicknesses and shapes, and by no means closely joined together. There are but few decent sidewalks in Mexico. This unpleasant narrowness and roughness is supplemented by the fact that the masses have seemingly entered into a compact never to turn to the right or left, but straightforward and over you, if you contend for your privileges. I have frequently seen ladies forced to the street for a passage. In addition, and in the same spirit of indifference to other's comfort, men gather in knots on street corners, and force you either to crowd through or into the street and around them. Of course this applies to the baser sort. There are exceptions. But the lower order of females are devoid of common modesty, and are much like rough men in many particulars. This accounts, in some measure, for the things mentioned.

Like thousands of other things strongly indicative of non-progress, the streets are watered by hand, the water in many instances carried a considerable distance. The pavements and near surroundings are required, by police regulation, to be sprinkled by the occupant. This saves the city an item in the way of expense. The promenades, plazas, parks, carriage drives, etc., are all sprinkled by hand and at the public expense. It is a strange and somewhat amusing sight to see a man, bent half over, going at quarter speed, with a large watering-pot, a modern instrument, held in front of him, sprinkling a space the breadth of his body. So they go. So they do things here. An outlay of $50 would furnish a hand-sprinkler that would do the work, in half the time, of a dozen Mexicans. Even a street sprinkler sends thought backward. The image of the past would be complete if he would use a huge palm, banana or maguey leaf. But two dozen poor fellows would have no occupation. So the affair has another side. There are strict police prohibitions against throwing offal or debris of any kind in the streets. Public carts, as in modern cities, convey all this beyond the city limits. And yet the streets are not particularly cleanly in appearance.

There is an almost monotonous sameness in the houses. They are all built of stone, two and three stories high, thick walls, flat roofs, and wide courts open to the sky. Ordinarily the arrangement has an eye to comfort—that is to say, comfort after the Mexican or Spanish style. The kitchen not unfrequently is located near the front door. In our own house, for instance, the kitchen is on one and the bath-room on the other side of the main entrance, a narrow hall of the same length of the kitchen and bath-room. A Mexican kitchen, however, is a small affair compared with the home article. If I could spare the space, for the satisfaction of your lady readers, I would give a description of one, for in describing one you describe all. The houses are strongly built; walls from two to four feet thick. This is a country of earthquakes and civil revolutions. In the construction of their habitations both things are provided for. To outside doors and windows the shutters are double, sometimes treble. The roofs are made serviceable in many ways—for laundry purposes, flower gardens, the home of bulldogs, points of observation, etc. Roof privileges in reuting civic eudas—a house, apartments—makes quite an item in the expense. Some of these house-tops afford a fine view of the city and surrounding country. Mountains of variable heights and sizes rise up at every point of the compass. In regal magnificence above them all stands Popocatepetl and Iztaccihuatl, one the highest and the other the third highest point in North America. I had a fine view, yesterday, of these mountains, from the top of one of the highest houses in the city. They seemed almost in speaking distance. The snow, reaching far down their rugged sides, sparkled and glistened in the sunshine. In imagination I could discern flake by flake. Though softened and mellowed as the eye rested upon the towering peaks, I was surprised to learn that on an air line the nearest of these mountains was fifty miles distant.

House-rents are not considered high. There are a great many vacant, and yet it is difficult to get a home. The only advertisement of a house "to let" to be seen is a piece of paper fastened to the balcony railing. A porter will be found in charge, who will show the apartments, give price, etc. Having satisfied yourself in the house, you then seek the agent or owner, and the price will either be changed, or they are in treaty with another party, and you are put off from day to day. But all business transactions in this country are slow and uncertain in their movements. There is one thing lacking in all houses in this country—that is, fireplaces. I have seen but two since I have been in Mexico. They are much needed. Foreigners especially suffer with cold. Old residents say that this has been the coldest winter they have had in forty years. Fireplaces are a necessity, even in the absence of cold weather. The domestic circle loses its charm without them. The sun during the day is really oppressive. I suppose this fact renders the coolness of the nights more sensible.

There are no drays in Mexico. There are no hand-carts. Donkeys are innumerable, and huge Mexican carts past numbering. Packages of all kinds, trunks, pianos, furniture, everything, is carried on men's shoulders, or rather backs. A trunk of two or three hundred pounds weight, one of these fellows will take on his back and trot with it a mile—will gladly do it for twenty-five cents. That sum will furnish him pulque all day and half the night. In addition to these there is another class, water-carriers—men whose daily business is to furnish families with water, whose houses are not supplied. Like everything else, it is done in the hardest possible way. A broad leather band passes around the brow, swinging a stone vessel of four or five-gallon capacity to the back. Another band, passing immediately across the top of the head, holds a smaller vessel swinging in front. These men, in peculiar garb and gait, may be seen all over the city. The water is cold and pure. It is brought down from the mountains and conveyed to the city in immense stone aqueducts. The poor little donkey is by far the worst-abused class in Mexico, and, as is often the case, the most useful. It is wonderful to behold the burdens they carry. Droves pass our hotel daily. Sometimes they are almost literally covered up, head and tail. Stout men follow, punching, poking and belaboring them most unmercifully.

A hotel in Mexico is not a hotel at all. They consist only of furnished rooms, and the occupant takes his meals when and where he pleases. Usually there is a restaurant attached to the house, and by the same name. But, according to the American idea, they are all failures. I do not fancy the hotels of Mexico, nor do I like the restaurants. If one comes to Mexico for cheap living he will be wide of the mark. All imported goods are very high. Import duties are enormous. Importations into this consular district, a small territory comparatively, for 1872, were $14,000,000; import duties, $7,000,000. And so we pay here twenty-five cents for calico to be had in your city at twelve and a half cents. Other articles of foreign manufacture range as high; and, unfortunately for the consumer, articles of home production take coloring from importations. There are some things that have a fixed value. A good cigar can be had for two cents—very good for three cents. It is almost impossible to obtain a decent piece of native furniture, and yet it requires a little fortune to furnish a small house. Chinaware, table linens, cotton goods, are all high-priced. The housekeeper, for an outfit, pays just about one hundred per cent. over your prices. Meats are costly. Canvased ham, 37½ cents per pound; green beef, 18¾ cents per pound; coffee, 31¼ cents per pound, and this, too, in a coffee country.

There are no buggies in Mexico. I have seen but one modern buggy, and that was on the superannuated list. It looked lonely; seemed to feel its isolation; out of harmony with its surroundings. The display of carriages is fine. I did not see one in Vera Cruz. Here they swarm. The grades are quite manifest. You can also easily distinguish private "turnouts." Some of them are splendid. Occasionally a magnificent four-in-hand is to be seen. The horses usually are indifferent, small and of inferior blood. Mules, fine and well-grown, predominate. Coach fare is less than in New Orleans. From one point to another, direct, without regard to distance, provided it is less than half an hour's time, twenty-five cents; per hour, fifty cents. Compared with other things, this is quite reasonable.

Speaking of fixed values—precios fijos—I suppose the national drink and national dish may be especially included. Everybody drinks pulque and everybody eats beans. We have not tasted either as yet. The virtues of the first we do not propose to test; the second we may try. While drinking saloons, the crying evil of our own land, are few and far between, pulque shops abound. From all accounts Bishop Keener hit the truth exactly when he said "that pulque made a bad drunk." I have seen but few drunken men. They were certainly fine specimens, however. Well, just the drunkest men I ever saw. The American "dead drunk" would not compare with it. It was a doubly superlative drunk. Pulque shops have distinctive marks. They are easily discerned by their external features, as well as by the motley throngs of men, women and children that fill and hang about them.—Pulque is said to be but little stronger, if any, than ordinary sweet cider. The odor and taste are very offensive and repulsive at first. To become a user of pulque, therefore, requires an effort. This, however, is only in harmony with many other evils.

Beggars of all shapes, ages and sizes infest the city. They assume all possible positions—kneel down, lie down, sit down, stand, crawl, hobble, etc.; always the same bold, importunate, leering beggars, however. They are cunning as to time and place in their appeals to your sympathy. There is this difference between these and our own beggars: I have seen one beggar on Canal street receive more, in the course of one morning, than all the beggars in the City of Mexico in a week. They receive so little encouragement it is a wonder they do not desist and engage in honest toil.

Another serious annoyance is the system of pillage in a small way. The restaurant waiter, the hotel servant, the house servant, the carriage driver, each and all expect a douceur in addition to regular wages. If you should conveniently forget it, they boldly remind you of duty. It is not the amount so much as the reflection that you are being robbed by degrees with your eyes open.

This is a land of fruits, flowers and singing birds. In climate, soil, productions, "all save the spirit of man is divine." During the day the sun shines in the strength and vigor of advanced spring. At times it becomes oppressive. Flower merchants, men, women and children, squat on street corners, and with a dexterity and taste truly surprising arrange bouquets of beauty unsurpassed. All classes have a passion for flowers. It is one redeeming quality, at least. But it seems almost like desecration to see such people plucking and rudely handling and so heartlessly trafficking in these beautiful children of God.

I have not as yet had time to visit museums, academies and other public buildings. Nor have I had but one visit to the country. On the twelfth instant, a grand feast day, I visited the little town of Guadaloupe, and had a view of the wonderful virgin. With her history, and the superstitions gathering about it, I presume your readers are all familiar. These foolish things have in some measure been dissipated by the march of civilization and improvement. The railroad, passing over consecrated ground, and rudely handling and using consecrated stones, made a breach in priestly rule that will never be healed. The huge stone pillars, marking the resting-places, still stand, monuments of a fading superstition. Thousands of poor, deluded beings were wont to go on their knees, from Mexico to Guadaloupe, three miles. They were graciously permitted to rest at the designated places marked by these engraved pillars.

This letter has grown to an unpardonable length. And yet the hundredth part has not been told. Our hearts grow hungry for a hearing from our native land. Bishop Keener's letter of the second instant reached me only yesterday. That, of course, contained no news of Conferences, churches, etc. How I miss the weekly visits of the ADVOCATE! Please say to our personal friends: Write, write often. If we are to have letters only once in twenty days, let us have a good many. Especially do I ask the preachers and friends of my old district to write. They must not expect me to answer all, if any. In addition to the extra labor, postage in this country is quite an item—each half ounce to the United States costs thirty-five cents. It is hard to part with you. But I must say: Good-by, good-by. God bless you.

Castelar and Figueras.

An intelligent correspondent of the London Examiner gives a description of Castelar and Figueras. Both are gentlemen of unblemished reputation, but in their physical appearance and habits of life they are unlike. Castelar is a man of middle height, thick set and bald-headed, of affable manners, and who "seems always ready to deliver an oration." He goes into society a great deal. Figueras is tall and thin and gray-headed, and always goes to bed at nine o'clock in the evening and gets up at five o'clock in the morning. He is a man of weak health, and frequently spits blood when hard pressed by work. He is of that cast of character to which the late Mr. J. S. Mill belonged; personal grief intensely affects the whole of his being, and absorbs for a long time all other feelings and thoughts.

As to the relative ability of the two statesmen, he reverses the general estimate, saying: "Contrary to the general belief spread in England that Castelar was the man of the Republican party, I have every reason to believe that he was frequently but the mouthpiece of his friend Don Estanislao Figueras, a man of incomparably more knowledge, more statesman-like capacities, and a more practical turn of mind. But Senor Figueras was perfectly aware of the great oratorical gifts of his friend Don Emilio, and consequently when they sat together as deputies, whenever there was a necessity of mastering the Assembly of means of impassioned eloquence, Figueras pushed Castelar forward, the speeches often having been prepared in concert on the previous day. But the extempore retorts of a business-like nature, not necessarily implying much rhetoric, Figueras, as a rule, reserved to himself." Methodist.

THE John O'Groat Journal says: A clergyman resident in this county, while on his pastoral rounds a few days ago, met a tinker lad playing on the bagpipes. He listened with attention to the various airs played, and expressed his admiration of the excellent manner in which the music had been performed; but being apprehensive that the performer's musical talent had been cultivated at the expense of knowledge of a more momentous character, he asked him if he knew: "What is man's chief end?" The musician, after a pause, replied: "I dinna ken, I'm sure; but if ye'll whistle 't, I'll play 't!"

Obituaries.

DIED, in Union county, Arkansas, June 30, 1873, Mrs. SARAH POOLE, daughter of Sterling Johnson and consort of Dr. William H. Poole, aged seventy-nine years.

Sister Poole was a native of North Carolina, but moved to Perry county, Alabama, in 1819, where she lived many years, and from thence to Union county, Arkansas. She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South over fifty years, and her example as a Christian was full of vitality, speaking to all about her that there was a power in the Christian religion. In the notice we have before us of her death, from her son-in-law, Bro. S. L. Terry, though brief, giving an account of her life and death, he says: "She died as she had lived—a happy Christian. She was the mother of twelve children, eleven of whom had families. May they hold her life as a treasury of precept and example, and so, being influenced by the same, come, as she did, to a good old age, like a ripe shock of corn in his time." May Heaven's sanctifying grace rest upon the bereaved.

M. C. M.

DIED, at his residence in Scott county, Mississippi, on the twenty-fifth of January, 1874, JOHN E. GROGAN, in the sixty-second year of his age. He was married, July 15, 1840, to Miss Gordon. He joined the Protestant Methodist Church fifteen years ago, and was a faithful member up to the organic union. Since that time he has been a good and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Bro. Grogan lingered for some time before his death; but he bore his afflictions with great patience, and often spoke of his death with calmness. Bro. Grogan was blind for some time before he died, but under all his afflictions he was still calm and resigned to the will of God, and his faith was strong in the Lord. He has left a kind and religious wife and a large family of children to mourn his loss. The most of his children are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. May God bless the bereaved wife and children, and guide them through life by his Holy Spirit to the city above.

The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease,
And life's long warfare closed at last,
His soul is found in peace.

JOHN H. EVANS.

MARGARET SYBIL CLARKE, wife of Judge W. W. Campbell, was born in Madison parish, Louisiana, October 8, 1846, and died of typhoid pneumonia, after a long and painful illness, in Winnsboro, Franklin parish, Louisiana, February 2, 1874, aged twenty-seven years and four months.

How hushed is the once cheerful home! How cold and dark the hearthstone once brightened by her presence! Inexorable death has been there. A dark shadow has fallen across the threshold, and the warmth and brightness have departed. The tender husband is left desolate, and never more can her petted darling—a little girl one and a half years old—bask in a mother's smile or feel a mother's gentle caress. After four years of wedded happiness, the devoted wife, the tender mother, the kind friend has passed from our midst. The gentle tones are hushed, the bright smile gone, the busy hands are folded and the weary feet are at rest. She has crossed the dark river to join the glad throng above; and while we mourn our broken ties and shattered hopes, we ought to rejoice that she, at least, will grieve no more. For her death had no terrors, save that of separation from those she loved. Speaking of her approaching end, she said: "I am not afraid to die, for I have made my peace with God." About a week before she died she asked her husband to read the fifty-first Psalm for her, after which she spoke freely and cheerfully to him of her spiritual condition and approaching death. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South March 10, 1872, under the preaching of Rev. Joel T. Daves, and was baptized by him April 20, 1873, and was a consistent member until her death. Her remains were taken to Madison parish for interment, and now repose amid those of loved ones gone before.

C. M. RAMAGE.

JESSE C. BETHEA was born in Wilcox county, Alabama, May 19, 1852, and died October 16, 1873.

The subject of this article played his allotted part upon the stage of human life in the space of twenty-one years. What does this teach us? Reader, think. See if you can solve it. This is all you can learn: that life is uncertain, death is sure, and the things of eternity, who can tell? You can perhaps see from his entrance and exit that

"Blooming youth can be snatched away
By death's resistless hand," and that humanity can be cut short in the vigor of manhood, as well as in the winter of life. The old die not alone, but the young man and maiden are found in the pale procession. Would to God that those who read obituaries would notice facts like these. It would make more effectual the preaching of God's servants. This young man had voluntarily withdrawn from the Methodist Episcopal Church South (but I am informed he only intended it for a time.) That time never came; but his dying testimony was this: that the way was bright before him, and he was not only willing but anxious for his departure. When death was knocking for entrance he prayed himself and solicited the same from his father in his behalf. Thus the rose just opening to life was called hence by early doom. Permit me to speak of him as he moved among men. He was very open to conviction, was willing to acknowledge an error when committed, was accommodating to a fault, and was harmless and inoffensive to his neighbors. It was a pleasure for him to wait upon one who needed his assistance; and though his walk was an humble one, yet his face is missed in the church where he worshiped and the vicinity where he lived. To his family I would use the language of the apostle: "May these light afflictions, which endure but for a season, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." A.

DIED, in Boston, Texas, on the twenty-ninth of December, 1873, Mrs. PAULINE BOATNER CALLIHAM, wife of Judge N. Calliham. Dr. Mark Boatner, her father, moved to Clinton, Louisiana, many years ago, where he raised a family of five daughters. "The youngest and the loveliest" was Pauline. Many who see this can well remember the little fair-haired, blithesome girl, a very sunbeam in her father's household, and the pet of all who knew her.

"None knew her but to love her,
None named her but to praise."

The guileless, lovely child grew to maidenhood, none the less pure or loving; and when she gave her young heart away, and left for her far-off home, many were the regrets and tears of her childhood's associates. Long, long was missed the nimble step and merry laugh that always brought happiness to those who met her. She spent five years of her married life in Canton, Mississippi, where the expansion of her intellect and heart only added to her womanhood a sweeter charm. It was there that, under the ministry of Dr. Walker, she gave her heart to God, uniting with the Methodist Church, and experiencing that religion which chastened and purified her for the many trials and bereavements of her after-life. She passed the remaining twenty-four years of her life in Texas, far away from the sisters she loved so dearly, never more to meet them on earth.

In her children was centered all her happiness, and to them she imparted all that culture and refinement so predominant in her own lovely character. She was attacked with pneumonia; to which her delicate frame soon gave way. Her aged husband, who had walked with her side by side for so many years, gave her sweet comfort by praying with her. In the wanderings of her mind she spoke of her sainted mother and others "beyond the Jordan." She has gone "where the weary are at rest." "A crown of glory bright" awaited her "in the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

"How sweet it will be in that beautiful land,
So free from all sorrow and care,
With songs on our lips and harps in our hands,
To meet one another again."

MONROE, La., February 11, 1874.

ISAAC SIMMONS was born in Hancock county, Georgia, October 25, 1799. May 20, 1819, was married to Miss Eliza Steele, of Georgia. After her death he was married to Miss Barbara Allen, of Pike county, same State. Early after this union he moved to north Alabama, and settled in Lauderdale county. Subsequent to this he moved to south Alabama, and finally located in Choctaw county, where, at his residence near Tompkinsville, he died, May 18, 1873, aged seventy-three years, six months and twenty days.

Bro. Simmons was one of the excellent of earth—a man of solid parts, deep piety, unbending integrity. Of him it can be truthfully said: "The world was better by his life and poorer by his death." In early manhood he professed saving faith in Christ and united with the Methodist Church. Until death he remained an earnest and faithful member. In all the walks and relations of life he was most exemplary. As citizen, neighbor, husband, parent, he was most worthy of imitation. In 1846 he joined the Masonic fraternity, and in 1851 united with the temperance society. In both these organizations he was a light to his brethren, ever laboring, by precept and example, to promote their moral and religious well-being. January 1, 1872, he was stricken with paralysis, from which he but partially recovered. For a year and a half he was confined closely to his room, not being able to get out of his chair without assistance. His afflictions, though severe, wrung no sigh of discontent from his heart, no words of murmuring from his lips. It was my pleasant task to visit his sick-chamber. At all times I found him fully resigned to God's will. The Bible he kept near his side, and read daily. Its precious truths, his comfort and support in health, now cheered and strengthened him in the presence of death. Now and then, from his palsied lips, fell tremblingly a sweet song of Zion:

"O when shall I see Jesus," etc.

In the bright abode he is now with Jesus. For some days preceding his dissolution he never spoke. With such a man we need not "last words" to assure us of triumph. His life tells that story. As he lived, so he died. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

C. B. DUBOSE.

THE London correspondent of the Dundee Advertiser gives the following particulars of an estimate of the cost of the Tichborne trial: "To the jury has been paid £2,600; to the short-hand writers close on £2,000; to the printers nearly £4,000. The prosecuting counsel—five in all—have swallowed over £14,000. The defendant's counsel are paid miserably compared with the prosecution, but the exact amount is not known. Some of the witnesses for the prosecution received very large fees—one £1,000, another £700, and a third £500. Of course they came from Australia and Chili, and their evidence was deemed necessary. Altogether the 'little bill' on one side alone, when it comes to be added up, must reach close on £150,000."

"BUT REJOICE, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings;" in which sense the cup that his lips touched hath the sweetest taste, even though death were in it; the grave, because he did lie in it, is so much the softer and the more refreshing—a bed of rest; and that part of this sky and clouds that the Beloved shall break through and come to judgment is as lovely a piece of the created heaven as any is, if we may love the ground he gooth on the better; but all this is to be understood in a spiritual manner.

FATHER IS DEAD.

We laid our father under the snow,
In the shady nook where the hemlocks grow;
We laid him away with prayers and tears,
To slumber on through the coming years.

As evening lowered the snow-flakes fell,
And covered the new-made grave so well
That at morn we said: "The place is white
Where we laid our father yester-night."

His grave is like a beautiful bed,
With pure white covers overspread;
And the hands that laid him down to rest
Were the hands of those who loved him best.

The sun shines just as high to-day
As though he had never passed away;
It does not seem to lessen its glow
Because dear father is under the snow.

The little snow-birds fly about,
Out and in, and in and out;
The waving branches overhead,
How can they know that father is dead!

By and by, in the joyous spring,
Over his grave the birds will sing;
And the little robins build their nest
Just where father is laid to rest.

It may be wrong to mourn and fret
For him we never can forget;
And surely he would not have it so
Who is lying under the beautiful snow.

Wurtemberg and its Religious Customs.

BY THE REV. GIDEON DRAPER.

Wurtemberg is spiritually as well as physically the garden of Germany. For an hundred years it has been noted for its religious life and activities, and has kept the faith in times when general darkness has spread over the land. Nor has it entirely lost its ancient character. It is not a large kingdom, but is densely populated. It contains two millions of inhabitants, of whom two-thirds are Protestants. And it is claimed that it has had a larger proportion of pious ministers and laymen than any part of Europe except the Wupperthal in Rhenish Prussia, and England and Scotland. Wurtemberg furnishes one-third of the members of the Lutheran Church in the United States, and contributes annually more men and money to the cause of missions than larger countries of greater wealth. The work of its Bible Society exceeds that of all the other German Bible societies together. And it is difficult to find a land that has given birth to a greater number of distinguished scholars and literary men. The soil is also extremely rich and fertile for material products. Grain and grass, vineyards and fruit-trees attest the fact on every side. The scenery is unique and exceedingly beautiful. Hills and valleys, mountains and plains, rivers and forests, with the heavily-laden, undulating fields, afford a pleasing variety, while the air is mild and invigorating. Nature has been bountiful to Wurtemberg, and I thought repeatedly, while passing through or sojourning in different parts of this land, if any people ought to acknowledge and love the God of nature, it should be the Wurtembergers. But even here also rationalism and infidelity bear their hateful fruit, and materialism abounds. Stuttgart is the most pleasantly situated capital in entire Germany. It nestles warm and low in a basin scooped out of the mountains. It is surrounded in close proximity on every side by hills. Each has its own individuality. Summit after summit meets the eye, diverse and ever new. Terraced or sloping vineyards, with fanciful summer retreats, occupy the precipitous sides to the very top. The reddish soil, the blooming staked vine, the busy laborers like bees clinging to the surface, form a most pretty and picturesque scene, while the walks among these hills and through these vineyards are indescribable. It is the custom for every prosperous family to have a vineyard and a cottage for the long, warm evenings of summer. In the capital all the pomp and fashion of royalty are observed, notwithstanding the dependency upon the consolidated empire. But it is a provincial court, where glory has faded before the rising central sun. Even here the stir of new activity is seen.

The city is rapidly spreading on every side, clambering up the beautiful vine-clad hills, and wears the appearance of a most prosperous American town. And this increased material progress extends throughout the land. But there is not a proportionate advance and enterprise in the religious world. Stuttgart, with its nearly one hundred thousand of population, has only five churches for its own people. But from two to three services by different clergymen are held in each upon the Sabbath, and they are usually well attended. When the more popular preachers are in the pulpit they are densely thronged. A new church is in process of building that will cost upward of $100,000—a large sum in this land. The same mistake is made as in many cases at home. A fine specimen of architecture is reared, instead of several commodious places of worship, which could be erected for the same amount of money. There are also religious services in halls and in benevolent institutions, which, in connection with the churches, gather Christian assemblies every hour of the Sabbath and every day of the week. Bible "stunden," as they are called—hours for the exposition of the word of God—are appointed for different places and at different times during the week. Sabbath schools on the American plan number fifteen hundred children, and there are also the children's services in other localities. In addition, meetings are held that are not under the supervision of the clergy. In Wartemberg the hands and the tongues of the laity have been loosened. The most noted of these are the gatherings of the disciples of Michael Hahn—a peasant who was exceedingly active in Christian work and full of living faith, and who has left behind him many disciples called after his name. Their services are not appointed at the hour of regular church worship, as these believers remain in the State church as a healthful leaven, and attend upon the stated preaching of the gospel. And their assemblies are favored and oftentimes attended by the evangelical clergy. I was present on one occasion, and found the hall crowded, many having come in from the country. Four or five of the elders or chief men sat in front and conducted the service. Accompanied by singing and prayer, the Scriptures were read and expounded. There then followed a familiar conversation on the passage, in which only the elders took part. The comments were practical and spiritual, and evinced a saving faith. The entire service was orderly and impressive. These meetings are spread throughout Wurtemberg, and are doubtless productive of much good. There are also other social religious gatherings.

It has oftentimes been stated that no such thing as a prayer meeting exists in Germany. This is a great mistake. Social prayer meetings are to-day held in different parts of Wurtemberg, and have been probably for an hundred years. I attended a meeting of this kind in Stuttgart, upon invitation. A few brethren met together in a private house, in the same room where they had met weekly for fifteen years. A portion of Scripture was read and expounded, which led to a free and familiar conversation on the passage, in which all took part. Subsequently each prayed in turn, all falling upon their knees. There was this peculiarity about the form of service: at the beginning of the meeting each person took a piece of paper from the table. On inquiry I found it was a drawing of lots as to the order of the prayers. The papers were numbered. Number one prayed first, and was followed by number two, and by others according to the numbers they had drawn. The object is to prevent embarrassment and a painful waiting one for another. At the close the company, standing, repeated the Lord's Prayer together, and sang the benediction.

There are many of these gatherings throughout Wurtemberg. They form what is called the inner circles. The sexes do not meet, but women's prayer meetings are also held. It is not, however, what might be called a church prayer meeting. It is more private—certain congenial friends form the circle. The unsaved are not there. The churches as yet do not furnish suitable rooms for social meetings, or for the Sabbath school. I was introduced to another religious circle in the Wurtemberg capital, that seemed to our American way of thinking a little peculiar. It was a select Christian club, composed of the most active and prominent names, including clergymen, professors, merchants, members of parliament and others. It meets weekly at a hotel, and is presided over by a well-known Christian philanthropist and member of the Reichstag, or highest legislative body. Wreathed in smoke and entrenched behind bottles of wine and beer, they discuss the current religious topics of the day, in their own thoughts as innocent of harm as a company of tea drinkers where more advanced temperance customs obtain. All those who give evidence of having been born again, and who are zealous in matters of religion, are still called Pietists, as distinguished from the cold orthodox or Rationalist. An evangelical religious paper, containing a sermon and other appropriate reading, is published weekly in Stuttgart, and is supposed to be read or heard by five hundred thousand in Wurtemberg alone. It is read aloud on the Sabbath to little groups in many of the districts of the country, and thus does a revival work.

There is also an unusual missionary zeal throughout the land. The little three-kreutzers collection, weekly, amounts to $20,000 annually. And Wurtemberg furnishes the largest number of missionaries, according to its population, of any country in Europe. Dr. Barth computed, twenty years ago, that it provided one-sixth of the missionaries of the entire Christian world. I have never found in any American city so many missionary meetings, and such general missionary interest, as in Stuttgart. Ministers have hours for giving information in regard to the progress of the work, and two or three evenings in the week through the winter there are missionary gatherings in large halls, well attended. Often returned missionaries give the results of their observation on these occasions. This will account for the large amount of money and the large number of men this land yearly affords for the great cause. The Wurtembergers are essentially religious, although much iniquity abounds. Their accustomed salutation is: "God greet thee;" and at parting: "God protect thee." The services in the church are exceedingly impressive. Each person on entering stands and bows his head in prayer before taking his seat. And all unite heartily in the singing. After the first hymn a few moments are allowed for silent prayer, a custom I have not observed elsewhere in Germany, but here it is universal. The whole congregation is hushed, and a general solemnity prevails. The minister then announces his subject, gives the divisions of the discourse, pauses for a short prayer, in which he implores the help of the Holy Spirit, after which he proceeds to deliver his message energetically, and always without notes. I have heard most excellent and spiritual preaching from the Wurtemberg pulpit. There are strong, godly men here at work, but the harvest is great and the laborers are few.—Methodist.

THE German Rationalist, Professor David F. Strauss, is dead, as a Berlin dispatch informs us. He was regarded by all orthodox theologians as an infidel, as he denied the inspiration of the Scriptures, and sought to reduce the character of Christ to that of a mere human reformer. His "Life of Jesus" was more injurious to the Christian faith in Germany than the writings of Renan have been in France. But he held his place as a professor of dogmatic theology in the university for many years, and his influence through his writings, especially his last "Confessions," is more pestiferous than that of any of the avowed infidels of the present age. He dies at the age of sixty-five.—New York Observer.

Admitting Children to the Church.

The following sound views upon a subject just now receiving considerable attention, says the Evangelical Messenger, are taken from a chapter on child-piety and profession, in Dr. Fish's new work, the "Hand-book of Revivals." They occur in a letter addressed to the author, by Rev. Dr. S. D. Burchard, of New York city:

The efforts and prayers of Christians are now turned to the young as the most hopeful field, as furnishing the best soil for the seed which is to produce an hundred-fold.

Some of the most active and spiritual members of our churches were regenerated in childhood. One of the most useful and prominent pastors in the city of New York was received into full fellowship of the church at the early age of eight years, and was hopefully converted at a much earlier period. The intimation of Paul is that Timothy became the subject of grace and a student of Scripture when quite a youth.

During a ministry of more than thirty years I have received a goodly number into the church between the ages of nine and twelve, and they "have run well," giving good evidence that the work was thorough and that they were born of the Spirit.

Why should not such cases of conversion be more frequent and more generally expected? Why should the sunniest portion of life be given to the service of satan? Why should sin be suffered to propagate itself? Why should the seeds of apostasy be permitted even to germinate, much less to produce a full harvest of vice and crime? Why should not the proclivities to evil in childhood be counteracted by those moral forces implied and involved in the gospel plan of mercy? In the atoning blood of Jesus there is the needed element for changing the original character of the soil and making it good ground for the reception of the spiritual seed-grain. We have in the "exceedingly rich and precious promises," and in the influences of the divine Spirit, the glorious sunshine and showers so essential to healthy germination, efflorescence and fruitage.

If, then, children may be converted, why should they not be received to the care and fellowship of the church? The church is God's seminary of instruction and preparation for the higher honors of heaven; and should she not take under her tutelage the younger disciples, the very "babes in Christ," who more than any other need the "sincere milk of the word," as well as the tender care of our common mother, the church? They are members with us of the household of faith, and they should not be exiled from the family board or disinherited of their birthright. They are lambs of Christ's flock, and his charge to Peter is still imperative: "Feed my lambs." They, more than all others, need protection from the storms of this world, the pitfalls and perils of the wilderness, the fury of wild beasts; and to this end they must be gathered into the fold under the care of the Good Shepherd. The idea of keeping them out of the church in their weakness and helplessness, when they most need shelter and protection, is simply absurd.

In my early Christian life I witnessed a scene which opened a full fountain of sympathy for the young and tender lambs of the flock. Little Martha, the granddaughter of the officiating clergyman, appeared before the proper officers of the church to be examined for admission to its communion. She was examined thoroughly, and the examination showed satisfactorily that she had met with a change; and yet the officers said: "Martha, you are very young, and had better wait till you are older before you make a public profession of religion." She did wait patiently for three months, and then appeared again, telling the same sweet story of Jesus and his love; and yet she was advised to wait. Again she appeared, hopeful now, but was again disappointed. And when a whole year had passed, and she was again advised to wait, her breaking heart sobbed out: "O grandpapa, how old must I be before I may love Jesus and sit with him at his table?" The old prejudice gave way. She was received, and became an ornament and a blessing to the church.

Whom Christ has received, however young, the church may not reject; and those who are fitted for his church above are surely fitted for its fellowship here.

A FRENCH correspondent writes: M. Thiers was walking this winter at early dawn, dressed in the well-known brown overcoat, in the military camp of Villeneuve L'Etang, when he discovered a recruit on sentry quietly munching a hunch of bread and cheese. "Good morning, my lad," quoth he. "Good morning, old 'un," replied the recruit. "Well," continued M. Thiers, "you don't seem idle, at all events." "No," replied the recruit, "we are hard worked, but get a rest now and then to eat our grub." "Well," replied M. Thiers, "I found the bread excellent." "What," says the recruit, "you eat it too, then; what are you? A hospital sergeant?" "No," said M. Thiers, "higher than that." "What then? Captain?" "No; higher still." "Not general?" "No, better; president of the republic!" "Why, bless my heart, you must be Thiers himself. Just hold my bread and cheese while I present arms to you!"

THE London Record says: "A characteristic feature of French life comes out in the fact that in Paris the number of fashion journals is twenty-three, and the number of Roman Catholic religious journals seven. There are also two young ladies' papers. The number of reviews and journals for belles-lettres is only twenty, so that fashion and the belles carry off the day, as they ought to do in Paris. On the other hand, Germany has only five fashion journals, devoting its numbers to duller sciences."

Acquisition of Languages.

There is a popular idea that French is easy, that Latin is easy, that Italian is easy; that German is more difficult, yet by no means insuperably difficult. It is believed that when an Englishman has spent all the best years of his youth in attempting to learn Latin and Greek, he may acquire one or two modern languages with little effort during a brief residence on the Continent.

It is certainly true that we may learn any number of foreign languages so as to speak them badly, but it certainly cannot be easy to speak them well. It may be inferred that it is not easy because the accomplishment is so rare. The inducements are common; the accomplishment is rare. Thousands of English people have very strong reasons for learning French; thousands of French people could improve their position by learning English; but rare indeed are the men and women who know both thoroughly.

The following propositions, based on much observation, of a kind wholly unprejudiced, and tested by a not inconsiderable experience, will be found, I believe, unassailable:

1. Whenever a foreign language is perfectly acquired there are peculiar family conditions. The person has either married a person of the other nation or is of mixed blood.

2. When a foreign language has been acquired (there are instances of this) in quite absolute perfection, there is almost always some loss in the native tongue. Either the native tongue is not spoken correctly or it is not spoken with perfect ease.

3. A man sometimes speaks two languages correctly—his father's and his mother's, or his own and his wife's—but never three.

4. Children can speak several languages exactly like natives, but in succession, never simultaneously. They forget the first in acquiring the second, and so on.

5. A language cannot be learned by an adult without five years' residence in the country where it is spoken, and without habits of close observation a residence of twenty years is insufficient.

This is not encouraging, but it is the truth. Happily a knowledge which falls far short of mastery may be of much practical use in the common affairs of life, and may even afford some initiation into foreign literature. I do not argue that, because perfection is denied to us by the circumstances of our lives or the necessities of our organization, we are therefore to abandon the study of every language but the mother-tongue. It may be of use to us to know several languages imperfectly, if only we confess the hopelessness of absolute attainment. That which is truly and deeply and seriously an injury to our intellectual life is the foolishness of the too common vanity which first deludes itself with childish expectations, and then tortures itself with late regret for failure which might have been easily foreseen.—Hamerton's Intellectual Life.

TWEED'S PRISON LIFE.—The number of curiosity-seekers who have visited the prison on Blackwell's Island to have a look at the ex-Boss (Tweed) has been so great that no one is allowed to visit him except his legal advisers and the members of his own family. Those persons, however, who come to the prison to visit friends who are in the hospital sometimes see Tweed as he passes to and fro in the performance of his duties as assistant orderly of the hospital. These duties are not particularly arduous, as there is seldom a large number of prisoners on the sick list, but they are sometimes disagreeable, and the service is as much as could be expected of a man of his age. He is obliged to rise at six o'clock in the morning, and from that time until the morning visit of the surgeon in charge his time is occupied in cleaning up the hospital, making the beds, washing the patients (if there are any who are unable to perform their ablutions,) and in some cases renewing their bandages and dressing their sores or wounds. The surgeon in his morning round writes on a slate the directions to be observed during the day in the case of each patient, and it is part of the assistant orderly's duty to see that these are promptly and faithfully obeyed. After the visit of the surgeon there is little for him to do, and he spends most of his leisure time in reading books, of which he has a large number in his cell and in the hospital. His health has improved rapidly since he has been employed in the hospital, and the removal of his beard and mustache has rather improved his personal appearance, as it makes him look much younger than when he wore those iron-gray appendages.—New York Graphic.

A MINISTER had a negro in his family. One Sunday, when he was preaching, he happened to look in the pew where the negro was, and could hardly contain himself as he saw the negro, who could not read or write a word, scribbling away most industriously. After meeting he said to the negro: "Tom, what were you doing in church?" "Taking notes, massa. All de gemmen takes notes." "Bring your notes here and let me see them." Tom brought his notes, which looked more like Chinese than English. "Why, Tom, this is all nonsense." "I thought so, massa, all the time you was preaching it."

THE commission appointed by the government of Peru to examine into the guano supply report that immense strata of that valuable substance exist upon the mainland. Exploring parties are to be sent to examine the north and south coasts to see how far these strata extend. In 1873 there were thirty-five departures of ships, with eleven thousand six hundred and thirty-four tons of guano.

THE desire of power in excess caused the angels to fall; the desire of knowledge in excess caused man to fall; but in charity is no excess, neither can man or angels come into danger by it.

Religious Intelligence.

THE Missionary Society of Sweden has sent two missionaries—one to New York and the other to Boston—to labor among the Swedish immigrants arriving in those cities.

THE League of St. Sebastian is a society formed in Dublin to promote the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope. It now numbers five hundred and seven members in Ireland.

THE Methodist Episcopal Church, within about a year, has sent thirty new missionaries to the foreign field, commenced three new missions in Japan, Mexico and Italy, and re-entered Bulgaria.

IT IS decided that the Catholic University of Georgia shall be established at Macon. What is known as the "Orr Place," situated near Vineville, is to be donated at a public expense of $4,000 only.

IN CEYLON an association has been formed, called the Sivite Society, with purposes similar to the Brahmo Somaj in North India. Though opposed to Christianity, its formation is a favorable sign of the attention attracted by the preaching of the gospel.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Jewish Messenger is pained at the frequent intermarriages between Christians and Jews, and thinks such marriages "will destroy Judaism and make the Mosaic faith a thing of shreds and patches." In that case the faith will certainly be a Mosaic, says an exchange.

THE Albany Catholic Reflector says: "The present public school system is becoming a subject of vital importance to the Catholics throughout the country. There is no need of hiding the fact that the system is objectionable to the church, that her hierarchy has condemned it, and that it therefore becomes the duty of all Catholics to discountenance it."

THE English Independent, in reference to the statement by the Rev. Dr. John Hall, of New York, on ministerial support, gives statistics showing that the incomes of ministers among the Independents in England are much smaller than in the United States, £100 a year being the maximum of a country minister's salary, and £200, or at farthest £300, of a city minister's.

BISHOP DICKSON, of the United Brethren Church, recommends in the last number of the Telescope that a centenary meeting be held in every society throughout the church, between January 1, 1874, and January 1, 1875, to procure subscriptions and collections, to be equally divided between the Missionary Society, the Church Erection Society and the endowment fund of Union Biblical Seminary.

THE late Miss Margaret Belden, of Norwalk, Connecticut, gave to the parish of St. Paul's church of Norwalk $16,000; the Missionary Society of the diocese of Connecticut, $5,000; Nashoba mission of Wisconsin, $10,000; trustees of the Aged and Infirm Clergy and Widows' Fund, one-third of the rest and residue of the estate, and the Berkeley Divinity School of Middletown the remaining two-thirds.

A MISSIONARY at a station in South Africa, connected with the Scotch Free Church, speaks of a recent revival at his station in connection with a week of special prayer. Whole nights were spent by some of the people on the hills in sending up their united cries to God for his presence and the outpouring of his Spirit. As a fruit of this effort the church was greatly revived, and fifty-three new-born souls added to the church.

THE Church Journal, one of the most earnest opposers of the Bishop Cummins movement, lays down the law in these words: "Bishop Cummins is still a bishop. When deposed he will be still a bishop. His acts are uncanonical, irregular, invalid to the church, but they are still the acts of a bishop. The orders of the Reformed Episcopal Church will be just the same as our own. "Once a bishop always a bishop" is the expression of the doctrine about orders.

A PARAGRAPH is floating about in newspaperdom, stating that Bishop Paddock, who was consecrated Episcopal Bishop of Massachusetts recently, was the one hundredth bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church consecrated in the United States, and that eighty-one years ago the consecration of the first American bishop took place. The Advocate, published at Buffalo, pronounces this an error, and says the episcopal office in our church is eight years older than the same office in the Protestant Episcopal Church, Bishop Asbury having been ordained at Baltimore, by Dr. Coke, in 1784.

METHODIST M. E. CHURCH MISSION WORK AT FOOCHOW, CHINA.—We repeat, by request, the statistics of the Foochow Methodist Episcopal mission work, which we printed a few weeks ago. They are for the year ending October last. Presiding elders' districts, 3; churches, 32; ordained preachers, 12; unordained preachers, 15; preachers on trial, 42; local preachers employed, 15; members in full connection, 1,025; members on probation, 595; exhorters, 20; baptized children, 301; mission property in Foochow, $36,000. The number and value of chapels in other localities were not reported.—New York Christian Advocate.

THE French Canadian Missionary Society has its headquarters at Montreal and labors among the French Canadians, who form a third of the Dominion population and have of recent years come more largely under the influence of Jesuitism and Mariolatry. The society conducts two large schools, one for boys and one for girls, at Pointe-Aux-Trembles, on the St. Lawrence, nine miles below Montreal, and a number of their pupils have entered the evangelical ministry. They also employ a considerable number of colporteurs, whose efforts to circulate the word of God among the French Canadians have during the past year met with much success.

THE London Society for the Propagation of the Gospel is the oldest English missionary society. While the conversion of the heathen is one of its objects, its more direct work is the extension of the Church of England in the colonies. Its revenue last year amounted to more than $600,000. It supports wholly or in part 463 ordained missionaries, of which number 223 labor in the West Indies, 84 in Africa, 114 in Asia, 45 in Australia and the Pacific Islands, and 1 in Europe. Thirty-five are native clergymen in India. As a result of the Day of Intercession, appointed by the society, the means and the men were furnished for two new missions, one in China and one in Japan.

MR. BUSHNELL mentions the admission to the church of Gaboon of two women, daughters of two of the chief Mpongwo kings, and speaks of about fifty hopeful converts having been received in the last two years. In Japan Mr. Loomis speaks of the native church. At Canton, China, Dr. Happer writes, on the twenty-second of October, that eight or ten persons would be admitted to the communion on the next Sabbath. At Cos, Mexico, Mr. Phillips mentions the case of a man who had walked nearly one hundred miles to receive baptism, and who gave very pleasing evidence of being a true follower of Christ. He was welcomed to the privileges of the church.—Record.

ABOUT five years ago a young Swedish sailor, by the name of Peter L. Smith, came into Portland harbor, and through the influences of the Young Men's Christian Association was induced to attend their meetings held in the sail-loft, and by them led to Christ. Three weeks ago this converted sailor returned to Portland a local preacher, and is now laboring with great success among the Scandinavians of this city. He has preached two Sabbaths in the Young Men's Christian Association rooms, in the Swedish language, to large congregations. Twenty of his countrymen have come forward seeking Christ, and four have been soundly converted. Efforts are being made to secure the more permanent labors of this earnest preacher among the Scandinavian population of Portland.—Zion's Herald.

BISHOP CUMMINS formally opened the first religious services of the Reformed Episcopal Church in New York on Sunday, the fourth of January. His audience assembled in Steinway Hall, and was all that could be desired in numbers. However, as undoubtedly many were present from curiosity, it cannot be judged from this inaugural occasion how large a following the new movement has in this city. The services did not vary from the usual Episcopal ritual, beyond the adoption of the prayer-book of 1785. Rev. A. V. Feltwell, of West Farms, New York, and Rev. Mr. Leacock appeared on the platform with the Bishop. The sermon was preached by the latter, who claimed essentially that the new church was only new so far as it aimed to return to the simple truths of the gospel and the true spirit of Christianity.

THE statistics of the Moravian missions for the year 1872 are as follows: Mission stations, 90; of which 74 are in America, 12 in Africa, 2 in Asia and 2 in Australia; 322 missionaries (including missionaries' wives) and missionary agents; 1,533 native helpers; 21,969 communicants and a total of 69,139. Of this whole number 2,853 are Esquimaux, 1,269 are Indians, 8,874 are South Africans, 55,903 are West Indian and South American negroes, and 149 are natives of Australia and Thibet. In regard to the expenses of the Moravian missions it is difficult to give a precise account, as several of the missions are supported partly by their own labor and partly by the contributions of friends, independently of the Mission Board. The total receipts of the Mission Board for 1872 were $90,000, and the whole expense of Moravian missions may be estimated at about $130,000. The deficiency on the year's account was $16,000.

THE Rev. Antonio Carraseo, the eloquent preacher of Madrid, who came to this country as a delegate to the Evangelical Alliance, and was lost, on his return, on the ill-fated Villa du Havre, addressed the American Church Missionary Society in Philadelphia, not long before leaving our country. We draw the following particulars from his speech: Religious liberty has now prevailed in Spain for five years. During this time twenty-seven congregations have been established in different parts of the country. The most important church is that at Seville, under the care of Cabrera. Carrasco's own church in Madrid numbered nine hundred persons. Christian schools have been established in various towns. There is a growing interest in the study of the Scriptures, and a larger number of Bibles were sold in Spain than in Italy last year. Great numbers of Bibles have been sent from Madrid to Mexico. Five million Spanish gospel tracts have been circulated in Spain by the Religious Tract Society of London during the past five years.—Independent.

WE CLIP the following from the Northwestern Advocate: One of Bishop Cheney's first official acts was to certify to the orders and transfer of Rev. Dr. William H. Cooper to the Methodist Church. Dr. Cooper, who has been serving for some time in our Mexican missions, was in rather undefined church relations, he having been deposed from the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church some time ago for the simple reason that he first had voluntarily withdrawn from that body. Dr. Cooper wished to join the Methodist Church and ministry, and therefore first gave in his adhesion to the new church and was received by Bishop Cheney, who now certifies to the fact that the former had been known to him as a presbyter in the Protestant Episcopal Church, and transfers him to us. The practical complication lies in the fact that Dr. Cooper, who received his orders from the Church of England, lost his parchments in a shipwreck years ago; therefore his transition to us by the hands of Bishop Cheney, who could certify to the validity of the lost links in Dr. Cooper's church history.

The Madness of Laughter.

There is a time to laugh as well as to weep, and there is a laughter which expresses the genuine emotions of a happy heart. Things humorons, ludicrous and grotesque are potent to break the longest faces into smiles, and where there is joy there is likely to be an expression of it in the voice and look. It would be an unwarranted conclusion, however, to infer that those who laugh the loudest and the most are the happiest. The author of the Deserted Village gives us a suggestion in the line:

"And the loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind."

Great mental vaculty certainly may attend the most boisterous manifestations of pleasure, and, as a rule, shallow understandings and noisy merriment go together. It is the brawl of the brook rather than the deep and grandly flowing river. The man who is occupied with earnest work, and possessed of capacity and taste for the higher walks of knowledge and study, will seldom explode in the guffaws of the tavern barroom. A broad horse-laugh, however, indicates sometimes a strong and benevolent nature, and a good caliber of mind. Smirking, simpering and giggling are certainly abominable, the indications of idiocy, of a daft intellect, more becoming monkeys than human beings. The most thoughtful and the best are of course the most happy, but it does not follow that they are most demonstrative in their joy. Much depends on temperament, but generally it is the contemplative and the tranquil who have the richest and most abiding satisfaction. "The soul's calm sunshine and the heartfelt joy" have usually no loud and side-splitting utterance. The soul may be as bright as a star-lit sky, and as silent in its glory.

Religion and laughter are no strangers. Sarah's child bore this name—Laughing—and she said: "God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me." Sarah's laugh, and the joy of Abraham, and the delight of all faith, was immortalized in the name of Isaac. It was not irreverent, nor incongruous that Abraham's boy—the child of promise, the blessed seed—should be called Laughing. The world's joy was to come through him. When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, it is written: "Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing." Not much is said about laughing in the New Testament. Jesus says: "Blessed are ye that weep now, for ye shall laugh;" and again: "Woe unto you that laugh now, for ye shall mourn and weep." The troubles of the righteous were to end in joy, and the present good time of the wicked was to go down in dark clouds and woeful tempests. Religion is opposed to the senseless intoxications and dissipations of sensual pleasures, and to all enjoyments which are procured at the expense of virtue and duty. It even affirms that "sorrow is better than laughter," and that under some circumstances there is a woe in laughter and a blessedness in weeping. All this is written, and yet the Christian shall laugh, and the child of God can testify: "Then was our mouth filled with laughter." David begins his incomparable hymns with, "Blessed is the Man," and Christ opens his divine sermon with a like note, "Blessed are they." God's people have shouted aloud in every dispensation, joy has been the common feeling of believing souls.

The maduess of laughter is seen in its worldly and sensual associations, and in connection with the pursuit of earthly pleasure. "I said of laughter, It is mad; and of mirth, What doeth it?" This is not true of the exuberant spirits of childhood, nor of the healthful buoyancy of youth. There is music in the laughter of these as clear and sweet as the woodland notes of birds. To be sane and melodious at all, laughter must break irrepressibly from the deep fountains of a joyous heart. When it becomes a thing sought, and when it must be provoked and stimulated by vicious and unhealthful expedients, it is a hollow pretense. The author of Ecclesiastes rightfully characterizes some laughter as madness, and some mirth as an impertinence; and probably his reference is to those gayeties and amusements which make up the main pursuit and entertainment of many people. To have no serious aim in life, to lose sight of the final account, and to be absorbed in the eager chase after pleasure, is one of the worst forms of insanity. There are people whose study it is to drive away from themselves all thought about sacred things. They affect a happiness which they do not possess, just as lunatics persuade themselves that they are crowned monarchs, invested with the riches and state of kings, while in truth they are stripped of liberty and reason. They boast of their cheerfulness, they are worshipers of Momus, and they say: "See how happy we are! We are no Puritans, no Methodists, no anchorites." Theirs is a religion of mirth, and laughter is the divinity they worship, but at heart they are without peace and under the spell of a most violent hallucination. Kings in old times had their court fools and jesters, and to-day the clown is the most popular and attractive of men.

There is a morbid craving for jollity and sport, and the lovers of pleasure would, if possible, turn society into a perpetual harlequinade. Laughter and mirth have come to be articles of manufacture, and institutions turn them out to order and to suit purchasers. The price of a ticket to the theator, where low comedy is enacted, the cost of a night's revel in the hall-room, a Sunday's excursion, are cheap prescriptions for the tired and sad soul. Professors of religion are fearfully fallen when they go to these muddy streams for pleasure; and for such vanities as they afford, turn away from the "pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." It is a madness surely to neglect that heavenly wisdom, whose price is above rubies, for those exciting diversions which leave behind them only the memory of withered and blighted pleasures. This surface life, this purposeless and flippant being, this absence of all spiritual aspirations, and this clamor for sensational amusements, is a deplorable mania. Avarice, ambition and lust are enemies to personal religion, and are forms of sin which keep men from Christ, but all of them together are scarcely equal to this one monstrous evil. When once this lightness and supreme love of gayety possess the soul, the spiritual nature is so smothered and buried that the gospel can rarely reach it. The whole nature has become so volatile, and so utterly emasculated of solid character, that neither reason nor grace can make an impression. This class of the ungodly is most emphatically like the chaff which the wind driveth away. They have laughed over the sacred appeals of the gospel, they have laughed at the solemn responsibilities of life, they have laughed with death and eternity at the door, and the madness only ceases in the darkness and despair of hell.

Literary Felony.

This subject is receiving a good deal of attention in the religious papers just now. Preachers are supposed to be the chief transgressors. Stealing sermons is bad for the head, still worse for the heart, and often leads to the shipwreck of character and position. The spiritual condition of the church is also terribly damaged in the long run by the recitation of borrowed or stolen sermons. As a warning to young preachers the ventilation of the matter may be timely and profitable. Dr. Talmage's paper, the Christian at Work, has an article on Literary Felony. Probably enough the doctor's sermons are sometimes used without due credit given. Here is what he says:

We have recently seen many elaborate discussions as to whether plagiarism is virtuous or criminal; in other words, whether writers may steal. If a minister can find a sermon better than any one he can make, why not preach it? If an author can find a paragraph for his book better than any he can himself manufacture, why not appropriate it? That sounds well. But why not go further and ask if a woman find a set of furs better than she has in her wardrobe, why not take them? If a man find that his neighbor has a cow full Alderney, while he has in his own yard only a scrawny runt, why not drive home the Alderney? Theft is taking anything that does not belong to you, whether it be sheep, oxen, hats, coats or literary material. Without attempting to point out the line that divides the lawful appropriation of another's ideas from the appropriation of another's phraseology, we have only to say that a literary man always knows when he is stealing. Whether found out or not, the process is belittling, and a man is through it blasted for this world, and damaged for the next one. The ass in the fable wanted to die because he was beaten so much, but after death they changed his hide into a drum-head, and thus he was beaten more than ever. So the plagiarist is so vile a cheat that there is not much chance for him, living or dead. A minister who hopes to do good with such burglary will no more be a successful embassador to men than a foreign minister dispatched by our government to-day would succeed if he presented himself at the court of St. James with the credentials that he stole from the archives of those illustrious ex-ministers, James Buchanan or Benjamin Franklin. What every minister needs is a fresh message that day from the Lord. We would sell cheap all our parchments of licensure to preach. God gives his ministers a new license every Sabbath and a new message. He sends none of us out so mentally poor that we have nothing to furnish but a cold hash of other people's sermons. Our haystack is large enough for all the sheep that come round it, and there is no need of our taking a single fork-full from any other barrack. By all means use all the hooks you can get at, but devour them, chew them fine, and digest them, till they become a part of the blood and bone of your own nature. There is no harm in delivering an oration or sermon belonging to some one else, provided you so announce it. Quotation marks are cheap, and let us not be afraid to use them. Do you know why "quotation" marks are made up of four commas, two at the head of the paragraph adopted and two at the close of it? Those four commas mean that you should stop four times before you steal anything.

If there were no question of morals involved, plagiarism is nevertheless most perilous. There are a great many constables out for the arrest of such defrauders. That stolen paragraph that you think will never be recognized has been committed to memory by that old lady with green goggles in the front pew. That very same brilliant passage you have just pronounced was delivered by the clergyman who preached in that pulpit the Sabbath before: Two thieves met in one hen-roost. All we know of Dr. Hayward, of Queen Elizabeth's time, is that he purloined from Tacitus. Be dishonest once in this respect, and when you do really say something original and good the world will cry out: "Yes, very fine! I always did like Joseph Addison!" Sermons are successful not according to the head involved in them, but according to the heart implied, and no one can feel aright while preaching a literary dishonesty. Let us be content to wear our own coat, though the nap on it is not quite as well-looking; to ride on our own horse, though he do not gallop as gracefully, and will "break up" when others are passing. There is a work for us all to do, and God gives us just the best tools to do it. What folly to be hankering after our neighbor's chalk-line and gimlet.

Catechisms and Theological Institutes.

MR. EDITOR: I read the article of Bro. Richardson on this subject with great pleasure, and wish to "second the motion." If our church needs special additions to its literature, these additions are a well-digested series of doctrinal catechisms adapted to children, and an exhaustive discussion of systematic theology suitable for preachers. My deliberate judgment is that we are defective at these two strong, vital points; and I join him in expressing the hope that the next General Conference may be able to fall upon some method of strengthening our literature at these points.

A church cannot perpetuate itself simply by making proselytes from the world. However necessary to its existence this form of effort may be, yet to do its full work it must care for the children born within its families. This proposition no man who understands the divine constitution of the church can deny. And it is equally true that a child cannot be reasonably expected to become a strong and faithful member unless the doctrines of the church are in some way taught that child. The simple question then is: Which is the best method of teaching doctrine to childhood, by formula or by discourse and illustration? Without hesitation I say: By formula.

The doctrine must be defined, and the child must go over and over the definition again and again, and again—a thousand times it may be—until every word is driven and riveted in the mind, like a nail in a plank. This is the way the elements of all science and art are taught beginners, and the way, too, the Church of Rome, having learned wisdom from centuries, indoctrinates her children, and holds them so firmly to her communion of error and corruption.

Have we such definition of doctrine? Yes, in our Articles of Faith and our Wesleyan catechisms. But the Articles are too heavy for the infant mind, and the catechisms themselves are ill-suited for its use; for they also are too heavy for the smaller ones. Bishop Capers' catechisms, prepared for plantation use among the negroes, come nearer the infant and puerile capacity than any I know of. They are systematic in their arrangement, and pure and comprehensive in their statements; but they should be simplified somewhat, and more perfectly adapted to the mind of the little one.

Does not Our Little People, published by the Sunday school secretary, answer these ends? Does it not fill the very place that is vacant? No, it does not, nor can it fill that place, because it is an effort to keep the infant up with the larger scholars, which is simply a ridiculous impossibility. Our Little People is a very good child's paper, and the editor deserves the thanks of the entire church not only for this labor, but for all his other labors in this department. The paper may be distributed to the children in the hope of entertaining them with its pictures and simple stories, and with the hope also of affording practical instruction in the doctrines of the church. But to compass the point I am driving at it is a failure, and must continue to be a failure in the very nature of the case. Small children learn only what is frequently repeated, and repetition supposes very slow progress. But the method of instruction Our Little People is based upon is manifestly a method which supposes rapid progress. I say, therefore, for the accurate and permanent instruction of the mind of a child it is a failure, and must be so just as long as the idea prevails that every scholar must prepare a lesson on the same Bible subject, and the subject must change every week. To the uniform lesson system, as applied to the largest Sunday school scholars, I make no objection. On the contrary I give the plan my hearty indorsement. But when this system includes those scholars from ten years old downward it is absurd. The idea is full of sentiment, but utterly without common sense. All these should be in the catechisms, and it might be well and would be well if there was a uniform catechism lesson assigned for each Sunday, to be learned and recited through all the church. But we have no series suited to the different capacities of the children. Hence in nine-tenths of our Sunday schools there is at this time no distinct formula of Methodist doctrine taught. Under the present system our children are growing up with a general notion that they must be religious, but with the ruinous notion also that one form of dogma is as good as another, and one church is as good as another. What the result will be twenty years hence, who can tell?

If you publish this, next week I may find time to say a word or two on the second point made by Bro. Richardson. But to do it now would make this too long.

Truly yours, etc.,
J. W. RUSH.

Oregon Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: I have waited with some impatience for the copies of your excellent paper containing former articles, especially as they were written in haste and more or less bustle. I scarcely know where I left off. Your paper, in its topography, is as the face of an old and familiar friend; in its sentiment and spirit, as that friend's face wreathed in smiles, and breathing words that cheer and encourage. Well, the spirit and sentiment, after all, is the desideratum. The editor, rotund in physique, with a well-developed soul, breathing solid words of comfort—measured, earnest, unctuous—food for the hungry soul. Little Beverly, Bishop Keener and other familiar faces appear in the gallery, making it a thing of joy. Church news, locals, obituaries, all are relished. "Christmas Greetings" was timely and produced a pensive sadness in my soul, for I had just read the letter bearing the sad intelligence of the death of the one who sustained a relation to me peculiarly significant from all others—a father. O how lonely the world now seems! It brings me to confront death as never before. We rejoice that, full of years and full of faith, he has been gathered to the heavenly garner. What a blessed hope is ours! Who next? God help us be ready!

The more I see of this country, as I pass from point to point on my district, the more I am constrained to think it is without a parallel on the continent. The first time I saw Mounts Hood, Jefferson and the Three Sisters of the Cascade range, at one view, I stopped in the road and inadvertently exclaimed: "Magnificent! magnificent!" Lifting their snowy forms and crests far above the surrounding mountains, like immense columns of hoar-frost, bathed in the golden sheen of the sun, the picture was one of superlative grandeur.

The rivers and brooks are clear, swift-running and very deceiving as to depth, and abound in fish of various kinds. Those immediately tributary to the ocean are alive with salmon, which is a vast resource of wealth. Some rivers, as the Willamette at Oregon City, are fenced with falls as a wall thirty feet high, preventing the fish ascending. These falls are some thirty miles from the confluence of the Willamette with the Columbia. Fish are cheap. The mountain trout abounds in the brooks and streams in the adjacent mountains.

Game also abounds—deer, elk and bear in the more remote and sequestered parts. Ducks, geese and brant in the greatest profusion, surpassing, if possible, the Norfolk supply of which our good Bishop so amusingly speaks. The quail is a beautiful bird, with feathery top-not, resembling the partridge, only larger. The prairie hen, grouse and pheasant are fine birds and abound in many localities.

The domestic animals and fowls flourish and are raised in great perfection. The horse—that noble animal—is here in great perfection. A No. 1 horse commands $100 to $125 in gold (that is our currency.) Cattle, sheep and hogs all do well. Sheep-raising in many parts of the State is carried on extensively, and yields from thirty to fifty per cent. on the capital invested where it receives close attention. So I am credibly informed.

The face of the valley is for the most part level, with undulations, and foot-hills occasionally break down into the valley; and sometimes a solitary butte (small rut) sits as a silent and solitary sentinel in the valley, or a long ridge of several miles, fertile and productive, as a slug of mud left lying in the valley during the period when the "waters were separated from the dry land," or some subsequent and occult force of nature transformed the face of the earth. Geologists have an interesting field for study and investigation here. No doubt many wonderful conformations they cannot explain, that do not "harmonize" with "theory," and therefore cosmogony is a conglomeration of contrarieties, refuting Mosaic history. What sophistry! Vain man would measure arms with the Omnific! "In six days God created the heavens, earth and sea, and all that in them is." How simple! The "heavens"—atmosphere, sun, moon and stars, with their satellites; "earth and sea," with all their fossils, fishes and fowls, strata, diversified formations and multifarious combinations; animals, carnivorous and herbivorous; bipeds and quadrupeds—men, monkeys and tadpoles—were created (made, not developed) by the fiat of Omnipotence, who "spake and it was done, who commanded and it stood fast!" "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of kings!"

Affectionately, T. B. WHITE.

CORVALLIS, OREGON, February 2, 1874.

BEREAVED.—The following note from Bro. Williams will stir a chord of sympathy in the hearts of his many friends in Louisiana. May God bless and sustain our brother and sister in this sorrow.

REV. DR. PARKER—Dear Bro.: Feeling that many of our Louisiana friends would give us their sympathy and prayers, I write this to say that our little babe, ALMARINE WESLEY, departed this life on the seventh instant, after less than a week's illness. He had grown to be in good health, and our hearts were much set on raising him. In this we have been suddenly disappointed. The Lord hath touched us in a tender place. It is the Lord's hand, however, and we are trying to be submissive. Pray for us.

Very respectfully, etc.,
AMICUS W. WILLIAMS.

HEARDMONT, ELBERT CO., GA., Feb. 12, 1874.

THE revival begun by Mr. Hammond in St. Louis several weeks since, says the Northwestern Christian Advocate, continues with much force. In Cincinnati, too, a great revival work is in progress. The Herald and Presbyter says of it: "One aspect of the interest in the city is especially noteworthy. The Friends are actively engaged. In the Friends' meeting-house, corner Ninth and Plum streets, meetings have been held daily for some weeks past. People of all denominations have joined in them, and the services have been led by ministers and laymen of the Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist, Baptist and other churches. So far as appears, no difference exists between the Friends, in these meetings, and any others who worship there. All join in singing, prayer, and many are forward in exhortation and expounding the Scriptures. It is plainly the Holy Spirit's work."

THE BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.—The Staunton (Virginia) Spectator says: "According to appointment the annual session of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will be held in the Methodist church of this city, commencing on Wednesday, the fourth of March proximo. The members of that church in this city have secured comfortable and pleasant accommodations for the numerous members of that clerical body, who will have no reason to complain of the hospitality of Staunton, unless it be that they suffer from repletion, and charge it to the bountiful and tempting fare provided for them, rather than to their want of ability to resist partaking to excess of such appetizing viands."

As It Should Be.

A brother who promised us, at Conference, twenty-five new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, sends along some of them and says the balance will be forthcoming. He says: "I am doing all in my power for the ADVOCATE. Its influence in my charge is marked. I must and will have it among my people." Another brother informs us that every Methodist family in his work receives the ADVOCATE regularly. These are specimen instances which come to the editor's knowledge. The publisher doubtless could furnish many like them. We wish, however, that all of our pastors could report that their people all take the paper. There are many who would be better Christians and more active church members if they were regular subscribers and readers of a church paper. We like the brother's spirit who writes concerning the ADVOCATE: "I must and will have it among my people." This sort of determination is not likely to fail. Preachers who put the ADVOCATE in the hands of their people not only do well for the cause of Christ, but they are doing well for the pastorate and all the interests of the church.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINE YEARS OLD.—Rev. G. M. Liverman, Floyd, Louisiana, writes as follows of the death of a Methodist lady who had attained to this extraordinary age:

MRS. SUSAN MOORE died near Floyd, Louisiana, on the ninth of December last, at the ripe old age of one hundred and nine years, two months and two days. Doubtless thus passed away the oldest Methodist in Louisiana. She was born near Charleston, South Carolina, in 1764; landed at Rodney in 1808, then an entire French settlement and under the rule of Catholicism. They moved back and settled in Franklin parish, where the subject of this memoir united with the Methodist Church, of which she lived a member the remainder of life. She was married three times. One daughter, Mrs. Cannings, is still living. Sister Moore frequently remarked to her daughter that she believed her constitution would entirely wear out her body. She retained her usual strength of voice till the last. She died as she had lived—in the faith. Her prospects were bright, death having no terror.

Much more could be said in reference to the life and triumphant exit of our dear old mother in Israel, as her life fills a prominent page in the history of this country; yet it is enough. She died in the faith, and "if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so also them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." What a comment: "Died in the faith!"

A LARGE COMPANY of friends were present at the Carondelet Street church, New Orleans, on Thursday, the nineteenth, to witness the marriage of Mr. Matthew McClaugherty, of Nashville, to Miss Sallie Bartell, second daughter of Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D. The ceremony was performed most beautifully and impressively by the bride's father. Miss Sallie and the fortunate husband have our hearty congratulations. May their lives be long and happy; with every blessing may they be blessed. Mr. McClaugherty and his bride left for Nashville on the day of their marriage, and Dr. Walker left for Galveston on Friday, the twentieth instant.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH and wife and Rev. Thomas B. Sargent, D. D., left New Orleans for Louisville, on the steamboat Thompson Dean, on Tuesday evening last, February 24. Their brief sojourn in New Orleans has been exceedingly gratifying to our people, and they will be always welcome to New Orleans. They left in good health, and we trust they may have a safe and pleasant trip. The Bishop and Dr. Sargent both preached twice on Sunday to large and interested congregations.

WE HAVE RECEIVED a copy of the Minutes of the Alabama Conference held at Selma, December 3-9, 1873. It is a very handsomely printed pamphlet, and well edited, containing the Conference proceedings and reports of committees, besides other important information. We hope the members of our church in the bounds of the Alabama Conference will be supplied with this valuable pamphlet.

To the Louisiana Conference.

Conference, by resolution, directed the preachers to take a collection for expense of delegates to General Conference during the month of March and to forward the same to R. J. Harp, New Orleans.

OUR MEXICAN LETTER will be found on the second page. Bro. Daves' many friends and the church at large will be gratified to hear from him and from his work in that interesting country.

AS THE eye which has gazed at the sun cannot immediately discern any other object, as the man who has been accustomed to behold the ocean turns with contempt from a stagnant pool, so the mind which has contemplated eternity overlooks and despises the things of time.

FRANKLIN, LOUISIANA.—Rev. J. W. Mediock, recently appointed to the Franklin station, has met with a cordial reception by his people. Writing under date of February 20, he says:

I have been here now nearly two weeks; for two or three days have been living in the new parsonage. It is really a nice little house—does much credit to Bro. Williams' industry, and the enterprise and liberality of the brethren here. It was rushed to completion immediately upon the new appointment for the year, and for its present comfortable condition we are much indebted to the zeal and liberality of our brother, Wilson McKerall.

We have met a good reception here. There are many kind-hearted, spiritually consecrated ladies here, who seem bent on making the preacher comfortable; and you know how valuable such assistance as this is to a preacher. Here is a great field for pastoral labor, and I pray that I may have wisdom and fidelity to push forward every good work connected with my office.

THE resident minister of the United States at Bogota, Mr. Scruggs, while in the presence of a religious procession which was passing, refused to take off his hat, and thus became exposed to insulting treatment by some boys in the crowd, who regarded Mr. Scruggs' refusal as a deliberate insult to the religion of the people.

MARRIED.

GILDER—TARTT.—By the Rev. J. M. Crews, on the fourth of December, 1873, at Bladou Springs, Alabama, Mr. D. L. Gilder to Miss Maggie Tartt.

HALL—HALL.—At the residence of the bride's father, January 13, 1874, by Rev. Ira B. Robertson, Mr. John C. Hall to Miss Martha A. Hall, all of Warren county, Mississippi.

BURGE—HOWIE.—At the residence of the bride's father, January 14, 1874, by Rev. Ira B. Robertson, Mr. James E. Burge, of Warren county, Mississippi, to Miss Ella Bowie, of Yazoo county, Mississippi.

HOLLOMAN—CURTIS.—At the late residence of the bride's father, John McKee, of Satartia, Mississippi, January 21, 1874, by Rev. Ira B. Robertson, Mr. Thomas R. Holloman to Mrs. Amanda Curtis.

PUGH—McKEE.—At the same time and place, and by the same, Mr. John Pugh, formerly of St. Louis, Missouri, now of Satartia, Mississippi, to Miss Belle McKee, all of Yazoo county, Mississippi.

BROWN—PHELPS.—At the residence of Mr. Robert J. Elliott, of East Baton Rouge parish, Louisiana, January 14, 1874, by the Rev. N. B. Young, Mr. Wiley Brown to Miss S. E. Phelps.

ASHFORD—BROWNING.—By the Rev. N. B. Young, on the fifteenth of January, 1874, at the residence of the bride's mother, in East Baton Rouge parish, Louisiana, Mr. C. C. Ashford to Miss Martha A. Browning.

MACKAY—BENNETT.—At the residence of Henry F. Bennett, Esq., on Bayou Manchac, Ascension parish, Louisiana, on the evening of January 15, 1874, by the Rev. N. B. Young, Mr. Frederick Mackay to Miss Georgiana C. Bennett.

BROWN—WEBB.—By the same, at the same time and place, Mr. Charles C. Brown to Miss Lilla Webb.

OODIN—COLLINS.—In Jackson, Mississippi, February 2, 1874, by Rev. Charles B. Galloway, Mr. R. S. Goodin and Miss Missouri Collins.

HOLLOMAN—HOLLIDAY.—At the residence of the bride's father, near Canton, Mississippi, February 5, 1874, by Rev. Charles B. Galloway, Rev. Thomas B. Holloman, of the Mississippi Conference, and Miss Mollie L. Holliday.

HENRY—COCKE.—On Tuesday evening, February 10, 1874, at the residence of Captain J. T. B. Cocke, the bride's father, by Rev. W. H. Leith, Major Patrick Henry to Miss Margie L. Cocke, all of Brandon, Mississippi.

SEE THE advertisement of Messrs. Sherman & White, practical gilders, 106 Customhouse street. Oil paintings restored, relined, cleaned and varnished. Looking-glass and picture frames made to order, etc.

FINE WATCHES AND JEWELRY.—Those who may wish to purchase anything in the above line cannot do better than apply to the well-known and reliable establishment of E. A. Tyler, 9 Canal street.

BRILLIANT SUCCESS.—It is permitted to few men or companies to achieve acknowledged superiority in any important position or business. The present generation has witnessed stupendous rivalry in several branches of industry; and notably the sewing machine business. Amid a multitude of competitors, steadily and surely the Wheeler & Wilson Company claim to have held their way, from the beginning, upon fixed and honorable principles. A leading position in America was long since established. Abroad, at London in 1862, we are assured, they won the highest premiums; at Paris, in 1867, and that they distanced eighty-two competitors, and were awarded the highest premium, the only gold medal for sewing machines exhibited; and lastly that, amid unparalleled competition, followed the splendid triumphs at Vienna, noted in our advertising columns.

ENTERPRISE OF OUR UP-TOWN MERCHANTS.—Quite a number of the establishments in the upper portion of the city compare favorably with the most successful and thrifty of those in the central portion. Among others that might be mentioned we call special attention to the Blue Boot and Shoe store of Mr. Louis Gimble, No. 578 Magazine street, who not only keeps an elegant assortment of boots, shoes, hats and trunks, but manufactures to order, guaranteeing satisfaction. We advise our readers in that vicinity to give Mr. Gimble an early call.

MERCHANTS' LINE OF STEAMSHIPS.—We call the attention of travelers and shippers to the advertisement of the fine line of swift, staunch and commodious steamers under the above name, making weekly trips to New York, consisting of the General Meade, Western Metropolis, Emily B. Souder, Mississippi and United States. The Western Metropolis will sail on the first and the Mississippi on the seventh proximo. For further information call at the office of the obliging agent, John H. Ludwigsen, No. 190 Common street.

NEW ORLEANS PURCHASING BUREAU.—As will be observed, in the advertisement in another column, Mrs. H. Mogridge continues her purchasing agency at Nos. 94 and 96 Canal street, to which address orders for any article of apparel or adornment for ladies' and children's use may be sent and receive prompt attention. Mrs. Mogridge desires to serve parties residing at a distance, and gives her personal attention to the commissions intrusted to her.

CYPRESS SHINGLES AND WOOD.—We take pleasure in calling attention to the extensive lumber and wood yards of Messrs. Muncy & Marcy, No. 424 and 426 Delord street. These gentlemen deal also in slates and shingles, the latter being a specialty. They are also agents for the Amite river steamer, Alice and the Pensacola packet Amite. We commend their advertisement, in another column, to favorable attention.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.—We commend to the favorable attention of our readers the advertisement of our worthy neighbor, I. L. Lyons, corner of Camp and Gravier streets, importer and dealer in drugs and medicines. Mr. Lyons is successor of the well-known firm of Ball & Lyons. His assortment is large, his stock fresh, and we feel safe in recommending the house as one that can be relied on for pure drugs.

A CONVENIENCE TO COUNTRY PRODUCERS.—Mr. A. Meynier, Jr., No. 55 Peters street, near Bienville, advertises to take on commission consignments of chickens, eggs and all other country produce, which will certainly be a great convenience to those who are not in condition to sell their own produce. Please see his advertisement in another column, or write him to the above address.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—It will be gratifying to our readers in the neighborhood of Dryades Market to know that at the well-assorted establishment of Mr. James Simpson, No. 423 Dryades street, they may obtain gentlemen's, ladies' and children's boots and shoes of the very best manufacture, or have them made to order and guaranteed. See his advertisement elsewhere.

THE ATTENTION of our readers is called to the card ("To the Public") of John Bois, who, at the long-established stand, No. 291 Camp street, corner of Calliope, continues to buy, sell, store, remove, pack and repair furniture of every description. Pictures and looking glasses framed. Mr. Bois will be found to be always prompt and reliable.

IT WILL be noticed from the advertisement elsewhere that Mr. Jacob Detzel, proprietor of the Magnolia House, No. 95 St. Charles street, is prepared to furnish his patrons with all the delicacies of the season at very low prices. The Magnolia House will be found to be a quiet and good restaurant.

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY AND DRESSMAKING.—Mrs. Rogers, at No. 450 Dryades street, having comparatively little rent to pay, is prepared to perform all work intrusted to her at low prices and in an artistic manner. Bonnets cleaned, dyed and remodeled.

CINCHO-QUININE.—Messrs. Billings, Clapp & Co., chemists, Boston, Massachusetts, are the proprietors of Cincho-Quinine, used in fever and ague cases, and will furnish a descriptive circular on application.

COAL.—There are no more honorable and worthy dealers in any branch of business than our friends, Messrs. H. & C. Tyler, No. 9 Carondelet street.

THE genuine Halford Leicestershire Table Sauce, now so generally in use in families, can be obtained of all good grocers. We have but to try a single bottle to become its reference. It is the cheapest, at the same time that it is the best. fe5 4t

Splendid and Unparalleled

TRIUMPHS

OF THE

WHEELER & WILSON

Sewing Machine Co.,

NEW YORK,

OVER EIGHTY-ONE COMPETITORS,

AT THE

World's Exposition, Vienna, 1873,

ETC., ETC.

1. The Knight's Cross of the Imperial Order of "Francis Joseph," conferred by his apostolic majesty the Emperor of Austria upon the Hon. Nathaniel Wheeler, President of the Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine Company, as the founder and builder of Sewing Machine industry.

2. The Grand Diploma of Honor, recommended by the International Jury for this Sewing Machine Company only, for their important contributions to the material and social welfare of mankind.

3. The Grand Medal for Progress, awarded for their New No. 6 Sewing Machine, being for progress made since the Paris Exposition of 1867, at which the only Gold Medal for Sewing Machines was awarded to this Company. Hence the Vienna award marks progress not from a low level or inferior medal, but from a Gold Medal, the highest award made at Paris.

4. The Grand Medal for Merit, for the development of needle industry, and excellence and superiority of manufactured samples exhibited.

5. A Grand Medal for Merit, for excellence and superiority of cabinet work, the only award of the kind in this section.

6. Medals for Several Co-Operators of the Wheeler & Wilson Company for superior ability.

7. The Official Report, published by the General Direction of the Vienna Exposition, signalizes the supremacy of the Wheeler & Wilson Company for quantity and quality of manufacture, and position in the Sewing Machine business, as follows:

OFFICIAL REPORT, VIENNA EXPOSITION, SEWING MACHINES, ETC.

(GROUP 13, SEC. 2, B.)

"The greatest Sewing Machine Manufactory in the world is that of Wheeler & Wilson, New York, which alone has brought already over nine hundred thousand of their Sewing Machines into practical use. The complete production of the parts by machinery is so regulated that each complete machine may be used as a sample for exhibition. This firm produces six hundred well-adjusted machines daily.

"The latest production of this firm, and which is the wonder of the Vienna Exposition, is their New No. 6 Sewing Machine. This universal machine sews the heaviest leather harness and the finest gauzes with a truly pearl stitch.

"Wheeler & Wilson have received the highest prizes at all World's Expositions, and at the Vienna Exposition were extraordinarily distinguished."

Further Distinguished Honors.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15, 1873.

THE GRAND MEDAL OF HONOR

OF THE

AMERICAN INSTITUTE, NEW YORK,

Was unanimously recommended by the Judges of Sewing Machines for

WHEELER & WILSON'S

NEW NO. 6 SEWING MACHINE

as being "a decided improvement over all other machines in the market," and which, "must revolutionize certain branches of industry, especially in Shoe and Harness Manufacturing."

"BALTIMORE, MD., October 31, 1873.

"The Maryland Institute has awarded WHEELER & WILSON the GOLD MEDAL for their New No. 6 Sewing Machine. Other Sewing Machines received nothing."

"SAVANNAH, November 4, 1873.

"At the Georgia State Fair a SILVER MEDAL, the highest and only premium for Leather Stitching, was awarded to WHEELER & WILSON for samples done on their New No. 6 Sewing Machines."

BRODIE'S ASTRINGENT CORDIAL.

THIS MEDICINE, FOR THE CURE OF

DIARRHEA, FLUX, CHOLERA

and all diseases of the Bowels, is without exception the most valuable and indispensable remedy known, being so mild in its action that it can be given to Infants with impunity, and yet so certain in its effect that it controls the most acute attacks. For Infants its use is recommended in preference to the death-dealing "Soothing Sirups," etc. No household should be without it.

LOCOCK'S COUGH ELIXIR.

A preparation invaluable to persons suffering from

Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all Pulmonary affections. It is specially adapted to the relief of Hoarseness, and all diseases of the Throat caused by excessive use of the voice. It can be administered with perfect safety to infants, and is really the only known alleviator in Whooping Cough.

Ball & Lyons' Cod Liver Oil and Lacto-Phosphate of Lime,

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION,

Scrofulous and Tuberculous affections, Rickets and all complaints characterized by deficient nutrition. In this preparation the disagreeable taste and odor of the oil is completely masked, and the Lime, instead of being presented to the stomach in an indigestible and inert form, as in the old preparation of oil and phosphate of lime, is here held in solution and is readily assimilated. Given to delicate and puny infants and children, its use is soon followed by marked improvement. This combination was suggested to us by a number of our prominent physicians, and has been perfected only after long-continued labor and experiment.

Abrams' Compound Arnica Liniment.

This popular preparation well merits the reputation it enjoys. It is Unrivaled as a Rubefacient, and is employed with success in Cholera and Cholera Morbus, in which cases the extremities should be rubbed with it, and it should be used as a compress on the abdomen. Applied by rubbing, or in compress around the head, it is a sovereign remedy for Neuralgia and Sick Headache. In Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Cramps, Colic, Pain in the Back, Sprains, Bruises, and all cases where external remedies are applicable, it is very successfully used. It is equally good for man or beast, and can be given to animals internally for Colic or Cholera. All families should keep it on hand.

THE GREATEST

MEDICAL

DISCOVERY

OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, HAS discovered in one of our common pasture-weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

FROM

The Worst Scrofula Down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder-humor.) He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of Pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of boils.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst Canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all Humor in the Eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the Ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running Ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of Rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of Scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

ROXBURY, MASS.

DEAR MADAM: The reputation of the Medical Discovery in curing all kinds of Humors is so well established, by the unanimous voice of all who have ever used it, that I need not say anything on the subject, as the most skillful physicians and the most careful druggists in the country are unanimous in its praise.

In presenting the Medical Discovery to your notice, I do it with a full knowledge of its curative power in relieving all, and curing most of those diseases to which you are unfortunately so liable. That most excruciating disease to an affectionate mother,

Nursing Sore Mouth,

is cured as if by a miracle. Your own temper is restored to its natural sweetness, and your babe from a short and fretful nap to calm and sweet slumbers; and the Medical Discovery becomes a PAYING HER WAY.

BY KATE WOODLAND.

What has my darling been doing to-day
To pay for her wasning and mending?
How can she manage to keep out of debt
For so much caressing and tending?
How can I wait till the years shall have flown,
And the hands have grown larger and strouger?
Who will be able the interest to pay
If the debt runs many years longer?

Dear little feet! How they fly to my side!
White arms my neck are caressing;
Sweetest of kisses are laid on my cheek;
Fair head my shoulder is pressing.
Nothing at all from my darling is due—
From evil may angels defend her—
The debt is discharged as fast as 'tis made,
For love is a legal tender!

Palissy, the Potter.

BY ANTOINETTE C. M'LEAN.

Once upon a time there lived a man who tried to do something he knew nothing about. I dare say my little boys and girls have many times found it hard work to do things which they knew very well about. Then, if you were told you must go to work and make a cup and saucer like the one you drank your coffee from this morning, what would you do? You would say you could do nothing without a teacher. But who taught the first man? Some one studied it out at first; and if all the potters in the world should die at once some one might study it out again.

Palissy had no teacher. He had to put different kiuds of clay together, by way of a trial, then put them in the oven, build a hot fire aud bake them, and when they were cool look at them to see if they were chauged. This he dld not once or twice, but over and over again, for years and years; but still every time there came out nothing but the same brown ware such as he had always made.

It was a wonder he did not stop, for he had a wife and children; and sometimes he spent so mucb time and money trying to make white enamel that they nearly starved.

"One more trial," be would say, "and I will find the wonderful secret; then they shall have all they need." But the "oue time more" sometimes took him away into the night, wheu, weary and sorrowful, he would creep iuto bed, only to find his wife awake, and ready with a good scolding for all his "folly," as she called it; for she seemed to think all the sorrow was hers, aud he brought it.

Poor Palissy would then think his wife was more than half right; he would leave off working to fiud out the secret of white enamel, and go to painting on glass until they were all comfortable again. But just as they thought he would never again think of the white enamel he would go to work at it again.

Thus things went on for many years, until Pallssy was about fifty years old, and still he sought for the wonderful secret, which as yet he could not find. The neighbors at last said he was crazy; and one night his wife and children thought if he had never been crazy before he had become so at last. For six days and nights he had watched beside his oven; and yet he needed more heat, and his fuel and money were gone. Then he rushed into the house, tore up his floors, broke up his chairs, and put them in the fire. Do you wonder that his wife screamed and scolded and cried, and ran for the neighbors to tie him up for a madman?

But the next morning, oh, joy of joys! like a little angel of peace and love, there stood in the oven his dish, covered with the loug-sought-for enamel! No longer brown, but white and shining! Do you not think he was glad? Yet even then it was ten long years before he had so brought out the beauty of his wares—white and colored—as to bring him fame or fortune. Then, indeed, a great and rich nobleman gave him an order for making enamel tiles for the floor of his palace, and gave him plenty of money for all his materials and to pay him for his labor.

Now, you may be sure, there were glad times in the house of poor Palissy, a plenty to eat and drink, and no need any longer for Madam Palissy to scold; so we will hope she now saw that her husband was right to keep trying, in spite of his many disappointments and the trouble they all had shared.—Little Corporal.

The Child's Pocket Etiquette.

1. Always say: Yes, sir; no, sir; yes, papa; no, thank you; good-night; good-morning. Never say "how" or "which" for what. Use no slang terms. Remember that good spelling, writing and grammar are the base of all true education.

2. Clean faces, clean clothes, clean shoes and clean finger-nails indicate good breeding. Never leave your clothes about the room. Have a place for everything, and everything in its place.

3. Rap before entering a room; leave it with your face to the company. Never enter a private room or public place with your hat on.

4. Always offer your seat to a lady or old gentleman. Let your companions enter the carriage or room first.

5. At the table eat with your fork; sit up straight; never use your tooth-pick, although Europeans do; and when leaving, ask to be excused.

6. Never put your feet on cushions, chairs or tables.

7. Never overlook any one when reading or writing, or talk or read aloud when others are reading. When conversing, listen attentively and do not interrupt or reply till the other has finished.

8. Never whisper or talk aloud at churches or other public places, and especially in private where any one is singing or playing the piano.

9. Long coughing, hawking, yawning, sneezing or blowing is ill mannered. In every case cover your mouth with your handkerchief (which never examine—nothing is more vulgar except spitting on the floor.)

10. Treat all with respect, especially the poor. Be careful to injure no one's feelings by unkind remarks. Never tell tales, make faces, call names, ridicule the lame, mimic the unfortunate, or be cruel to insects, birds or animals.

THE ONE CATERPILLAR.—While I was walking in the garden one bright morning a breeze came through and set all the flowers and leaves a-fluttering. Now that is the way flowers talk, so I pricked up my ears and listened. Presently an old elder-tree said: "Flowers, shake off your caterpillars." "Why?" said a dozen altogether, for they were like some children who always say "why?" when they are told to do anything. Bad children, those! The elder said: "If you don't they'll gobble you up." So the flowers set themselves a-shaking till the caterpillars were shaken off. In one of the middle beds there was a beautiful rose, who shook off all but one, and she said to herself: "Oh! that's a beauty! I'll keep that one." The elder overheard her, and called out: "One caterpillar is enough to spoil you." "But," said the rose, "look at his brown and crimson fur, and his beautiful black eyes, and scores of little feet. I want to keep him. Surely one won't hurt me." A few mornings after I passed the rose again. There was not a whole leaf on her; her beauty was gone, she was all but killed, and had only life enough to weep over her folly, while the tears stood like dew-drops on her tattered leaves. "Alas! I didn't think one caterpillar would ruin me!" One sin has ruined many.

IF YOU lived in South America, instead of keeping chickens you might have a few turtles in your back yard to furnish you not only eggs, but butter and oil, and sausage and steak, and a variety of roasts, stews and soups. The great tartaruga, which measures three feet in length and two in breadth, is often kept for family use. The people have little ponds in their yards for their accommodation; and in the laying season these creatures dig holes in the ground at night, in which they lay from one to two hundred eggs between midnight and morning. The eggs are as large as a hen's eggs, and are eaten both raw and cooked. They are made into butter in a way which we should hardly fancy. The natives put them in a canoe, stamp them fine with their feet, and then by pouring on water and exposing them to the heat of the sun the oil is brought to the surface. Afterward this is skimmed off and purified by heating in a copper kettle. I am afraid you would not quite like the flavor, but the Indians think it a great delicacy.—Little Corporal.

Farm, Garden and Household.

GRAPES AND THEIR CULTURE.—It is surprising that so many families in the country are willing to live year after year without cultivating a single grape-vine about their dwellings. They are compelled to purchase this delicious fruit for the table or not taste it during the season. There is a common impression that to cultivate grapes perfectly a vast amount of knowledge and tact is required. To many the simple trimming of a vine is a mystery. This is an erroneous view and ought not to prevail. Any person of common intelligence can learn in an hour how to trim and nourish vines; and if instruction cannot be obtained from some experienced cultivator, there are books filled with cuts and illustrations which make everything plain. Three vines of as many different varieties, planted in some sunny nook, or by the side of some building so as to obtain shelter, will, if properly cared for, furnish many a bushel of delicious grapes every year. Select a Concord, Ives' seedling and a Herbemont. Make the ground mellow and rich by the use of a spade, and by employing old manure, finely ground bones and ashes, and set out the plants. In three years the rich clusters will appear, and in four years the product will be abundant. It is well to have vines planted so that the waste liquids from the dwellings can be used in fertilization. If there is any food the vine especially loves, it is the soapy liquids which accumulate on washing days in families. Vines drenched every week with these liquids will flourish astonishingly, and extend themselves so as to cover large buildings, every branch bearing fruit. We say to our readers: Plant vines.—Science of Health.

MANAGEMENT OF CHICKENS.—Early chickenhood is the time when poultry-breeders should assist nature in developing the size and growth of fowls. In it the frame of the future bird is molded, its size increased or its growth retarded, just in proportion to the degree of care and attention then bestowed. Whatever be the object sought in raising chickens, size, with very few exceptions, is one of the principal points looked for; and this can only be obtained to a degree of perfection by the proper treatment of chickens from the time they are hatched until they arrive at maturity. Feed well, feed often, and keep the chicken-pen clean, are golden rules which should be emblazoned on every chicken-coop in the poultry-yard.

CURES ALL KINDS OF CATARRH.

So successful has Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery proven as a constitutional treatment for Catarrh, when coupled with the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, applied locally by the use of Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche (the only method of reaching the upper and back cavities of the head,) that the proprietor of these medicines has long offered a standing reward of $500 for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure. The two medicines, with instrument, for $2 by druggists.

A SPECIMEN OUT OF THOUSANDS.

CORTLAND, ILL., April 28, 1873.

DR. PIERCE, BUFFALO, N. Y.—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure I make this statement to you: that, after taking medicine for twenty years for Catarrh, I tried your Catarrh Remedy and effected a cure, so that it has not troubled me for two years.

S. WHEELER.

STEALING OUR THUNDER.

People should beware of those impostors who copy Dr. Pierce's original style of advertising by offering various-sized rewards for cases of Catarrh and other diseases which they cannot cure. Those who do not possess sufficient intelligence to write an original advertisement are not likely to have made great and valuable discoveries in medicine.—

COTTON FACTORS,

NO. 79 CARONDELET STREET,

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The undersigned, having been elected by the Mississippi State Grange as their Purchasing Agents and Cotton Factors for this port, would respectfully inform the Granges of the States who deal in this market that we will take pleasure in serving their interests to the best of our ability. Our terms of business are the same as those of your Agency in the city of Memphis.

Parties desiring to purchase in this market can do so, when cotton is in hand, with from thirty to sixty days' indulgence.

We are endeavoring, in Sugars, Molasses, Rice and Coffee, to control the patronage of the Western States, which will give us unusual advantages in this market.

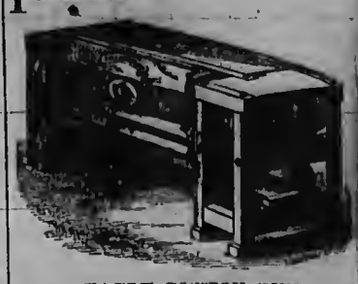
MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

IMPROVED



EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

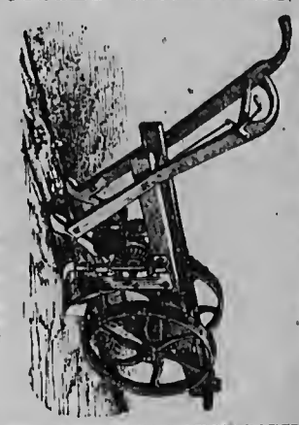
JUSTLY CELEBRATED.

THE DIAMOND COTTON



THE GREATEST LABOR-SAVER of the AGE; with ONE MAN and ONE HORSE does the work of from SIX to TWELVE men and from TWO to FOUR horses. It CHOPS and RAKES both sides, WEEDS and DIRTS the cotton at one operation. After which it is converted into an excellent CULTIVATOR, for use between the rows throughout the season. This machine has been tested upon a growing crop, and proves in a thorough practical SUCCESS. It bears the highest TESTIMONIALS from our best cotton planters. It will soon become as indispensable to the cotton plant as the cotton gin or press. It has taken the grand sweepstakes prize, the GOLD MEDAL at the Georgia State Fair as the latest and most valuable improvement in agricultural implements, and first premium wherever it has been exhibited. Active and reliable AGENTS are wanted in every town and county, to whom a liberal discount will be made. Applications for agencies should be made without delay. Retail price of machine with attachments, $35 and freight. A most excellent COTTON PLANTER and GUANO DISTRIBUTOR has been added to the machine. Price $5 extra. COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twentieth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales...	18,570
Lake		82
Arkansas		1,503
Tennessee		2,712
Mobile		2,487
Texas		245
Total		25,599

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but mostly at prices below the views of factors, and later in the day, although the movement was more active, it continued restricted by the same cause, several lists remaining unsold at the close, factors holding ¼@⅜c. above the offers of buyers, while in the actual sales the latter obtained the concessions they demanded. In some cases offers were accepted ⅛@¼c. below the rates realized on Friday; in others there was only a slight variation or none at all. At the same time several factors asked ⅛@¼c. above the quotations. The sales embraced 8,650 bales. Ordinary sold at 11c., strict ordinary at 12c., strict ordinary to good ordinary at 13c., good ordinary at 13¼c., good ordinary to strict good ordinary at 13¾c., strict good ordinary at 14@14¼c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 14¼@14⅝c., low middling at 14⅝@15c., the former for good style, and the latter for very high style, and strict low middling to middling at 15 11-16c. On Monday we noticed a fair inquiry at the opening, but mostly at prices below the views of factors, who, under light receipts and the expectation of a further falling off, assumed increased confidence, and adhered firmly to their previous pretensions. The sales were confined to 3,300 bales. On Tuesday the demand was fair, but the movement was checked by buyers claiming concessions which most factors were unwilling to admit. The sales embraced 6,000 bales at prices requiring an advance of ⅛c. in the inside quotations for low ordinary, ordinary and strict ordinary, and a reduction of ⅛c. in the outside figures for the better qualities.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 18,350 bales, against 17,000 for the corresponding time last week and 7,059 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 867,267 bales, against 853,862 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 318,832 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 7,019 to Great Britain, and of 70,440 to France, and a decrease of 9,539 to other foreign ports. PROSPECTUS

OF THE

General Conference Daily Advocate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, D. D., EDITOR.
A. H. REDFORD, AGENT, PUBLISHER.

PRICE, $1.

A daily paper will be published during the session of the General Conference, which convenes in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the first day of May next. This paper will contain an account of the Proceedings of the Conference, including the Pastoral Address of the Bishops, the various questions that may come before the body, the Reports of Committees, the Speeches and Debates, together with all the plans that may be proposed and adopted for the extension of the Kingdom of the Redeemer in the world.

A brief outline of the lives of the Bishops will be published in the DAILY; also a Pen-and-Ink Sketch of the Members, both lay and clerical, who compose the General Conference.

The next General Conference will be invested with an importance scarcely equaled in any similar body in American Methodism. Questions of the greatest moment and highest interest will come before the body, and be discussed by the masterminds of the church—questions in which every Methodist will feel the liveliest concern.

The DAILY will be a handsome sheet of four pages, of good size, printed on good paper, and in clear type; and neither labor nor expense will be spared to make it all that the church may desire.

The services of a competent reporter have been secured, and the subscribers may rely on receiving the earliest intelligence of the deliberations of the Conference through the Daily.

The Christian Advocate.
